

John Maynard.

Library of the Theological Seminary.

PRINCETON, N. J.

Stuart Fund

Division...

SCC

Section

211

THE WORKS
OF THE
REV. P. DODDRIDGE, D. D.

VOLUME IX.

THE
FAMILY EXPOSITOR:
CONTAINING A PARAPHRASE ON THE REMAINING PART
OF THE
FIRST EPISTLE OF ST. PAUL TO THE CORINTHIANS,

II. CORINTHIANS,
GALATIANS,
EPHESIANS,
PHILIPPIANS,

COLOSSIANS,
I. THESSALONIANS,
II. THESSALONIANS,
I. TIMOTHY.

AMA SCRIPTURAS SANCTAS, & AMABIT TE SAPIENTIA.—HERON.

LEEDS:

PRINTED BY EDWARD BAINES,

FOR THE EDITORS; CONDER, BUCKLESBURY; BUTTON, PATERNOSTER-RROW; WILLIAM STATIONERS-COURT; BAYNES, PATERNOSTER-RROW; OGLE, GREAT-TURN-BYLE; NUNN, QUEEN-STREE; AND JONES, PATERNOSTER-RROW. LONDON; AND FOR ROBINS AND DEWHIRST, LEEDS; COLEBERT, DUBLIN; WILSON AND SPENCE, YORK; OGLE AND ATKMAN, EDINBURGH;
M. GLE, GLASGOW, CROOKES, ROTHERHAM; AND ABEL, NORTHAMPTON.

THE
FAMILY EXPOSITOR.

A
PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON THE REMAINING PART OF THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

SECT. XII.

The Apostle proceeds to answer certain questions which the Corinthians had put to him: and first, what related to the marriage-state; and in these introductory verses, he determines that in some circumstances it should be entered into, and continued in, but in others, forborne; and forbids wives to depart from their husbands. 1 Cor. VII.—1—11.

1 COR. VII. 1.

NOW concerning the things wherof ye wrote unto me: It is good for a man not to touch a woman.

2 Nevertheless, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband.

1 CORINTHIANS VII. 1.

I NOW proceed to give you my opinion concerning those things about which you wrote to me. And I begin with that concerning the lawfulness or expedience of marriage. And here I must first observe, that as to its expedience, [it is] in present circumstances good for a man, where he is entirely master of himself, to have nothing to do with a woman; so many are the conveniences which recommend a single life to those who are proof against some of its most obvious temptations. Nevertheless, as the God of nature has for certain wise reasons implanted in the sexes a mutual inclination to each other, in order to prevent fornication, and every other species of uncleanness, let every man have and retain his own proper wife; and let every woman have and retain her own proper husband: for neither divorce nor polygamy are

SECT.
xiii.

1 Cor.
VII. 1.

by

SECT.
xii.

by any means agreeable to the genius of the gospel.

1 Cor.
VII. 3.

Let the husband where this relation is commenced, render all due benevolence to the wife, and in like manner also the wife to the husband : let them on all occasions be ready mutually to oblige, and consult the happiness of each other's life. And let them not imagine that there is any perfection in living separate from each other, as if they were in a state of celibacy. For the wife hath not in this respect power over her own body, but hath by the marriage-covenant transferred it to the husband ; and in like manner also, the husband hath not power over his own body, but it is, as it were, the property of the wife ; their engagements being mutual, so that on every occasion conscience obliges them to remain appropriate to each other, and consult their mutual good.

5 Withdraw not therefore from the company of each other, unless [it be] by consent for a time ; that ye may be at leisure to devote yourselves more intensely to fasting and prayer, and that ye may come together again as usual ; lest Satan tempt you on account of your incontinence, and take occasion from the irregular sallies of animal nature, to fill you with thoughts and passions, which marriage was in its original institution intended to remedy.

6 But you will observe, that I say this by permission from Christ ; but not by any express command^a, which he gave in person in the days of his flesh, or gives by the inspiration and suggestion of his Spirit now ; by which inspiration, you may conclude I am guided when I lay in no such precautions as these.

7 But as for the main question we are now upon, I could wish that all men were, in this respect, even as myself ; that all christians could as easily bear the severities of a single life in present circumstances, and exercise as resolute a command over their natural desires^b. But every

3 Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence : and likewise also the wife unto the husband.

4 The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband : and likewise also the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife.

5 Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer ; and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.

6 But I speak this by permission, and not of commandment.

7 For I would that all men were even as I myself ; but every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this

^a By permission.] I cannot, with Mr. Cradock, think, that the meaning of this clause, is, " I permit marriage, but do not enjoin it." and have elsewhere observed, that this verse, and others in this context, nearly parallel to it, will be so far from affording, on any interpretation, an objection against the general inspiration of St. Paul's epistles, that they will rather strengthen the proof of it. See Essay on Inspiration in Vol. III.

^b That all men were even as myself.] Common sense requires us to limit this expression as in the paraphrase ; for it would be a most flagrant absurdity to suppose that St. Paul wished marriage might entirely this manner, and another after that.

8 I say therefore to the unmarried and widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I.

9 But if they cannot contain, let them marry, for it is better to marry than to burn.

10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart from her husband:

11 But and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife.

every man has his proper gift of God, one in this kind, or manner, and another in that. So that though I give the best advice and example I can I would not exalt myself on account of this attainment, nor despise those that have it not. But as to unmarried men, who, like me, have 8 buried their wives, and to the widows, I say, it is good for them, (if they conveniently can,) to continue, as I do, in the widowed state. But 9 if they have not attained to such a degree of temperance, as to be easy in it, let them by all means marry. For though it be better to live calmly and soberly in a state of widowhood, than to marry, it is undoubtedly much better to marry a second time, or a third, than to burn, and to be tormented with those restless passions which some in such circumstances feel.

But as to those that are married^c, [it is] not 10 I [who] command but the Lord Jesus Christ himself, who enjoins, that the wife should not withdraw herself from [her] husband: But if 11 she be withdrawn by her own rash and foolish act, let her not by any means contract another marriage; but remain unmarried, or rather, if it may be accomplished by any submission on her side, let her be reconciled to [her] husband, that they may, if possible, live in such an union and harmony as the relation requires. And let not the husband dismiss [his] wife on any light account, or indeed, for any thing short of adultery. For whatever particular reasons Moses might have, for permitting divorces on some slighter occasions, Christ our great Legislator, who may reasonably expect higher degrees of purity and virtue in his followers, as their assistances are so much greater, hath seen fit expressly to prohibit such separation, and we, his apostles, in our decisions upon this matter, must guide ourselves by the authority of his determination.

IMPROVE-

entirely cease. It shews therefore how unfair and improper it is, in various cases, to strain the apostle's words to the utmost rigour, as if he perpetually used the most critical exactness; but indeed chap ix. 22 is so full an instance to the contrary, that it is not necessary to multiply remarks of this kind.

^c To those that are married.] The translation, published by the English Jesuits, at Bourdeaux, renders it, to those who are united in the sacrament of marriage; which I mention as one instance, selected from a vast number, of the great dishonesty of that translation.

IMPROVEMENT.

THE decisions of the holy apostle are here given with such gravity, seriousness and purity, that one would hope, delicate as the subject of them is, they will be received without any of that unbecoming levity which the wantonness of some minds may be ready to excite on such an occasion.

It becomes us humbly to adore the Divine wisdom and goodness manifested in the formation of the first human pair, and in keeping up the different sexes through all succeeding ages, in so just a proportion, that every man might have his own wife, and every woman her own husband: that the instinct of nature might, so far as it is necessary, be gratified without guilt, and an holy seed be sought, which being trained up under proper discipline and instruction, might supply the wastes that death is continually making, and be accounted to the Lord for a generation; that so virtue and religion, for the sake of which alone it is desirable that human creatures should subsist, may be transmitted through every age, and earth become a nursery for heaven.

With these views, let marriages be contracted, when it is proper they should be contracted at all. Let none imagine the state itself to be impure; and let it always be preserved undefiled. Let all occasion of irregular desire be prudently guarded against by those who have entered into it. And let all christians, in every relation, remember that the obligations of devotion are common to all; and that Christ and his apostles seem to take it for granted, that we shall be careful to secure proper seasons for fasting, as well as for prayer, so far as may be needful, in order that the superior authority of the mind over the body may be exercised, and maintained, and that our petitions to the throne of grace may be offered with greater intenseness, copiousness and ardour.

SECT. XIII.

The apostle exhorts Christians not to break marriage on account of difference in religion; and urges, in the general, contentment with the stations in which they were called, and a concern to serve God in their proper condition, whether married, or single, bound or free. 1 Cor. VII. 12—24.

I CORINTHIANS VII. 12.

SECT. XIII. I HAVE reminded you of the decision of Christ with respect to the affair of divorce, now as to the rest of the persons and cases to which I shall address myself, it is to be observed, that I

1 COR. VII. 12. BUT to the rest speak I, not the Lord, If any brother hath a wife that believeth not and speaks

and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away.

13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him.

14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but now are they holy.

15 But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but

13 speak, according to what duty or prudence seems on the whole to require; and it is not to be considered as if it were immediately spoken by the Lord. If any Christian brother hath an unbelieving wife, and she consent to dwell with him, notwithstanding the diversity of their religious persuasions, let him not dismiss her. And 13 on the other hand, if any Christian wife have an unbelieving husband, and he consent to dwell with her, let her not dismiss him^a, nor separate herself from him, though the legal constitution of the country in which she lives may allow her to do it. For in such a case as this, the un- 14 believing husband is so sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is so sanctified by the husband^b, that their matrimonial converse is as lawful as if they were both of the same faith: otherwise your children, in these mixed cases, were unclean, and must be looked upon as unfit to be admitted to those peculiar ordinances by which the seed of God's people are distinguished; but now they are confessedly holy^c, and are as readily admitted to baptism in all our churches, as if both the parents were Christians; so that the case you see, is in effect decided by this prevailing practice. However if the unbe- 15 lieving party, in such circumstances as these, be absolutely determined, and will depart, let him, or her depart, and take the course they think best; and the consequence is, that a brother, or a sister, who hath been united to such a wife, or husband, in matrimonial bonds, is by such a conduct of a former partner, discharged from future

SECT. XIII.

1 Cor. VII. 12

^a Let her not dismiss him.] I have elsewhere observed, that in these countries, in the apostle's days the wives had a power of divorce as well as the husbands.

^b I. sanctified, &c.] Some think the meaning is, "the Christian may converse with the infidel;" as appears, in that the children of such marriages are brought up Christians. But this cannot possibly be the sense; for that they were brought up so, was not to be sure always fact, and were it was, there was no need of proving from thence the conversion of the parent, which would in itself be much more apparent than the education of the child.

^c Now are they holy.] On the maturest and most impartial consideration of this text, I must judge it to refer to infant-baptism. Nothing can be more apparent than that the word holy, signifies persons, who might be admitted to partake of the distinguishing rites of God's people. Compare Exod. xix. 6; Deut. vii. 6; chap. xiv. 2; chap. xxvi. 19; chap. xxxii. 9; 1. Tim. 2; with Isa. xxxv. 8; chap. hi. 1; Acts x. 25, &c. And as for the interpretation, which so many of our brethren, the Baptists, have contended for, that holy signifies legitimate, and unclean illegitimate; (not to urge that this seems an unscriptural sense of the word,) nothing can be more evident, than that the argument will by no means bear it; for it would be proving a thing by itself, idem per idem, to argue that the converse of the parents was lawful, because the children were not bastards; whereas all who thought the converse of the parents unlawful, must of course think that the children were illegitimate.

SECT.
XIII.1 Cor.
VII. 15.

future obligation, and is not in bondage in such [cases.] But let it be always remembered, that God hath by his gospel called us to peace; and therefore it ought to be our care, to behave in as inoffensive a manner as possible, in all the relations of life, that so, if there must be a breach, the blame may not be chargeable upon the Christian.

but God hath called us to peace.

- 16 And as it is worth your while, to be very careful in your behavior to those who thus make, as it were, a part of yourselves, that you may adorn the gospel you profess, by the most amiable and engaging conduct; for it is possible, the unbeliever may be thereby gained to Christianity. Let each therefore reflect on his own concern in this observation. For how knowest thou, O wife, but thou mayest save [thine] husband? Or how knowest thou, O husband, but thou mayest save [thy] wife? And surely the everlasting happiness of the person, now the companion of your life, will be more than an equivalent for all the self-denial to which you may be required at present to submit. But if this should not be the effect, it still becomes you to do your duty; and therefore since the providence of God is concerned in all these relations, and in the steps by which they were contracted, as God hath distributed to every one, and as it were cast the parts of life, let every one so walk, even as the Lord hath called him a. This is the lesson I would inculcate on you Corinthians, and thus I command in all the churches, and charge it upon the consciences of men, as a lesson of the highest importance.

16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? Or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

- 18 Is any one, for instance, called, being circumcised, let him not become, so far as in him lies, uncircumcised; nor act, as if he were desirous, as far as possible, to undo what was done by his Jewish parents, or masters, in his infancy. Is any one called to the fellowship of gospel-blessings in uncircumcision let him not be solicitous to be circumcised, as if that rite were necessary to his

17 But as God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk: and so ordain I in all churches.

18 Is any man called being circumcised? let him not become uncircumcised; is any man called in uncircumcision? let him not become circumcised.

d As the Lord hath called him.] This is a very pertinent digression, as it so directly contradicts the notion which prevailed among the Jews, that embracing the true religion dissolved all the relations which had before been contracted. Whereas the apostle here declares, that the gospel left them in this respect, just as it found them; increasing, instead of lessening, the obligations they were under to a faithful and affectionate discharge of their correspondent duties.

e Become uncircumcised] The word επισημασθησθε, has an evident relation to attempts, like those referred to, 1 Mac. i. 15, which it is not necessary more particularly to illustrate.

19 Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God.

20 Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called.

21 Art thou called being a servant? care not for it; but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather.

22 For he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's freeman: likewise also he that is called, being free, is Christ's servant.

23 Ye are bought with a price; be not ye the servants of men.

his salvation, as the Jews, and some zealots amongst ourselves, have taught. For to speak the important truth in a few plain words, Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing; the observation, or non-observation, of the Mosaic law, will neither secure nor obstruct our salvation; but all depends upon keeping the commandments of God. An obedient faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, produced by the sanctifying influences of his Spirit on the heart, and bringing forth the genuine fruits of holiness in our temper and life, is the great concern: and whether we be Jews, or Gentiles, circumcised, or uncircumcised, we shall be happy, or miserable for ever, as we are careful or negligent with regard to this. As for other matter, be not excessively concerned about them; but in whatever calling, that, is profession and circumstance, any one of you was called in that let him continue; affect not to change without the clear and evident leadings of Providence, as there is generally greater reason to expect comfort and usefulness in such a calling than another. And I may apply this, not only to the different employments, but relations in life, as well as diversity in religious professions. Art thou for instance, called into the church of christ, [being] in the low rank, not only of an hired servant, but a slave? Do not so much regard it, as, upon that account, to make thy life uneasy; but if thou canst, without any sinful method of obtaining it, be made free choose it rather. what is no doubt in itself eligible, yet not absolutely necessary to the happiness of a good man. For he that is called by the Lord to the Christian faith, [being] a servant or slave, is the Lord's freeman. Christ has made him free indeed, in making him partaker of the glorious liberties of the children of God; (John viii. 36.) and on the other hand, he also that is called, [being] free from the authority of any human master, is still the servant, the property of Christ, and owes him a most implicit and universal obedience. But upon this head, remember, that as Christians you were all bought with a most invaluable price: Christ hath redeemed you at the expence

et. 1. xiii. 1 Cor. VII. 19.

20

21

22

23

or

f You were bought with a price, &c.] Dr. Whithy would render it, "Are ye bought with a price, that is, redeemed from servitude? Become not servants of men; do not sell yourselves for slaves again." It is indeed probable, that the apostle de-

SECT.
xiii.1 Cor.
VII. 23.

of his own blood; and therefore, let me caution you out of regard to him, and from a desire to be capable of serving him, as much as possible, that ye do not, where it may by any lawful means be avoided, become the slaves of men; since so many evils and dangers and snares are inseparable from such a situation.

- 24 This, brethren, is the particular advice which I thought proper to give upon this head; and the general rule I laid down above, is of such great importance, that I must repeat it; in whatever [condition] a man was called at first, by the gospel and grace of Christ, in that let him abide with God, taking care to behave in a prudent and religious manner, as under the Divine inspection; and not changing his business in life, if it be in the general lawful, because he is a Christian; but endeavouring to pursue it with such integrity, diligence and prudence, as that his great Master and Saviour may be most effectually glorified.

24 Brethren, let every man wherein he is called, therein abide with God.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. LET us learn, from the exhortations and reasonings of the 14 apostle, a becoming solicitude, to contribute as much as we possibly can, to the Christian edification of each other; and especially let this be the care of the nearest relatives in life. What can be more desirable, than that the husband may be sanctified by the wife, and the wife by the husband! may all prudent care be taken, in contracting marriages, as to the religious character of the intended partner of life; and in those already contracted, where this precaution has been neglected, or where the judgment formed seems to have been mistaken, let all considerations of prudence, counsel Christians against becoming slaves, if it could be prevented and with great reason, as it was a circumstance which seemed less suitable to the dignity of the Christian profession, and must expose them to many inconveniences and interruptions in duty, especially on the Lord's day, and other seasons of religious assemblies; besides the danger of being present at domestic idolatrous sacrifices, or being ill-used, if they refused their compliance. But I cannot thoroughly approve of the Doctor's version, because the advice is unnecessarily restrained thereby, to those slaves who had been redeemed; which plainly, as well suited those who had their freedom given them, and indeed suited all Christians who never had been at all slaves, and who might more easily have been prevailed upon, by their poverty, to bring themselves into a condition, the evils and inconveniences of which they did not thoroughly know.

g Abide with God.] L'Enfant explains παρετω Θεω in the sight of God, (Compare 2 Cor. xi. 11: Eph. v. 21.) and thinks there had been some disorders at Corinth, proceeding from some irregular claim which Christian slaves made to liberty, under pretence, that, as Christian brethren they were equal with their masters.

prudence, of religion, of affection, concur to animate to a mutual care of each other's soul, that most important effort of love, that most solid expression and demonstration of friendship. Nor let the improbability of success be pleaded in excuse for neglect, even where the attempt must be made by the subordinate sex. A possibility should be sufficient encouragement; and surely there is room to say, How knowest thou, O wife, but thou mayest save him, whose salvation, next to thine own, must be most desirable to thee?

Let us all study the duties of the relations in which God hath fixed us; and walk with him in our proper callings, not desiring so much to exchange, as to improve them. His wise Providence hath distributed the part; it is our wisdom, and will be our happiness, to act in humble congruity to that distribution. Surely the apostle could not have expressed in stronger terms, his deep conviction of the small importance of human distinctions, than he here does; when speaking of what seems to great and generous minds, the most miserable lot, even that of a slave, he says, Care not for it^b. If liberty itself, the first of all temporal blessings, be not of so great importance, as that a man, blessed with the high hopes and glorious consolations of Christianity, should make himself very solicitous about it, how much less is there in those comparatively trifling distinctions on which many lay so disproportionate, so extravagant a stress!

Let Christian servants (for blessed be God, amongst us we have no slaves,) remember their high privileges, as the Lord's freemen. Let Christian masters remember the restraint, as the Lord's servants. And let the benefits of liberty, especially, when considered in its aspect upon religion, be so far valued, as not to be bartered away for any price which the enemies of mankind may offer in exchange.

But above all, let us remember the infinite importance of maintaining the freedom of the mind from the bondage of corruption; and of keeping, with all humble and cheerful observance the commandments of God. While many express the warmest zeal for circumcision, or uncircumcision, in defence of, or in opposition to, this, or that mode or form of external worship, let our hearts be set on what is most vital and essential in religion; and we shall find the happiest equivalent, in the composure and satisfaction of our own spirit now, as well as in those abundant rewards which the Lord hath laid up for them who fear him.

SECT.

^b Care not for it. This fine remark, (for such indeed it is,) occurs in Dr. Goodwin's Works, Vol. I. p. 50.

SECT. XIV.

The apostle treats on the inexpediency of marriage, in the circumstances of the church at that juncture, and inculcates a serious sense of the shortness of time, as the best remedy against immoderate attachment to any secular interest. 1 Cor. VII. 25, to the end.

1 CORINTHIANS VII. 25.

SECT.
XIV.1 Cor.
VII. 25.

BUT I have been insensibly led by these general views of our obligations and hopes, as Christians, to digress from the subject of marriage, which I had first in view, and to which it is time I should return. And here, concerning the case of virgins of either sex, I have received no express commandment from the Lord, as I had in the case handled above; whether by what is transmitted to us in Christ's discourse, or by any immediate and personal revelation^a; nevertheless, I give my opinion, as one who hath received grace and mercy of the Lord, to be faithful in the great charge he hath committed to me; and therefore, considering the many instances, in which I have been enabled to approve my fidelity to Christ and his church, may expect to be heard with some peculiar regard.

26 I apprehend this therefore to be right and good in the present exigency^b and extremity of affairs, while the church is in such a state of persecution, that [it is] best for a single man to continue

27 as he is. Art thou indeed bound to a wife already? my advice affects not thee; in that case bear patiently whatever burdens may occur, and seek not to be loosed from her by an irregular and scandalous divorce or separation. But on the other hand, art thou loosed from a wife? Hath Providence never led thee into those engagements, or has it broken the bond by the death of thy former companion? If thou canst conveniently and virtuously continue as thou art, seek not

1 Cor. VII. 25.

NOW concerning virgins, I have no commandment of the Lord: yet I give my judgment as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful.

26 I suppose therefore that this is good for the present distress. I say that it is good for a man so to be.

27 Art thou bound unto a wife? seek not to be loosed. Art thou loosed from a wife? seek not a wife.

^a Or by immediate and personal revelation.] To this, I think he refers, rather than the former, as he speaks in the singular number; whereas else he might more properly have said, we have received none.

^b Present exigency.] This must certainly refer to the prevalence of persecution at that time; for nothing can be more absurd, than to imagine, that an inspired apostle would, in the general, discountenance marriage; considering that it was expressly agreeable to a divine institution, and of great importance to the existence and happiness of all future generations.

28 But and if thou marry, thou hast not sinned : and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned. Nevertheless, such shall have trouble in the flesh ; but I spare you.

29 But this I say, brethren, the time is short. It remaineth, that both they that have wives, be as though they had none ;

30 And they that weep, as though they wept not ; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not ; and they that buy, as though they possessed not ;

31 And they that use this world, as not abusing it ; for the fashion of this world passeth away.

not a wife at present, till the storm which now hovers over the church be a little blown over, and more peaceful times return. Yet if thou dost marry, thou hast not thereby sinned : and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned ; the marriage-state is no doubt both lawful and honourable ; yet such will have probably some additional affliction in the flesh ; they will be encumbered with the burden of many temporal affairs ; and the representation which I make to you of these things, is not out of severity, but tenderness ; as I would fain spare you and speak on the whole, in this gentle and cautious manner on the subject, to avoid extremes either the one way, or the other.

But this I say brethren, with great confidence ; and desire you would hear it with due attention ; that the whole time of our abode in this world is contracted^c within very narrow limits ; it remains therefore, that we guard against too fond an attachment to any relation or possession in life : so that they, who have wives, be in a manner, as if they had none ; And they³⁰ that weep, as not weeping in streams of inconsolable sorrow, though nature may be allowed to drop its moderate tear ; and they that rejoice, as not rejoicing in dissolute and confident sallies of mirth, as if secure from any distressful revolution ; and they that purchase, as not possessing by a certain tenure what they must shortly resign ; And they who use this world, as not³¹ carrying the enjoyments of it to an unbridled excess ; for the whole scheme and fashion of this world passes off^d, and is gone like a scene in a theatre that presently shifts ; or a pageant in some public procession, which how gaudily soever it be adorned to strike the eyes of spectators, is still in motion, and presently disappears, to shew itself for a few moments to others. So transitory are all our enjoyments, and afflictions too, and worthy of little regard, when compared

SECT.
III.
1 Cor.
VII. 28.

^c Contracted.] The word συσταμιν, properly imports this, being, (as many have observed, a metaphor, taken from furling or gathering up a sail. Dr. Hammond, and some others, would render this, it is but a little while, and they that have wives, shall be as though they had none. That is, " I see those times of persecution rising, which will put men out of a capacity of enjoying those temporal delight which they may now be fondest of." But this does not seem an exact translation, though L'Enfant mentions it with considerable regard.

^d Fashion of this world passes off.] Σχημα παρρη. Compare 1 John ii. 17.

^e There

SECT.
xiv.

ed with the solid realities which are soon to open upon us, and never to pass away.

I Cor.
II. 52.

32 But I would have you without anxiety, while you continue here amidst all these uncertainties; and therefore it is, I advise you in present circumstances to decline marriage, if you conveniently can. For an unmarried man careth for the things of the Lord Jesus Christ, how he may please the Lord, and is in a great degree at leisure to employ his thoughts, and schemes, and labours, for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom among men; and sure there is no other employment so honourable, so delightful, and when remote consequences are taken into the

33 account, so profitable: Whereas he who is married, careth for the things of the world, how he maintain his family, and how he may please [his] wife, and so accommodate himself to her

34 temper, as to make her easy and happy. On the other hand, there is just such a difference between the condition of a wife and a virgin^e. She who is unmarried, is careful about the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and spirit. She has leisure to attend to the higher improvement of religion in her own soul, by the more abundant exercises of devotion, as well as to do something more for the advancement of religion among others; whereas she that is married, careth for the things of the world, how she may please [her] husband^f; and the diversity of humours both in men and women, and the imperfection of even the best tempers, make this sometimes on both sides a difficult task; on which account single persons have always some considerable advantages, which are especially apparent in these times of public danger.

35 But all this I say for your own benefit, with

a

52 But I would have you without carefulness. He that is unmarried, careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord:

33 But he that is married, careth for the things that are of the world, how he may please his wife.

34 There is a difference also between a wife and a virgin: the unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy, both in body and in spirit: but she that is married, careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband.

35 And this I speak for ^e There is just such a difference, &c. Some would connect the word μαρτυροῦμαι with the close of the preceding verse, and render it, "He that is married, cares, &c. how he may please his wife, and is divided in his thoughts, or distracted with a variety of anxieties." But this would occasion an unnecessary ellipsis in the beginning of this verse, and destroy the resemblance between the conclusion of the two verses, when it is evident the apostle meant to say the same of both the husband and wife.

^f How she may please her husband.] The apostle in this text, and the counter-part to it, seems to declare, that single persons of either sex, have generally opportunities for devotion beyond those that are married, even in the most peaceful times of the church, and that a diversity of humours, both in men and women, makes it difficult for them to please each other so thoroughly as is necessary, in order to make a married life delightful. So that it intimates a counsel to single people, to value and improve their advantages, and to married people, to watch against those things that would ensnare them, and injure their mutual peace and comfort.

for your own profit; not that I may cast a snare upon you, but for that which is comely, and that you may attend upon the Lord without distraction.

36 But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of her age, and need so require, a sincere desire to promote your happiness; and not that I may throw a snare upon you, and bind you from that which God for wise reasons instituted, and allows, and which the state of human nature generally requires; but out of regard to what is to be sure very comely, and decent in the Lord, without any violent constraint, by which I might seem to drag you into a state of life, which should make you continually uneasy: for that would quite spoil its gracefulness as well as acceptance, and might plunge you into much greater inconveniences another way.

But, on the other hand, if any on mature de- 36 liberation apprehend that he acts an unbecoming part towards his virgin-daughter, or any other maiden, that may fall under his guardianship and care, if she pass the flower of [her] age, in a single state; which, I know, is an opinion very prevalent among the Jews; and if he think that g Not that I may throw a snare upon you.] This is the most literal version I could give of ἐπιχειροῦμαι ἐπιδαίω. Mr. Locke thinks the word ἐπιδαίω, which signifies cord, alludes to the Jewish phrase of binding what was declared unlawful.

h Comely: εὐχημα.] This seems to intimate, that they were now in a circumstance in which God did, as it were, exact a peculiar severity from all their thoughts; and that it was a time to think of the trials of martyrdom, rather than the eademment of human passions.

i Without any violent constraint.] ἄτις-ροσσησας, is rendered in our translation by the addition of several words, that ye may attend on the Lord without distraction. But Sir Norton Knatchbull has convinced me, that the version here given is much preferable to ours.

k Pass the flower of her age, &c.] There is hardly any passage in the epistle, about the sense of which I have been more perplexed than about this; and I am still far from being satisfied concerning it. I had once translated it, "If any one thinks that he acts an unbecoming part, by continuing in his single state, till he be past the flower of his age,—let them marry,—he that marries does well, &c." and had paraphrased the words accordingly. And what induced me to this, was, that, verse 37, the apostle puts the issue of the matter on the steadfastness of his own mind, the power he had over his own will, and his having no necessity; whereas if a daughter, or a ward, were in question, her inclinations, temper and convenience were certainly to be consulted; and it would be the same, if the virgin spoken of, was one to whom the man was himself engaged. But it is really doing such violence to the original, to render τρεῖς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ παρθενίαν, keep himself single, or keep his own virginity; and to render ἐπιχειροῦμαι, he that marries, that after long deliberation I chose to abide by our own version; especially since it agrees with most of those I have had an opportunity of consulting. And if this be admitted, I think it must be taken for granted, that when the apostle speaks of this man's having no necessity, he means to take in whatever might urge him to dispose of her in marriage, whether in her temper and inclinations, or in their domestic circumstances.—As for Hieron's opinion, that ἀρχησται ἐπὶ τὴν παρθενίαν, signifies, to incur shame by reason of his virgin, meaning, if a man apprehend that his daughter will dishonour his family by fornication, he will do prudently to marry her: I think the above-mentioned objection lies equally against this interpretation. But if the Alexandrine reading of γαρύμαζον, instead of ἐπιχειροῦμαι, be admitted, it may deserve consideration, whether the whole passage may not refer to the case of a contract between a man and a young maiden, the accomplishment, or dissolution of which, might, in some imaginable circumstances, depend very much on the conduct of the man, as he seemed to urge, or decline, the bringing it into effect.

SECT.
XIV.
I Cor.
VII. 35.

SECT.
xiv.1 Cor.
VII. 36.

37

that it ought to be so, let him do what he will in this respect: he sinneth not in his intent of letting her change her present condition and therefore let him seek out a proper partner in life for her, and let them marry. But he that hath hitherto stood stedfast in his heart, having also on her side no apprehension of any necessity, in consequence of what he discerns of her dispositions, and no engagement subsisting which might give another a just claim to her, but hath power over his own will, being at liberty to act as he pleases; and hath in such circumstances determined in his own heart that he will keep his maiden still single, he does well, and the part he acts is so far from being blameable, that in present circumstances it is much to be commended, So that on the whole, the conclusion of the matter is this; he, that in such troublous times as these gives [her] in marriage doeth well; she may find opportunities in that relation both to adorn and to serve Christianity; but as things are circumstanced, I must needs declare, that where a man is under no necessity of doing it, he that gives [her] not in marriage, doeth better; and more effectually consults both his comfort and safety.

39

This however is beyond controversy certain, that the wife is bound by the law to continue with her husband, and submit herself to him, as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is in that case free, and may marry to whom she will; only let her take care that she marry in the Lord, and that retaining a sense of the importance of her Christian obligations, she does not choose a partner for life of a different religion from herself. She may, I say, lawfully act thus; but I would not be understood to advise it; for she is happier according to my sentiment, if she continue as she is: and I may modestly say, that I appear to have the spirit of God¹ to guide me; and not merely some degree of experience, arising from the many observations which for a course of years I have made on human affairs. I may therefore reasonably suppose require, let him do what he will, he sinneth not: let them marry

40

37 Nevertheless, he that standeth stedfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power over his own will, and hath so decreed in his heart, that he will keep his virgin, doeth well.

38 So then, he that giveth her in marriage, doeth well: but he that giveth her not in marriage, doeth better.

39 The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth: but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will, only in the Lord.

40 But she is happier if she so abide, after my judgment: and I think also, that I have the Spirit of God.

¹ I appear to have the Spirit of God.] It is very unreasonable for any to infer from hence, that St. Paul was uncertain whether he was inspired or not. Whereas this is only a modest way of speaking; and have the Spirit, often signifies the same with have. Compare Luke viii. 18; with Mat. xiii. 12; 1 Cor. x. 1, 2, chap. xiv. 37. And the ambiguity in the expression, appear to have, seems exactly to correspond to the ambiguity of this original phrase.

pose my judgment will have its peculiar weight, even where I do not pretend to decide with such an authority as should bind the conscience as by an apostolical dictate.

sect.
xiv.
1 Cor.
vii. 40.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET us observe the humility of the excellent apostle with pleasure. When he speaks of his fidelity in the ministry, he tells us, he obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful. Edified by such an example, let us ascribe to Christ the praise, not only of our endowments, but our virtues; even to him who worketh in us both to will and to do of his own good pleasure.

Let us seriously contemplate the affecting lesson which the apostle here gives of the shortness of time; and infer how much it is our wisdom to loosen our affections from the things of this vain world, which are ready to ingross so disproportionate a share in them. Let us look upon the world as a transient pageant, and not set our eyes and our hearts on that which is not. We expect, instead of these transitory vanities and empty shews, a kingdom that cannot be moved; in the expectation of which let us be solicitous to please the Lord; making the best of our opportunities, and guarding against all that may unnecessarily divert our minds, and divide our cares, from what will at length appear the one thing needful.

Let us attentively reflect upon the advantages and snares of our respective conditions in life; that we may improve the one, and escape, as far as possible, all injury from the other. Let those who are single, employ their leisure for God; and endeavour to collect a stock of Christian experience which may support them, when the duties and difficulties, the cares and sorrows of life, may be multiplied. Let those who are married, with mutual regard endeavour to please each other, and make the relation into which providence hath conducted them, as comfortable and agreeable as they can. And whatever cares press upon their minds, or demand their attention, let them order their affairs with such discretion, that they may still secure a due proportion of their time for the things of the Lord.

If any in their consciences are persuaded, that by continuing single they shall best answer the purposes of religion, and promote the good of their fellow-creatures, in conjunction with their own; let them do it. As for those that marry, whether a first, or a second time, let them do it in the Lord; acting in the choice of their most intimate friend and companion, as the servants of Christ; who are desirous that their conduct may be approved by him,

SECT.
XIV.

him, and that any avocations and interruptions in his service, which may be occasioned, even in those peaceful times, by marriage, may be, in some measure, balanced, by the united prayers, prudent counsels, and edifying converse of those with whom they unite in this tender and indissoluble bond.

SECT. XV.

The Apostle proceeds to consider the case of eating things sacrificed to idols; and reminds them, that though all Christians might well be supposed to know the vanity of those imaginary deities to which they were offered, yet it might prove an occasion of grief and scandal, that the professors of Christianity should partake of these sacrifices in their temple; which therefore charity would require them by all means to avoid. 1 Cor. VIII. throughout.

I CORINTHIANS VIII. 1.

SECT.
XV.1 Cor.
VIII. 1.

I NOW proceed to consider the other cases about which you consulted me; particularly that concerning things sacrificed to idols; and here it may be observed, that we know, we all have, as Christians, that general knowledge of the vanity of these fictitious deities of which some are ready to boast, as if it were an extraordinary matter, and which they sometimes are in danger of abusing, by making it the foundation of liberties which may be very detrimental. But let it be remembered, that knowledge often puffeth up^a, and is the occasion of great self-conceit and arrogance: whereas it is considerate love, and gentle tenderness, that edifies, and has such a happy effect in building up the church of Christ. And indeed, if any one think that he knoweth any thing, if he be conceited of his knowledge, so as to neglect and despise his brethren, and upon account of his supposed superiority in that respect, set a very high value upon himself, it appears, that he as yet knows nothing as he ought to know it, and needs to be taught the very first and most essential principles of that knowledge which is truly ornamental and³ useful. But if any man love God, and shew it

1 Cor. VIII. 1.

NOW as touching things offered unto idols, we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth.

² And if any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know.

³ But if any man love

^a Knowledge puffeth up.] Elsner, (Observ. Vol. II. p. 26.) acknowledges that as Bos, and Erasmus Schmidius, contend, there is a parenthesis here; but he thinks it begins in the middle of the first verse, and ends after the first clause of the 4th, we have all knowledge—we know that an idol is nothing, &c.

^b He

love of God, the same is known of him.

4 As concerning therefore the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one.

5 For though there be that are called gods whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many.)

6 But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him: and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him.

it by a steady regard for the Divine glory, and the good of his brethren, he is indeed known of him^b, this man hath attained the true knowledge of God, and will be sure of his approbation and favour. Therefore, to proceed to the question in debate, concerning the eating of the things sacrificed to idols, we well know that an idol [is] in itself nothing in the world^c, but a mass of senseless matter, and when regarded in a religious view, so empty a vanity, that it deserves not to be named among the things that exist. And we all know that there [is] indeed no other God, but that one glorious and transcendent Being, to which the gospel hath taught us to appropriate our worship. For though there 5 are many which are called gods, whether residing in heaven or on earth, or even under the earth; for the heathens have not only their celestial, and terrestrial, but likewise their infernal deities as there are many gods, and many lords, who are in their various subordination adored by the Gentiles, and have great though very absurd worship paid to them. Nevertheless, to us, 6 [there is but] one God, the Father^d of angels and men, from whom are all things in created nature; and we derived our being from him, were made for him, and for his glory: and there is also but one Lord, even Jesus Christ, the only Mediator between God and man, by whom [are] all things created, supported, and guided, and we by him, thankfully owning ourselves obliged to his agency and care for all we are, and have, or hope to obtain. These are grand principles, in which all intelligent Christians are agreed; and it would be happy

SECT
XX.

I Cor.
VIII. 4.

^b He is known of him.] Most understand it, he is approved by God, as to know, sometimes undoubtedly signifies, Mr. Locke would render it, he is instructed by him. But I acquiesce in Mr. Pierce's reasoning, in his 6th Dissertation, to prove the construction followed in the paraphrase, by a construction like that of the original of Acts x. 36. where $\alpha\delta\epsilon\lambda\phi\sigma\iota\varsigma$ plainly refers to the immediate antecedent.

^c We know that an idol is nothing in the world.] Dr. Whitty shews this was a common aphorism among the Jewish doctors to which the word $\epsilon\iota\delta\omega\lambda\alpha$, the name given them, did probably allude. Mons. Saurin thinks it so hard to reconcile this with what the apostle says elsewhere, that he judges it necessary to understand this as an objection made by one of the Corinthians, with whom he is disputing, Sacr. Disc. Vol. II. p. 476—481. But I cannot from an impartial view of the context, give into his interpretation. See Elmer's learned note here on $\alpha\iota\delta\omega\lambda\alpha$ and Simulacrum.

^d One God, the Father.] In answer to the argument drawn from hence against the Deity of Christ, see Dr. Gayse on this place; and Dr. Felm. Calamy's Serm. on the Trinity, p. 25 and 244. The Person, to whom the Son, as Lord or Mediator, introduces us, is undoubtedly the Father, nor is the Son to be considered as another God. But it is not the design of these notes, largely to discuss theological controversies.

e Sitting

SECT.
XV.

happy, if they kept them steadily and consistently in view.

2 Cor.
VIII. 7.

You are possessed of these apprehensions of things : it is well ; But you ought to remember, that [there is] not in all men this knowledge. Some Christian converts may not sufficiently apprehend this ; but may imagine there is really some invisible spirit present in the idol, and acting by and upon it. And in consequence of this, some do, even until now, with consciousness of some religious regard to the idol, eat the things in question, as what is sacrificed to the idol, intending thereby to pay some homage ; and so their conscience being too weak to withstand a temptation to what in these circumstances is really evil, is defiled, and brought under a grievous and terrifying load of guilt.

8 But why should we occasion this inconvenience ? For we know, that meat commendeth us not in any degree, to the acceptance and favour of God ; for neither are we the better, if we eat, nor the worse, if we eat not. The great God does not so much esteem a man for being, or disapprove him for not being, superior to such little scruples : but the tenderness of his conscience, together with the zeal and charity of his heart, are the grand qualities he regards.

9 But take heed, lest this power and liberty of yours, be by any means a stumbling-block, and occasion of sin, to the weak, with whom you converse, or who observe your conduct, perhaps with more regard than you pay to it yourselves.

10 For if any one see thee, who hast this boasted, knowledge sitting down to an entertainment in an idol's temple, as freely as thou wouldest in thine own house, and partaking of his sacrifices as cheerfully as if they were the common provisions of thine own table ; though this may indeed arise from that sovereign contempt in which thou holdest that idle fiction of deity ; can he know that situation of thy mind ? And will not the conscience of him that is thus weak and

7 Howbeit, there is not in every man that knowledge : for some, with conscience of the idol unto this hour, eat it as a thing offered unto an idol : and their conscience being weak is defiled.

8 But meat commendeth us not to God for neither if we eat, are we the better ; neither if we eat not, are we the worse.

9 But take heed, lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to them that are weak.

10 For if any man see thee, which hast knowledge, sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols ?

e Sitting down to an entertainment in an idol's temple.] How commonly entertainments among the heathen consisted of what had been sacrificed to their fictitious deities, and how religiously the christians abstained from them, even when most rigorously imposed, Elsner has shewn by many very apposite citations; (Observ. Vol.

II p. 96, and no doubt the apostle's decision here had great weight with them. That these feasts were often celebrated in their temples, the same learned critic has abundantly shewn, in his notes on this clause ; and it is strange that Chemnitzius, and Erasmus, should ever have doubted it.

11 And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died?

12 But when ye sin so against the brethren and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ.

13 Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.

and who perhaps feels some scruples in his own mind about it be encouraged by thy example to eat of the idol-sacrifice with some sentiments of superstitious regard? And so shall the weak brother, for whom the Lord Jesus Christ himself died, be liable to perish by thy knowledge, in this instance, mischievous rather than usual; so that when thou makest a vain ostentation of it, thou dost in effect pride thyself in thy brother's ruin. Imagine not this to be an inconsiderable evil; 12 but on the contrary, rather know, that when you thus sin against the brethren, and wound their weak consciences, leading them into guilt, and hazarding their salvation, you greatly sin against Christ; who had such a tenderness for souls, that he died to redeem them, and hath done all that example, or precept, can do, to make his followers enter into such humane and compassionate views.

Therefore it is a determined point with me, upon these principles, that if meat of any kind scandalize my brother, and lead him into sin I would not only abstain, now and then, from this or that agreeable food, but would never as long as I live, eat any sort of flesh. I would subsist entirely on vegetables, that I may not scandalize, and ensnare my brother; if there be no other way of avoiding it. Of such importance should I esteem the preservation of one endangered soul. And herein I wish that God may give you the like self-denial, both for your own sakes, and for the peace and honour of the Christian church.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET us learn from this short, but excellent chapter, to estimate the true value of knowledge, and to see how worthless and dangerous it is, when, instead of discovering to us our own ignorance and weakness, it serves only to puff up the mind. Let us rather labour and pray for that love and charity which edifieth ourselves and others; taking heed, that we do not demonstrate our ignorance, by a high conceit of our attainments in knowledge; for nothing can more evidently shew, how small those attainments are, than not to know their limits, when these limits so soon meet us, on what side

[As long as I live: ὡς ποῦ αἰωνῶν.] We render it, as long as the world stands. But (which might simply have been rendered never) to the sense here given. the sense plainly limits the expression,

SECT. xv.
 Ver. soever we attempt to make an excursion. "Give us, O Lord, that love to thee which is the best proof of our knowledge, and the surest way to its highest improvement."

3 Let us always remember the grand principle of the unity of 4, 5 God; and with the one God and Father of all adore the one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we exist; setting him in our estimation far above all the powers, dignities, and glories, of created nature.

Belonging to so Divine a Master, let us endeavour to learn the most generous principles of true religion. Let us not found our confidence on admitting, and contending for, or despising, and 8 deriding, this or that particular observance, by which as it may happen to be circumstanced, God is neither honoured, nor dishonoured, pleased nor displeased. But let us ever maintain the tenderest concern for the edification and comfort of our brethren; and guard against whatever might either grieve or ensnare them.
 9 Let us remember, that Christ died for the weakest as well as the 11 strongest; and let their relation to him, and his tender and compassionate regard for them, melt down our hearts, when seized with that cold insensibility, which alas, is too ready to prevail amongst christians! It is Christ we wound, in wounding our 12 brethren; and in smiting them, we smite him.

Let us then stay that rash hand which is so ready in mere wantonness to do mischief; and be willing to deny ourselves in any desire to dishonour God, and injure others. This is the excellent 13 lesson St. Paul often inculcates, of which he was an eminent and illustrious example. But O, how low are multitudes of christians, multitudes of ministers fallen, when they cannot deny themselves in what is unnecessary, and even unlawful where either interest or pleasure solicit the gratification!

SECT. XVI.

The Apostle, proposing to illustrate his condescension to the weak, by his waving to accept of a maintenance from the Corinthians, introduces what he had to say on that head with a short discourse on the right, which as a gospel-minister he really had, to be supported by those among whom he laboured; which he argues both from natural equity and scripture principles. 1 Cor. IX. 1—14.

SECT. xvi.

I CORINTHIANS IX. 1.

I Cor. IX. 1. WHILE I thus speak of the concern I have to avoid what may prove an occasion of injury to weak brethren, it leads my thoughts to the part I have acted, while I resided among you

1 Cor. IX. 1. A M I not an apostle? am I not free? have I

I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? are not you my work in the Lord?

you in declining to take that maintenance from you which I might very justly have expected and demanded. And here you must give me leave to express my surprise, as well as my concern, to hear, that so unkind and unnatural a construction has been put upon my generosity and tenderness, as if I had declined to accept your contributions, from a consciousness of not being intitled to them as well as my brethren. But can you really imagine that to be the case? Am not I, as truly as any man living, an apostle of Jesus Christ? Am not I as free in this instance, as any other, and may I not, as justly as they, expect to be maintained by you, while I am serving your best interests? Have not I, though called so much later than my brethren, seen Jesus Christ our Lord^a, after his resurrection, so as to be able to testify the important fact on my own knowledge, as confidently as those that were earlier acquainted with him? And, to urge so plain a point no farther, are not ye Corinthians, particularly, my work in the Lord, and the evident token of his blessing on my apostolical labours? On this account, if I am 2 not an apostle to some others, yet I doubtless am so to you, who of all people in the world can shew the least excuse for questioning my mission: for ye are indeed the seal of my apostleship in the Lord; and the extraordinary success I have had among you, if others should doubt of my commission, might furnish out a proof of it also to them.

SECT.
xvi.
1 Cor.
IX. 1.

2 If I be not an apostle unto others, yet doubtless I am to you: for the seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord.

3 Mine answer to them that do examine me, is this,

4 Have we not power to eat and to drink?

5 Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles and
as

This therefore is my apology to those who ex-3 amine and censure me, as to this part of my conduct. Does my waving the use of a privilege prove that I have it not? Have we not, both 4 in natural equity, and according to the Divine constitution, the same power, as others in the same offices, to eat and to drink, and to subsist ourselves at the expence of those among whom we labour? Yea, have we not power to lead 5 about [with us] in our apostolic travels, (if we think it necessary,) a sister, whom we might take for a wife^b, as some of the other apostles
and

^a Have I not seen the Lord, &c.] That this was necessary, in order to his being an apostle, that is, a witness of Christ's resurrection, has before been observed. See Vol. II p. 483, note 1. Compare Acts xxii. 14, 15, chap. xxvi. 16; 1 Cor. xv. 8.

^b A sister, a wife.] The word γυναίκα, has no force at all here, if it be rendered a woman. a sister must undoubtedly be a woman: not to say, how improbable it is that the apostle should have carried about with him, in these sacred peregrinations,

SECT.
xvi.1 Cor.
IX. 5

and the brethren of the Lord, do, and Peter in particular; and to expect, that she, likewise, as well as ourselves, should be provided for by those to whom we have done such important services, as nothing of this kind can ever require?

6 Or can it be thought there is any thing singular in my case, or in that of my present companions, that it should rob me of the liberties others have; so that I only, and Barnabas^d, should not have power to decline working with our own hands for a maintenance, while we are preaching the gospel? I might here insist indeed on the natural equity of the thing, that they who devote themselves to the service of the public, should be supported by the public whom they serve. Who, for instance, ever goes to war at his own charge? The community furnishes out provision for those who guard it, and fight its battles. And if the services of a soldier deserve that maintenance, which, while engaged in the defence of their country, men cannot earn, how much more may it be expected by us, who daily hazard our lives, as well as wear them out, for men's everlasting happiness? Who planteth a vineyard, and doth not expect to eat of its fruit? Or who feedeth a flock, and doth not think he hath a right to eat of the milk of the flock? And if it be judged reasonable, that men should have an equivalent for their labours about natural things, and the accommodations of the body, is it not more evidently so, when the felicity of immortal souls is concerned?

8 But do I speak these things merely as a man, upon principles of human reason alone. And doth not the Jewish law speak also the same? For there is a passage in the sacred volume, on which the like argument may be built, (I mean, Deut. xxv. 4,) where it is written, even in the law of Moses as the brethren of the Lord and Cephas?

6 Or I only and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working?

7 Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock?

8 Say I these things as a man? or saith not the law the same also?

9 For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the nations, a woman to whom he was not married. So that the answer which the Papists generally make to the argument often brought from these words, in favour of a married clergy, is absolutely inconclusive.

c And Peter.] This is an important clause, both as it declares in effect that St. Peter continued to live with his wife after he became an apostle; and also that St. Peter had no rights, as an apostle, which were not common to St. Paul. A remark utterly subversive of popery, if traced to its obvious consequences.

d I only, and Barnabas.] From this expression one would indeed think, that the Judaizing Christians, who were the main cause of St. Paul's uneasiness in this respect, had a peculiar spleen against those two apostles of the uncircumcision; who were so instrumental in procuring and publishing the Jerusalem decree, which determined the controversy so directly in favour of the believing Gentiles.—It seems probable from the 12th verse, that Barnabas supported himself by the labour of his hands, when at Corinth, as well as St. Paul.

the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Both God take care for oxen?

10 Or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes, I doubt, this is written: That he that ploweth, should plow in hope; and that he that thresheth in hope, should be partaker of his hope.

11 If we have sown into you spiritual things, it is a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?

Moses itself, for which some have so distinguishing a regard, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn,"^e but shalt allow the poor animal to feed, while it is labouring for thee, in the midst of food: a circumstance in which its hunger would be peculiarly painful. Now is God so solicitous about oxen, that he intended this precept merely for their relief? Or doth he say [this] with a farther view, and on the whole^f, for our sakes? Surely, we may conclude, he intended such precepts as these, relating to compassion to the brutes, in some measure at least for our sakes, to humanize the heart with generous and compassionate sentiments, and to make men much more tender to each other, where their various interests are concerned. I may therefore apply it to the case before us, as entirely comprehended in his extensive universal views; and say, for us indeed was [it] written, that the necessary offices of life might be more cheerfully performed, in the expectation of such due acknowledgments; that he, who ploweth, might plow in hope of success, and that he who thresheth in such hope, should not be disappointed, but should in proper time partake of his hope, and possess the good for which he has laboured. And surely, admitting his care for others who are in meaner offices of life. God could not intend, that the ministers of the gospel alone should be sunk under continual discouragement, neglect, and ill-usage.

And indeed when we consider what great benefactors these persons are to the souls amongst whom they labour with success, the reasonableness of the conclusion will appear beyond all contradiction. For if we, by our incessant diligence in preaching to you the gospel of the blessed God, have sown unto you spiritual things, which may spring up in a harvest of eternal blessings, [is it] any great matter that we should reap your carnal things? Is there the least proportion between any thing which your liberality can impart to us, and that which we have been the happy instruments of imparting to you? This ^e That treadeth out the corn.] It is well known that this was the custom in Judea, and other eastern nations. It is still retained by many of them, and particularly in Ceylon. Raphaelus has produced passages from Xenophon, which something illustrates it.

^f On the whole.] It cannot be thought that God had no regard at all to the Brute-creatures in such precepts as these; and therefore I thought it better to render πᾶσι, on the whole, than entirely or altogether, though that sense is more frequent.

SECT.
xvii.1 Cor.
IX. 12.

This is the privilege of ministers in general, and it is a privilege which you well know some of them have exerted. And if others are so readily allowed to partake of [this] power over you^ε, [shall] not we rather claim it, with yet more evident and apparent reason, who have been the means, not only of edifying and instructing you, but likewise of calling you into the profession of Christianity? But we have not made use of this power, though founded in such evident and various principles of equity. But we rather choose to endure all things, the fatigues of labour, and inconveniences of frequent necessity, that we may not occasion any hindrance to the gospel of Christ^h, from the cavils of ill-disposed people, who are always watchful for opportunities to misrepresent and censure our conduct.

- 13 But though I do not now ask any thing of this kind for myself, yet I will not give up the justice of the demand. And I might farther support it, from the provision which God made for the priests and Levites, under the Mosaic law. Know ye not therefore, that they who are employed about holy things, are fed out of the provisions which belongs to the temple, and [that] they who wait upon the service of the altar, are partakers with the altar, in a part of the victims offered on it, particularly the vows and
- 14 the sacrifices of peace-offerings: And it is farther to be considered, that so also, that is, on principles like these, the Lord Jesus Christ himself hath expressly commanded and ordained that they who preach the gospel should live and subsist upon the gospel; when he declares, as you know

12 If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheless, we have not used this power; but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ.

13 Do ye not know, that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar, are partakers with the altar?

14 Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel.

ε Partake of [this] power, &c.] Mr. Pyle thinks this refers to the other apostles of Christ; but I rather think St. Paul intended to glance on the false teachers who carried their claims of this right to such an exorbitant height, though their services had been by no means comparable to those of the apostle. Compare 2 Cor. xi. 20.—Mr. Locke would here read ουσιας υμων of your substance; but Mat. x. 1; John xvii. 2; and many other places, prove that εξουσιας υμων, may properly be rendered, power over you.

h Hindrance to the gospel.] From the conduct of the other apostles, and of St. Paul at other places, particularly among the Macedonian churches, we may conclude, that he might see some circumstances at Corinth, (not necessary for us exactly to know,) which determined him to decline accepting of any subsistence from them while he resided there.

i Live upon the gospel.] Mr. Mede understands ωσπερ εδωκεν here, of the reward given for bringing a good message, (see Diatrib. in loc.) and shews, that the word sometimes has that meaning in heathen authors; but it is a very uncommon signification in the sacred, and therefore not to be admitted, without farther proof.—That man might be said to live on the gospel, who was maintained for preaching it; as he might be said to live on the temple, who was supported out of its income, for ministering there, though the word temple has the usual signification.

know more than one of the evangelists assures us he did, "that the labourer is worthy of his hire." Compare Mat. x. 19; Luke x. 7.

SECT.
XIV.
1 Cor.
IX. 14.

IMPROVEMENT.

MAY the disciples of Christ learn from these instructions, to honour the Lord with their substance, and the first-fruits of all their increase! And may they feel those happy effects attending the ministration of the gospel, and reap such an abundant harvest of spiritual blessings, that the imparting temporal subsistence and accommodation, to those who are the instruments of conveying them, may not be matter of constraint, but of free and affectionate choice! May the ministers of Christ, while they thankfully accept of that subsistence, which Providence, by the instrumentality of their brethren, sends them, ever act a moderate and generous part, and maintain such a visible superiority to all secular views, as may do an honour to the gospel, and command veneration to themselves!

May the secular advantages of the office never invite bad men into it; nor its discouragements deter good men from undertaking it. And whatever censures a malignant world, who themselves know not any higher motives than self-interest, shall pass, may the ministers of Jesus ever have a testimony in their consciences, that they seek not the properties, but the souls, of their hearers!

Let us attend to the humane genius of the Mosaic law, manifested in the precepts which relate even to the brutes. And remember, that it is the character, and should be the care of a merciful man, to extend mercy to his beast. Much more then let us shew compassion to our fellow-men. Let us not desire to enjoy the benefit of their labours, even in the lowest employments of life, without giving them some valuable equivalent. Let us bear towards all, the hearts of equitable and generous brethren, and constantly wish the prosperity and happiness of the human family. On the whole, may there be between the teachers, and those who are taught by them, a continual intercourse of benevolent affections, and friendly actions; as becomes those who stand in such an endearing relation to each other, and have, as Christians, the honour of being intimately related to that blessed Redeemer, who sought not his own things, but ours, and hath thereby laid the strongest engagement upon us, if we have any spark of gratitude and honour, not to seek our own things, but his?

SECT. XVII.

The apostle illustrates the condescension and tenderness of his conduct towards the Corinthians, in declining to accept of their contributions; and speaks of his self-denial under a very expressive simile, taken from those who contended in those Grecian games with which they were familiarly acquainted. 1 Cor. IX. 15, to the end.

1 CORINTHIANS IX. 15.

SECT.
XVII.1 Cor.
IX. 15.

I HAVE thought it my duty, in the foregoing discourse, to plead the natural and the evangelical rights which the ministers of the gospel have to be maintained by the people, to whose spiritual edification they give their time and labours. But you well know that I myself during my abode among you, have used none of these things; nor have I written thus, that if, according to my purpose and hope, I ever should visit you again, it should hereafter be so done unto me. I think of the generous and self-denying part, which I have acted among you, in declining, for some particular reasons, to take a maintenance, with a pleasure so great, that I may even say, [it were] better for me to die for want of the necessary supplies of life, than that any man among you should make this my boasting void, by having it to say, that I have eaten his bread, and been supported at his expence. For if I preach the gospel, after what hath happened in my singular case, I have no [matter of] boasting in that, for, having received such a commission, how could I refuse! I may say, a kind of invincible necessity lieth upon me, and woe to me indeed, If I preach not the gospel. To decline a work, assigned to me by so condescending an appearance of Christ, when with malicious rage I was attempting to destroy his church, would be an instance of ingratitude and obstinacy, deserving the most dreadful and insupportable condemnation. If indeed I do this voluntarily, and shew upon every occasion a cordial willingness to do it, I have indeed some room to expect a reward, but if I do it unwillingly, as I said before, a dispensation is intrusted to me, and I must of necessity fulfil it. What then is that circumstance in my conduct, for which I may expect a reward of praise

1 COR. IX. 15.

BUT I have used none of these things. Neither have I written these things that it should be so done unto me: for it were better for me to die, than that any man should make my glorying void.

16 For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel!

17 For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward: but if against my will, a dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me,

18 What is my reward then? verily that when I preach the gospel, pel, I may make the gospel of Christ without charge that I abuse not my power in the gospel.

19 For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more.

20 And unto the Jews, I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews? to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law.

21 To them that are without law, as without law, (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ,) praise from the mouth of my Divine Master? Surely this, that when I preach the gospel of Christ, I may render it unexpensive, that so I may be sure not in the least degree to abuse my power in the gospel to any low and secular purposes, or carry it beyond its due bounds. For in this respect, being free from all men, and under no obligation, in this manner, to give them my labours, I made myself the servant of all^a, addicting myself to the most fatiguing duties, that I might advance their happiness, and gain the more to true religion and salvation; in which I have found a noble equivalent for all I could do, or bear. And I not only submitted to preach the gospel without any reward, but I made it a constant maxim, to accommodate my manner of living to the way and relish of those about me; sacrificing my own humour and inclination; and that, in some instances, when I could not do it, without considerable inconvenience to myself: according, to the Jews, I became as a Jew^b, that I might gain over more of the Jews to Christianity: to those, I say, who were, or apprehended themselves to be, under the tedious ceremonies and disagreeable restraints of the Mosaic law, I became, as if I were still in conscience under the obligations of the law^c, though I knew it to have been abolished; and this, that I might gain those who apprehended themselves to be under the bond of that law. On the other hand, to those who were without the law of Moses, and either unacquainted with it, or apprehended themselves under no obligation to conform to its peculiar institutions, I behaved as if I had myself also been without the law, neglecting its ceremonial precepts, which I well knew to be superseded and abolished. [Yet] still taking care that

SECT.
XVII.
1 Cor.
IX. 15.

^a The servant of all.] This has a stronger sense than can easily be expressed in the paraphrase; and intimates, that he acted with as self-denying a regard to their interests, and as much caution not to offend them, as if he were absolutely in their power, as a slave is in that of his master.

^b To the Jews, &c.] Compare, for the illustration of this, Acts xvi. 3, chap. xxi. 21, &c. which instances were undoubtedly a specimen of many more of the like kind.

^c As if I were still under the obligations of the law.] This can only signify, that he voluntarily complied with it, as an indifferent thing; but it cannot by any means imply, that he declared such observances necessary, or refused to converse with any, who would not conform to them; for this was the very dissimulation, which, with so generous a freedom, he condemned in St. Peter, Gal. ii. 14, &c.

^d That

SECT.
XVII.

1 Cor.
IX. 21.

that it might appear both from my words and actions, that I was not without law to God ; but apprehended myself under a law of the most affectionate duty and gratitude to Christ, who came by new bonds to engage us to the strictest obedience. But these freedoms I used, and this moderation I manifested, not by any means for my own indulgence, but that I might gain those who are without the law^d, and make my ministry more agreeable and useful to such as were 22 educated among the Gentiles. I therefore became to the weak, as if I had been as weak and scrupulous as they, in the various articles of food and dress which might come into question, that I might gain upon the weak ; for the soul of the weakest appeared to me infinitely valuable ; and I have the warrant of my great Master to esteem it more precious than all the treasures of the world. In a word, I became all things to all men : accommodating myself to them, so far as with a safe conscience I could, that by any, or all means if possible I might save some : and it is the daily grief of my soul, that after all these efforts the number is so small.
 23 And this I do for the sake of the gospel, to promote its success to the utmost of my ability ; that I also may be a sharer in the generous pleasure arising from the communication of it.^e
 24 I may illustrate this, by referring to the games so well known in Greece ; and particularly to the Isthmian, so often celebrated among you at Corinth. Do you not know, that with respect to those who run in the stadium or foot-race^f, all indeed run, and contend with each other : whereas but one receiveth the prize?

Christ,) that I might gain them that are without law.

22 To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak : I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some.

23 And this I do for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you.

24 Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all, but one re-

Yet

^d That I might gain those without the law.] This seems to imply that the Gentiles not yet converted to Christianity, are here referred to ; unless gaining the person spoken of signifies, rendering them, "better disposed to regard his decisions," which is at most but a subordinate sense.

^e A sharer in the communication of it.] We render it, that I might be partaker with you, but as the words, with you, are not in the original, which is να συνηνῶσθε αὐτῷ γινώσκαι, I rather understand the words as referring to the satisfaction he found in imparting the invaluable and inexhaustible blessings of the gospel to all around him ; a sentiment most suitable to his character and office.

^f The stadium or foot-race.] On comparing the translation I had before made of this passage, with that of my learned and worthy friend Mr. West, (in his excellent Dissertation on the Olympic Games, p. 182, 190,) I had the pleasure to find a remarkable agreement ; but where there was any difference, I have generally altered what I had wrote, either in the version or paraphrase, to make it conformable to his : whose judgment, in any point of criticism, has with me great weight : but especially on a subject of which he appears to have been so eminent a master, that his writings upon it are as distinguished in their kind, as the games he so elegantly describes were in theirs.

^g One receiveth the prize.] It is true, that in some games there were several prizes receiveth the prize?

So run that ye may obtain.

25 And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things: Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible.

26 I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight,

Yet the uncertain hope, that each may be that one, animates them all to strain every nerve in the course. You have much greater encouragement to exert yourselves in the pursuit of celestial blessings. See to it therefore, that ye so run as that ye may obtain, and that ye lay aside every thing that would be an incumbrance to you, or render you incapable of dispatching the race with necessary vigour and alacrity.

And every one who contendeth in the games, whether in running, as above, or in wrestling, or combating, is temperate in all things^b; abstaining from whatever might enervate his strength, and submitting to a regular course of diet, exercise and hardship, that he may be the more capable of exerting himself with success. [And this] they indeed [do], that they may obtain a corruptible crown^c; a garland of leaves, that will soon wither and perish: but we are animated by the view of an incorruptible crown, the duration, and the glory of which, will be commensurate to the existence of our immortal souls.

It is no small pleasure to me, while I am exhorting you to this, to reflect that I am, through Divine grace, myself an example of the temperance I recommend. I for my part run not, as one who is to pass undistinguished^d; but knowing what eyes are upon me, and solicitous to prizes of different value; yet in those to which he here refers, there was but one for the victor, and the argument is very strong and striking.

^b Temperate in all things.] Whoever considers on the one hand, to what great self-denial, in articles of food, sleep, and every other sensual indulgence, they, who were to contend in their games, were obliged; and on the other, of how great importance it is, that the youth of a community, should be formed to a manly taste, and resolute self-government; will undoubtedly see the great national prudence of the Greeks, in the institution and support of these games; to which it is very probable their remarkable valour and success in war, during the best days of their several republics, might in some considerable degree be owing. See, for the illustration of the temperance here referred to, Elsner's excellent note on this text, and Elian. Var. Hist. lib. III. cap. 30. lib. X. cap. 2.

^c Corruptible crown, a garland of leaves, &c.] It is well known, that the crown in the Olympic games, sacred to Jupiter, was of wild olive; in the Pythian, sacred to Apollo, of laurel; in the Isthmian, or Corinthian, solemnized in honour of Palesion, of pine-tree; and in the Nemean, of smallage, or parsley. Now the most of these were ever-greens; yet they would soon grow dry, and break to pieces. Elsner. (Observ. Vol. II. p. 10.) produces many passages in which the contenders in these exercises are rallied by the Grecian wits, for the extraordinary pains they took for such trifling rewards; and Plato has a celebrated passage, which greatly resembles this of St. Paul; but by no means equals it in beauty and force.

^d I run not as one that is to pass undistinguished.] Τειχων αποδεδ; is to run unnoticed. But as some have explained it of "running without attending to the marks and lines which determined the path;" I have hinted at that sense. As for Heinsius's interpretation, who explains it "moving so slowly, as that he might seem to stand still," it is like many others, peculiar to that writer, quite insupportable: no one, in such a circumstance, could be said to run at all.

SUCT.
XVII.

1 Cor.
IX. 24.

26

to

SECT.
xvii.1 Cor.
IX. 26.

to gain the approbation of my Judge, and attending with diligence and care to the boundaries which are marked out to us, I exert myself to the utmost. *I so fight, not as one that beats the air*¹, who fights as it were with his own shadow, or practises a feigned combat; but as one who has a real and living enemy to contend with, and who knowing that his life and his all is in question, would strike sure, and not lose his blows upon empty air. Thus I allow not myself in a habit of indolence and luxury, but imitate on a much nobler occasion, and to a much greater degree, the self-denial of the combatants I mentioned above; I bruise and mortify my body^m, and bring it into such a degree of servitude as the superior interests of my soul require. And this I judge a most necessary precaution; lest after having served as a herald to others, and after having made proclamation of the glorious rewards to be attained, and endeavoured to animate their zeal in the pursuit *I should myself be disapproved*ⁿ of the great Judge, and finally declared unworthy of obtaining a share in them.

fight I, not as one that beateth the air.

27 But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast away.

IMPROVE-

¹ Beats the air, &c.] In order to attain the greater agility and dexterity, it was usual for those who intended to box in the games, to exercise their arms with the gavillet on, when they had no antagonist near them; and this was called σκιομαχία, in which a man would of course beat the air. But Bos has taken a great deal of pains in his note here, to shew, that it is a proverbial expression for a man's missing his blow, and spending it, not on his enemy, but on empty air.

^m Bruise and mortify my body.] Υπωπιάζω, properly signifies to strike on the face as boxers did; and particularly on (the ὕπωμα) the part of it under the eyes, at which they especially aimed. Hence it comes to signify a livid tumour on that part; and sometimes it is proverbially used for a face terribly bruised, mortified, and disfigured, like that of a boxer just come from the combat; as Bos has shewn at large, Exercit. p. 138, &c.

ⁿ Lest after having served as an herald, I should be disapproved.] I thought it of importance to retain the primitive sense of these gymnastic expressions. It is well known to those who are at all acquainted with the original, that the word καταξέω, expresses the discharging the office of an herald; whose business it was to proclaim the conditions of the games, and display the prizes, to awaken the emulation and resolution of those who were to contend in them. But the apostle intimates, that there was this peculiar circumstance attending the Christian contest, that the person who proclaimed its laws and rewards to others was also to engage himself; and that there would be a peculiar infamy and misery in miscarrying in such a circumstance. ἀδοκιμασία, which we render cast-away, signifies one, who is disapproved by the judge of the games, as not having fairly deserved the prize. Mr. Fleming, arguing that St. Paul knew his own sincere piety, and consequently might be assured of his future happiness, maintains that to be cast-away, here signifies, being judged unworthy of a part in the first resurrection. (Fleming's Discourse on the first Resurrect. p. 89.) But it appears to me much more natural, to refer it to the whole Christian reward; as it is certain God engages his people to persevere, by awful threatenings against apostacy, as well as by the promises of eternal life to those who continue faithful and constant.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET us learn, by the example of the apostle, a generous ambition of excelling in religion. Not of doing more indeed, than our duty, for we owe God our best, and our all; but abounding in it to the utmost, carrying our love, our zeal, and our obedience, to the highest degree we can attain, and preserving an honest readiness to know our duty, even in circumstances in which there might be some plausible excuse for overlooking it. In particular let the ministers of the gospel not think it much to their praise, to perform those services which it would be shameful and almost impossible for them to neglect; but labour to acquit themselves in the very best manner they can; shewing in the whole of their conduct, that they are not animated only, or chiefly, by secular motives, in the labours they bestow upon the souls of men.

They are peculiarly concerned to learn and imitate this con- 19--22 descension of the apostle, in becoming all things to all men, if by any means he might gain some. But they are not the only persons who are interested in this. It is the duty of every Christian, to endeavour to please his neighbours and brethren for their good; and it will be our wisdom, and happiness, upon such generous principles, to learn to govern and deny ourselves.

We are all called to engage in the most important race, in the most noble combat. The children of this world fatigue themselves for trifles, and exert the noble faculties of an immortal spirit, to purposes far beneath its dignity. But all is not vanity. Every 24--26 crown is not withering and corruptible. We have heard of an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. And whatever there was in the prospect to awaken these Corinthians, still remains to awaken and animate us. Let us therefore keep our eyes and our hearts fixed upon it, and be in good earnest in what we do; often looking to the marks which are drawn in the word of God; realizing to ourselves the certain existence, and formidable character, of our invisible enemies; suspecting especially ourselves, fearing the treachery of our own corruptions, and using all that mortification which may promote our spiritual life and usefulness.

Who would not tremble, how high soever his profession, or 27 office may be—who would not tremble, to hear St. Paul insinuate a supposed possibility, that after having preached to others, and made such animating proclamations of the heavenly prize to them, he might himself be rejected, as unqualified to receive it? Let us learn from it humility and caution; learn to watch against dangers,

SECT.
xvii.

gers, which will still surround us, as long as we dwell in this body; and rejoice in the guardianship of Christ, who will at length deliver his faithful servants from every evil work, and preserve them to his heavenly kingdom.

SECT. XVIII.

Farther to awaken that holy caution which the apostle had suggested in the preceding section, he here represents to the Corinthians, on the one hand, the privileges which Israel of old enjoyed, and on the other, the Divine displeasure which they brought upon themselves, by behaving in a manner so unworthy of them. 1 Cor. X. 1—13.

I CORINTHIANS X. 1.

SECT.
xviii.1 Cor.
X. 1.

I HAVE been urging you to run your Christian race with resolution and diligence; which you should the rather do, considering how fatally many of those miscarried who were once God's peculiar people, and favoured in a very extraordinary manner. Now this is so affecting a thought, that I must desire you, my brethren, to attend, while I farther illustrate it; for I would by no means have you ignorant^a of so instructive a history. You have, I doubt not, often heard, *that all our fathers, whom Moses the great lawgiver of our nation led out of Egypt, were all under the conduct of that miraculous pillar of cloud, and of fire, which did their camp so singular an honour; and they all passed through the sea, the power of God opening a way for them, while the mountains inclosed them on either side, and their Egyptian enemies were*² pressing hard upon their rear. And this was so wonderful and solemn an event, that I may say, they were all baptized in Moses, that is, initiated into the profession of that religion which he was to teach them from God, in the cloud, and in the sea: God did, as it were, solemnly receive them under protection, as his people;

1 Cor. X. 1.

MOREOVER, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea?

² And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud, and in the sea;

^a Would by no means have you ignorant.] Mr. Locke thinks, that when the Corinthians inquired about the lawfulness of eating things sacrificed unto idols, they might urge that they could not be mistaken for heathens, because they maintained an open profession of Christianity, holding communion with the church, by partaking of the sacraments, as well as other acts of worship; and that they might be exposed to ill-will, and ill-usage, if they did not sometimes comply with their neighbours. And he supposes the apostle had each of these ideas in view in what follows: it is possible he might.

3 And did all eat the same spiritual meat ;

4 And did all drink the same spiritual drink. (For they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them ; and that Rock was Christ.)

5 But with many of them God was not well pleased ; for they were overthrown in the wilderness ;

6 Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not people ; and they, by following his miraculous guidance, declared their dependance upon him, and entire subjection to him. And as they proceeded in their journey, they did all eat the same spiritual food, that is, the manna, which for its excellence is called angel's food, (Psal. lxxviii. 25,) and which was indeed an emblem of the bread of life that cometh down from heaven. And they did also all drink of what might be called, on the like principles, the same spiritual drink ; for they drank of that spiritual or mysterious Rock^b, the wonderful streams of which followed them^c through so many of their wanderings and encampments ; and that Rock was a most affecting representation of Christ, the Rock of ages, the sure foundation of his people's hopes, from whom they derive these streams of blessings, which follow them through all this wilderness of mortal life, and will end in rivers of pleasure at the right hand of God for ever.

It was the privilege of Israel as a people, to enjoy such typical blessings as these ; and yet it is plain, that God had no pleasure in the greatest part of them, for they were overthrown in the wilderness ; the whole generation that came adult out of Egypt was made to die there, and they sometimes died in such multitudes ; that the ground was overspread with carcases, as a field is in which a battle has been fought.

Now these things were types and figures to us, that we might learn wisdom at their expence, and not trust to external privileges, while we go in a course of disobedience to the Divine authority ; and particularly, that we might

^b The same spiritual meat—the same spiritual drink.] It is not necessary to understand by the same meat and drink, the same by which we christians are supported for this could not properly be said of any Israelites who were not true believers ; but the meaning is, that they all, good and bad, shared the same miraculous supply of food and drink.

^c That followed them.] It is objected, that " this stream did not constantly follow them ; for then they would have had no temptation to have murmured for want of water, as we know they did at Kadesh, in the circumstances so fatal to Moses ; nor would they have had any occasion to buy water of the Edomites, as they proposed to do. Deut. ii. 6." Mr. Mede justly answers, that perhaps the stream from the first rock at Rephidim failed, for a farther trial of their faith ; and at Kadesh God renewed the like wonder ; but that likewise might probably fail when they came to the uninhabited country of the Edomites ; which was not till near the end of their wandering. Mede's Diatrib. in loc. He there illustrates the similitude between Christ and this rock, in many other particulars ; but those mentioned in the pluraphrase seem the most material.—That the word was, imports here no more than signified, is extremely obvious ; and instances of the like use of it every where abound in scripture.

scilicet xvii.
1 Cor. X. 3.

SFCT.
xviii.1 Cor.
X. 6.

might not lust after evil things, and indulge ourselves in irregular and luxurious desires; as they also lusted after quails in contempt of the manna, and thereby brought the wrath of God upon them, and were consumed with pestilential distempers, while the meat was yet between their teeth. (Psal. lxxviii. 30, 31.) Learn therefore, by what they suffered, to cultivate that temperance and self-denial which I have just ⁷ been recommending to you. Neither be ye idolaters, as some of them [were] even while they yet continued at mount Sinai; as you know it is written, (Exod. xxxii. 6, 19,) with relation to the feast of the golden calf. The people sat down to eat and drink of the sacrifices which were offered to it, and then they rose up to play and dance^d in honour of this vain symbol of deity. And this naturally leads me to add another caution, no less suitable to your present circumstances than the former; neither let us commit fornication^e, or lewdness of any kind, as some of them in their idolatrous revels committed [fornication;] and particularly when they eat the sacrifices of Baal Peor, and offended with the Midianitish women; the sad consequence of which was, that there fell in one day twenty three thousand by the plague, besides those that were slain by the sword, who amounted to a thousand more. (Numb. xxv. 1—9. ⁹ Neither let us tempt Christ by our unbelief, after the tokens he hath given us to command our faith, and engage our dependance; as some of the next generation of them also tempted [him^f] while he resided among them, as the angel

^d To play and dance.] Dr. Whitby observes, that though many commentators understand this of fornication, it is without sufficient reason. Fornication is indeed spoken of in another clause, and that the very next verse 8, which makes it less probable that it is intended here. As the golden calf was designed as a symbol of Jehovah, there is no reason to imagine they would bring such an abomination into worship, however irregular, which was addressed to him. And Elsner, (Observer. Vol. II. p. 105.) has abundantly vindicated the remark of Grotius, that παίζειν, signifies to dance, a ceremony with which God himself had lately been honoured, (Exod. xv. 20.) and which, it is very probable, might naturally be at-not lust after evil things, as they also lusted.

⁷ Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them; as it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play.

⁸ Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand.

⁹ Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents.

tended with the shouts and songs which Moses heard on approaching the camp. Exod. xxxii. 17, 18.

^e Commit fornication.] This was common at many idolatrous feasts among the heathen; and it was the more proper for the apostle to caution these christians against it, as it was proverbially called the Corinthian practice, κορινθιαζειν, being, as many have observed, equivalent to scortatri. Strabo tells us, that in one temple of Venus at Corinth, there were no less than a thousand priestesses, who made prostitution a part of their devotions to the goddess, Strabo Lib. 11. cap. 16.

^f Tempt Christ as some of them tempted [him.] Though the word him be not in the original, it seems plainly to be implied;

them as the angel of God's presence; and were destroyed by fiery serpents. (Numb. xxi. 6.) from the venom of which others were recovered by that brazen serpent which was so illustrious a type of the Messiah. Neither murmur ye under dispensations of Providence, which may seem at present to bear hard upon you, and are contrary to your present inclinations and interest; as some of them also murmured again and again, and were destroyed by the destroyer, who was commissioned by one judgment and another to take them off.

SECT.
XVIII.

1 Cor.
X. 9.

10

10 Neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer.

11 Now all these things happened unto them for examples; and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come.

But let me remind you on the whole, as I hinted above, that all these calamitous things which happened unto them, were intended as types or examples to us, that we might learn what we are to expect in the like case; and they are written for our admonition, on whom the ends of the world are come^b; as we live under the last dispensation which God will ever give to the children of men, and with which the whole economy of their probation shall wind up. Therefore let me urge this improvement of the whole survey upon you, and upon all into whose hand this epistle may come, and say, let him that thinketh he standeth most securely, and who may be ready most confidently to trust in his own strength, take heed lest he fall so much the lower, in proportion to the degree in which he imagines himself out of all manner of danger.

12

12 Wherefore, let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall.

13 There hath no temptation taken you, but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye

It is true indeed, and it is matter of great comfort and thankfulness to reflect upon it, that *no temptation has yet taken you, but such as is common to man*ⁱ, and such as human reason, properly exercised on the principles of that revelation which you enjoy, may furnish you with motives to resist. And we have the pleasure farther to reflect, that [God] is faithful who hath promised^k to preserve his people, and he plied; and this is a considerable test in proof of his residence with the church in the wilderness, as the angel of God's presence. Compare Exod. xxiii. 20; Isa. lxii. 9; Heb. xi. 26; Acts vii. 58.

13

^g The destroyer.] The Jews generally interpret this of him whom they fancy to be the angel of death, and whom they call Sammael.

^h Ends of the world.] Τῆν αἰωνίαν properly signifies the concluding age, or the last dispensation of God to mankind on earth; which, if we believe the gospel to be true, we must assuredly conclude that it is.

ⁱ Common to man.] Ἀνθρώπων, may signify also, proportionable to human strength as well as frequent to human creatures; the paraphrase therefore imports that.

^k Faithful who hath promised.] Compare Psal. ciii. 13, 14. and numberless passages, in which God encourages his people to hope for his presence and help in pressing danger.

SECT. XVIII.
 he will not leave you to be tempted above your ability : but will with the temptation with which ye may be able to bear it.
 1 Cor. X. 13. he permits you to be assaulted, provide you also with a way of escape that if you be not wanting to yourselves, you may be able to bear [it:] yea, and may acquire new strength and honour by the combat.

IMPROVEMENT.

6—11 MAY Christians be always sensible how happy they are in having received such useful hints from the New Testament; to assist them in the interpretation of the Old; and particularly those which are here given. We see in Israel according to the flesh, an affecting emblem of the church in general. We see all their external privileges, though many and great, were ineffectual for their security, when they behaved as unworthy of them.

Alas! how affecting is the thought, that some who were under 1 the miraculous cloud, who passed through the waters of the divided
 2 sea, who eat of the bread that came down from heaven, and drank
 4 of that living stream which omnipotent mercy had opened from the flinty rock, and made it to follow them in the windings of their journey, should yet become, instead of being on the whole the objects of Divine favour and complacency, the monuments of wrath.

5 Let us not ourselves therefore be high minded, but fear. Let us mark the rocks on which they suffered this fatal shipwreck, if possible to keep clear of them; and pray that Divine grace may direct our course. Let us avoid not only those superstitious and idolatrous rites of worship, by which, as Protestants, we are in little danger
 7 of being ensnared; but also those lusts of the flesh, which must 8 considering our superior advantage, be highly displeasing to God; even though they should not rise to a degree of equal enormity and scandal.

9 Let us especially take heed that we tempt not Christ, who has graciously been pleased to take us under his conduct, and to honour his church with so many demonstrative tokens of his presence. Nor 10 let us murmur, if while we are in this wilderness state, we sometimes meet with difficulties in our way. Still let us make it familiar to our minds, that God adjusts the circumstances of every trial; even that God who stands engaged by the promises of his word as well as the equity and goodness of his nature, not to permit us to be tempted above what we are able to bear. If we see not an immediate way of escape, let us calmly and attentively look up to him, that he may pluck our feet out of the net.

SECT. XIX.

The Apostle farther pursues that caution against all approaches to idolatry, which he had been suggesting in the former section: particularly arguing from that communion which Christians had with Christ at his table, which ought to place them at the remotest distance from what might justly be called having communion with devils. 1 Cor. X. 14—22.

1 Cor. X. 14.

WHEREFORE my dearly beloved, see from idolatry.

15 I speak as to wise men: judge ye what I say.

16 The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?

1 CORINTHIANS X. 14.

I HAVE just expressed my confidence in the care of God to support you under any extraordinary temptation which may hereafter arise, to draw you out of the way of your duty: wherefore, my beloved brethren, being assured of this, let me exhort you carefully, to see from all approaches to idolatry, whatever circumstances of allurement, or danger, may seem to plead for some degree of compliance. I now speak as unto wise men; I use a rational argument, which will bear the strictest examination, and which I am willing should be canvassed as accurately as you please; judge you therefore what I say; for I will refer it to your own deliberate and cooler thoughts, whether there be not danger in those idolatrous participations which some of you are so ready to defend; and whether they may not naturally bring some degree of guilt upon your conscience?

ser.
XIX.
1 Cor.
X. 14.

The sacramental cup, which is to us both the commemoration of past, and the pledge of future blessing, which in the name of the Lord we solemnly bless^a, setting it apart to a holy and religious use; is it not the token of our faith and our communion in these inestimable privileges which are the purchase of the blood of Christ, shed for the remission of our sins? The bread which we break, and which was appointed in the first institution of the ordinance for this purpose, is it not the communion of the body of Christ in the like sense? That is, the token of our sharing in the privileges which he procured at the expence of sufferings, by which his body was broken,

16

^a Which we bless.] This text very plainly shews, that there is a sense in which we may be said to bless the sacramental elements. To render it, the cup over which, or for which we bless God, is doing great violence to the original. That is said to be blessed which is set apart to a sacred use, (Gen. ii. 3; Exod. xv. 1,) and on which the blessing of God is solemnly invoked.

SECT.

XIX.

1 Cor

X. 17.

broken, and almost torn in pieces. For we Christians being many, are yet, as it were, but different parts of one and the same broken bread^b, which we distribute, [and] receive, in token of our being members of one body; for we are all partakers of one kind of holy bread, and one cup, which we eat, and drink together at the same table, in testimony of our mutual and inviolable friendship, cemented in Christ our great and common head.

- 18 Consider how it is with Israel according to the flesh, the lineal descendants of those who were the chosen and peculiar people of God: are not they who eat of the sacrifices which have been offered in the court of their temple at Jerusalem, esteemed to be partakers of the altar of God, on which part of them have been consumed? And is not their eating the flesh of these victims esteemed as an act of communion with the Deity, to whom they were offered? Now you may easily perceive, that the same argument will be conclusive to prove, that they who share in the sacrifices presented to idols, knowing what they do, and especially doing it in some apartments belonging to the temples of such fictitious and detestable deities, by no means reconcileable with the sanctity of the Christian character, or the tenor of their sacramental engagements.

- 19 What then do I say, that an idol of wood or stone, of silver or gold, is in itself any thing divine? Or do I say, that the thing which is sacrificed to idols is in itself any thing morally and universally unclean? You well know, that I intend to maintain nothing of this kind.

- 20 But on the other hand, you must be aware, that what the heathens sacrifice, they sacrifice to evil demons, and not to God; such spirits, as those to which they address their devotions, must to be sure be wicked spirits, if they exist at all;

17 For we being many, are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread.

18 Behold Israel after the flesh: are not they which eat of the sacrifices, partakers of the altar?

19 What say I then? that the idol is any thing, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is any thing.

20 But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God: and I would

^b Of one bread.] Many valuable manuscripts read it, and of one cup. Elsner has an admirable note upon this text, to prove, that eating together in a religious manner hath been, in almost all ancient nations, a token of mutual friendship. See Mr. Lowman's Hebrew Ritual, p. 54, and Maimonides, quoted by him there. See more especially, Dr. Cuthworth's Discourses concerning the True Notion of the Lord's Supper, chap. i. and chap. vi. And it is certain also, as it is intimated below, that by sacrifices, and the feasts on them, they held communion with the real or supposed deity, to which they were presented; as the author of a discourse on sacrifices has shewn at large: but that this was the only end of all sacrifices, I cannot think that learned writer sufficiently to have proved.

would not that ye should have fellowship with devils.

21 Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils.

22 Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we stronger than he?

[I would not that ye should have communion with demons.] It is a monstrous notion of Olearius, that the heathens imagined the very substance and body of their deities insinuated itself into the victim offered to them, and so was united to the person eating the flesh of these sacrifices, Elsner, (Obser. Vol. II. p. 108,) has sufficiently confuted this his weak inference from some mistaken passages of Firmicus, and Jamblicus. But this learned and judicious critic has proved at large, from incontestible authorities, that the demons were considered as present at these sacrifices, and as taking their part with the worshippers in the common feast; by which means, as Maimonides expresses it, in a very remarkable passage, (More

all; and devils may well be supposed to use their utmost efforts to support such worship, it being grateful to them, in proportion to the degree in which it is affronting and injurious to the great Object of Christian adoration, and ensnaring to the souls of men. Now I would not by any means, that you who have at your baptism solemnly renounced the devil, and all his adherents, should in any degree have, or seem to have, communion with demons. And indeed this is most inconsistent with those solemn badges of your holy profession, by which your baptismal covenant is so frequently ratified and renewed. Ye cannot with tolerable decency and consistency, at one time drink of the cup of the Lord, in that holy rite in which you commemorate his death, and at another time of the cup of demons, of libations poured out in their honour, or cups drank at their feasts. Ye cannot surely think, you should be partakers of the table of the Lord, and go from thence to the table of demons, or from theirs to his, to share alternately in such holy and polluted rites and entertainments. Yet it is certain, that by partaking in their feasts, you do, as it were, contract a kind of friendship and familiarity with these infernal spirits

Do we, by such a conduct as this, deliberately mean to provoke the Lord to jealousy^d, by thus caressing those whom he abhors as his rivals? Must it not incense him exceedingly? and must it not, in its consequences, be detrimental, and even fatal to us? Or are we stronger than he? so as to be able to resist, or to endure the dreadful effect of his displeasure.

IMPROVE-

Nevoch. Part III. cap. 46.) Friendship, brotherhood, and familiarity, was contracted between them, because, "all eat at one table, and sat down at one board." The altar was called the table of the Lord, Mal. i. 12. Compare Deut. xxxii. 17. But then, as Dr. Cudworth hath shewn, we are not to conclude from hence, that under the gospel-dispensation, the table of the Lord is properly an altar; for the Lord's supper is not a sacrifice, but a feast upon a sacrifice, Cudworth on The true Notion of the Lord's supper, chap. 5.

[To jealousy, &c.] Alluding to the notion of idolatry, as a kind of spiritual adultery, which moved the jealousy of God. Yet every deliberate sin is in effect daring his omnipotent vengeance.

1 Cor. X. 20.

IMPROVEMENT.

SECT. XVIII.
VER. 22. Let us hear and fear: for it is the tendency of every wilful sin, to provoke the Lord to jealousy; it is a challenge to him²¹ as it were, to let loose the fierceness of his wrath. And alas, how can such feeble creatures as we, endure its terrors! Let the consideration urged by the apostle, to deter men from partaking in idolatrous sacrifices, be weighed by us, as extending to every thing whereby God may be dishonoured, and Christ affronted.

They who are Christians indeed, and partake of that feast which the blessed Jesus hath instituted in commemoration of his dying love, do herein partake of the body and the blood of Christ:
21 Let it be remembered as a pledge of everlasting obedience, since it is a memorial of infinite obligation: it shows that we belong to him, as his willing and peculiar people, that we renounce all his rivals, particularly Satan, and his kingdom, and whatever favours and supports his accursed cause. Let us be faithful to our allegiance, and have no more to do with any of these abominations.

17, &c. Let us also remember this as a pledge of everlasting peace and love; we are all one bread, and one body. Let us not envy and provoke, grieve and revile one another; but study mutual comfort and edification. And when little jealousies arise, and our secular interests seem to interfere, which may often be the case; let us open our minds to those exalted sentiments which our common relation to Christ tends to inspire; and let the sweet remembrance of the communion we have had with him, and each other in that holy ordinance, blot out of our minds the memory of every difference which might tend to promote disgust and alienation.

SECT. XX.

The Apostle gives more particular directions as to the cases and circumstances in which things sacrificed to idols might, or might not lawfully be eaten; and urges farther considerations, to engage them willingly to resign their own gratification in some instances, for the glory of God, and the good of their brethren,
1 Cor. X. 23, to the end. Chap. XI. 1,

I CORINTHIANS X. 23.

SECT. XX.

1 Cor. X. 23.

I HAVE said a great deal, to guard you against all approaches to idolatry. In answer to this, I know, it may be replied, that there are certain things which may accidentally lead to it,
and

1 Cor. X. 23.

ALL things are lawful for me, but all things.

things are not expedient : all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not.

and yet, being in their own nature indifferent, may be so used as to decline the danger. Granting it then, that all these things are lawful for me, I am persuaded, nevertheless, you will readily acknowledge, that all such things are not in every circumstance expedient. Granting, I say, that all these things, about which we have been discoursing, are lawful for me, yet it is undeniably apparent, that all things edify not; and I ought certainly to consider what may most effectually conduce to the edification of my neighbour, and of the church in general, as well as what may suit my own particular inclination, or convenience : for I may find good reasons for declining many things, as ensnaring to others, which, were I to regard myself alone, might be perfectly indifferent. Let no one therefore seek ²⁴ the gratification of his own humour, or the advancement of what may seem his personal interest ; but let every one pursue another's [welfare ;] endeavouring to enrich all around him in holiness and comfort.

ser.
xx.
1 Cor.
X. 33.

24 Let no man seek his own; but every man another's wealth.

25 Whatsoever is sold in the shambles, that eat, asking no question for conscience sake.

26 For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof.

27 If any of them that believe not, bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go: whatsoever is set before

Believe me, my brethren, I am desirous not ²⁵ to lay you under any unnecessary restraints. And therefore, whatever [flesh] is sold in the shambles ^a that I allow you to eat, asking no questions for conscience sake, that is, not scrupulously inquiring, whether it have, or have not, made a part of any idol-sacrifice. For as the ²⁶ Psalmist expresses it, (Psal. xxiv. 1.) the whole earth [is] the Lord's and the fulness thereof. All these things therefore are to be taken as they come to our hands, and used with cheerfulness and thanksgiving, as the common bounties of his Providence to his human creatures. And ²⁷ farther, if any of the unbelievers, who live in your neighbourhood, invite you ^b to his house, and you are disposed to go, eat whatever is set before you, at the entertainment ; not asking any quæ-

^a Sold in the shambles.] Herodotus observes, that the Egyptians, when they had cut off the head of their victims, used to carry the carcase to the market, and sell it to the Greeks, if they could find any to purchase it; if not, they threw it into the river, judging it unlawful to eat it themselves. Raphael, ex Herod. in loc. And though the Grecian priests had no such scruples, yet as they had often more flesh at their sacrifices than they and their families could consume, it was natural for them to take this method of disposing of it to advantage; and at times of extraordinary sacrifice, it is probable the neighbouring markets might be chiefly supplied from their temples.

^b Invite you.] That καλεω, often signifies to invite, Raphaelus (Annot. ex Xen.) has shown at large, but to conclude that it must generally be so rendered, is very unwarrantable.

SECT.
XX.1 Cor.
X. 28.

questions for conscience sake, but receiving it, whatever it be, as that supply which Divine Providence has then been pleased to send you. But if any one say to you, This food is part of what hath been sacrificed to an idol, eat it not ; both out of regard to him that shewed thee this circumstance ; whether he be an heathen, who may hereby be confirmed in his idolatry, or a brother, who may otherwise be ensnared by thine example, and tempted to violate the dictates of his own mind ; and, I may say, out of regard to conscience too ; for thou canst not injure thy brother in this respect, without subjecting thyself to some remorse on a serious reflection. And the scripture I mentioned before, may suggest a pertinent consideration here : for as the earth [is] the Lord's, and the fulness thereof^c, thou mayest reasonably hope he will provide for thee some other way, and mayest be assured, that he

29 cannot want the means of doing it. I say [for the sake of] conscience ; but I mean, not thine own immediately, but that of another person ; for how indifferent soever thou mayest esteem the matter, thou art obliged in duty to be very cautious that thou dost not wound and grieve that of thy brother : (but you will observe that I here speak only of acts obvious to human observation ; for as to what immediately lies between God and my own soul, why is my liberty to be judged, arraigned and condemned at [the bar of] another man's conscience^d ? I am not, in such cases, to govern myself by the judgment and apprehension of others, nor have they any authority to judge, or censure me, for not concurring with them in their own narrow notions

30 and declarations. For if I by the Divine grace and favour, am made a partaker of the common gifts of Providence, why am I reviled for my free and cheerful use of that for which I give God my humble thanks, as tracing it up to the hand of the great supreme Benefactor ?)

There-

^c The earth, &c.] Some good copies omit these words, yet they have so evident a propriety and beauty here, in contrast with verse 26, that I was by no means disposed to follow them.

^d Why is my liberty, &c.] Some think the meaning is, "Why should I use my liberty so as to offend the conscience of any?" Others think, it is an objection in for you, eat, asking no question for conscience sake.

28 But if any man say unto you, This is offered in sacrifice unto idols, eat not, for his sake that shewed it, and for conscience sake. For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof.

29 Conscience, I say, not thine own, but of the others : for why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience ?

30 For, if I by grace be a partaker why am I evil spoken of for that for which I give thanks ?

the mouths of the Corinthians, and to be thus understood, "but why should I suffer myself to be thus imposed upon, and receive law from any, where Christ has left me free?" I rather think, that this, and the 30th verse, come in as a kind of parenthesis, to prevent their extending the former caution beyond what he designed by it.

31 Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do,
do all to the glory of God.

Therefore, on the whole, to conclude this discourse; since no one particular rule can be laid down, to suit all the diversities of temper and apprehension which may arise, instead of uncharitable contentions with each other, or any thing that looks like mutual contempt, let us take all the pains we can to meet as in the centre of real religion; see to it then, that whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever else you do, in the common, as well as sacred, actions of life, ye do all to the glory of God, pursuing the credit of the gospel, and the edification of the church; that he may be honoured in the happiness of his creatures, and more universally acknowledged as the author of all good.

SECT.

XX.

1 Cor.

X. 31.

32 Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God:

In this respect, and in every other, see to it, 32 that ye be inoffensive, both to the Jews, who, you know, abhor every thing that looks like the least approach to idol-worship; and to the Greeks; and other unconverted Gentiles, who are so much attached to it, that they are willing to catch at all pretences of justifying themselves in the practice; and to the church of God, whether consisting of circumcised, or uncircumcised converts to Christianity, who would grieve to see the common edification obstructed, in instances wherein they themselves might not be endangered. Endeavour to follow, in this re- 33 spect, my example; acting as I also do, who study in all things to please all men, so far as I apprehend it for their real advantage; not seek- ing my own interest or gratification, but that of many that they may be saved by being brought to, and confirmed in, that religion on which their eternal happiness depends. In this grand and important consideration I lose every inferior view, as our great Lord and Master did; be ye therefore herein imitators of me, as I also [am] of Christ: and you will be in the way to please him, and to secure infinitely greater advantage from his favour, than you can ever be called to resign for the good of your brethren.

33 Even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved.

1 CORINTHIANS XI.
1. Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ.

1 Cor.

xi. 1.

IMPROVE-

[e Jews and Greeks.] As these are both opposed to the church of God, I conclude he speaks of unconverted Jews, or Greeks; and refers to the danger there might be of prejudicing them against Christianity, by the indulgences against which he cautions them.

IMPROVEMENT.

SECT. XX. WHAT exalted and generous sentiments are these? Well do they become every minister, yea every disciple of Christ!

Ver. What a glorious society would his church soon be, if each of its 23 members was actuated by them! not seeking his own things, but 24-29 those of others; not pursuing his own interest, but that of many, that they may be saved! Yea, how happy would each particular person be, in such a wise and tender care of the whole, beyond what the most eager and successful pursuit of a separate interest can render him!

Let us endeavour to steer in the due medium, between the op-25-27 posite extremes of an excessive scrupulosity and a presumptuous rashness; and attend to the various distinguishing circumstances which will demand a correspondent difference of conduct, in things which may seem to an inattentive eye much the same; 31 not thinking that attention and caution needless, by which the glory of our God, and the edification of our brethren, may be promoted. We may expose ourselves in consequence of this tenderness of conscience, to inconveniences, straits, and contempt; but let us commit all our concerns to that Divine Providence which 26--28 extends itself to all its works; and rejoice to think, that the earth is the Lord's, and all its fulness: out of which he will not fail to furnish necessary supplies to those who fear him, and are thus solicitous to preserve a conscience void of offence before him. But while we are strictly cautious ourselves, let us not be rash and severe in our censure of others, who stand, or fall, to their own master, and who may in some instances have reasons, to us unknown, for a conduct most different from ours.

O! that Divine grace may teach us all to govern our whole lives by this extensive important maxim: that whether we eat, or 31 drink, or whatsoever we do, we pursue the glory of God! Let us dignify and sanctify all the common actions of life, by performing them from these high and holy motives; and so turning them into sacrifices of devotion and love. Then shall we not only avoid 32 giving offence to others, but shall conduct ourselves in such a manner, as shall make us burning and shining lights in the world, and extend our sphere of usefulness far beyond that of our personal converse, and perhaps beyond the date of our precarious abode in this transitory world.

Thus glorifying our heavenly Father on earth, and finishing the work he hath given us to do, we may hope through his grace in Christ, to be glorified with him above, and to be brought to a brighter image of that Saviour, who has set us so perfect an example of the temper and conduct here recommended, which even the blessed apostle Paul followed only with unequal steps.

SECT. XXI.

The apostle sets himself to reform some indecencies which had crept into the church of Corinth; and particularly that of women prophesying with their head uncovered. 1 Cor. XI. 2—16.

1 Cor. XI. 2.

NOW I praise you, brethren, that you remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances, as I delivered them to you.

3 But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman, is the man; and the head of Christ, a God.

4 Every man praying, or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoureth his head.

1 CORINTHIANS XI. 2.

I HAVE just now exhorted you, my brethren, to imitate me, as I endeavour to copy the example of our blessed Lord. And while I am giving you such an exhortation, I ought to express my satisfaction in seeing many of you so ready to comply with it. I praise such of you therefore, that in all things you are mindful of me, and strenuously retain the charges I gave, as I committed [them] to you. But as to your inquiring concerning the manner in which women should deliver any thing in public, when they are by a Divine impulse called to do it; I would have you to know, in order to regulate your judgment and conduct aright, that Christ is the head of every man; so that every Christian should often recollect the relation in which he hath the honour to stand to him, as an engagement to observe the strictest decorum in his whole behaviour. And if the different sexes be compared, the head of the woman is the man; to whom therefore she ought to pay a reverent respect, as in the Lord. And the head of Christ [is] God: Christ, in his mediatorial character, acts in subordination to the Father, who rules by him, and hath constituted him Sovereign of all worlds, visible and invisible. And as the Father's glory is interested in the administration of Christ, so is the glory of Christ in some measure interested in the conduct and behaviour of those men whose more immediate head he is; and I may add, of those women whose heads such men are.

Now, upon this principle, I may say, in reference to the usages which prevail at this time in your country; every man, praying or prophesying, in a public assembly, whether he give forth inspired psalms or hymns, or utter predictions, or common instruction; if he do it with [his] head covered, acting therein contrary to the received rules of decency among us, he in a degree,

1 Cor. XI. 2.

SECT.
XXI.1 Cor.
XI. 5.

degree, dishonours Christ his head^a, as behaving unworthy his relation to him. And on the other hand, every woman, praying or prophesying, under such inspiration as above, with [her] head unveiled, dishonoureth man, who is her head, by behaving in such a manner as is indecent in an assembly consisting of so many men as are usually present on these occasions : for I may say, that it is in this respect the same as if she were shaven : shaving her head is only taking off the natural covering, and exposing it bare ; which is so shameful a thing, that you know it has often been inflicted as a proper kind of punishment, on women of the most abandoned character ; and it is scandalous, that any thing like this should be used in your Christian assemblies ; and this too, by persons pretending to extraordinary characters and assistances. I may therefore say, if a woman will not be veiled, let her even be shorn ; but if it be apparently shameful for a woman to have her hair shorn, or shaved off, let her keep as far as possible from so disagreeable an appearance ; and have her head covered with a proper veil, at the times, and in the circumstances of which we now speak.

7 For a man indeed ought not to have [his] head covered as being the immediate image and glory of God : and made in his likeness as the first copy of its kind, before woman was created. It is decent therefore, that he should appear with the marks of that superiority which he indeed bears : but the woman should forbear it ; and it is enough to say of her, that she is the glory of the man : to whom God hath done no inconsiderable honour, as well as favour, in making so excellent and amiable a creature for his benefit and comfort. Yet still her state of subjection to him should be remembered, and it is very expedient she should appear in public with some tacit acknowledgment of it. For the man

5 But every woman that prayeth, or prophesieth, with her head uncovered, dishonoureth her head : for that is even as if she were shaven.

6 For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn : but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered.

7 For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God : but the woman is the glory of the man.

8 For the man is not

^a Every man praying, &c. with his head covered, dishonoureth [his] head.] It was certainly (as Dr. Whitby, and others, have proved,) the custom among the Greeks and Romans, as well as the Jews, to appear in worshipping assemblies with their head covered ; and it is certain the Jewish priests wore a kind of turban, when ministering in the temple. But it seems, that the Corinthian men wore a veil, out of regard to Pharisical traditions, and in imitation of the custom prevailing in the synagogues ; which therefore the apostle disapproved. The women seem to have worn their hair dishevelled, when praying by Divine inspiration ; (which seems to have been the only case in which they could regularly pray in public :) this made them resemble those pagan priestesses, who pretended to be actuated by their gods ; the apostle therefore with great propriety discourages it.

not of the woman ; but the woman of the man.

9 Neither was the man created for the woman ; but the woman for the man.

10 For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head, because of the angels.

11 Nevertheless neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord.

^b Power on [her] head.] Mr. Locke acknowledges with a modesty which does him much honour, that he did not understand this text ; and many seem to have darkened it, by their attempts to explain it. But the chief difficulty does not lie in the word power ; which must, to be sure, be understood of a veil, which married women wore on their head, as a token of subjection to their husband ; (see Gen. xxiv. 65 ;) and Mr. Godwin, (Moses and Aaron, p. 236,) supposes the veil was in Hebrew called רַדָּד, (Radad,) from a root, רָדָד, (Radid,) which signified subjection ; so that the veil was, as it were, the habit by which a woman shewed she considered herself in subjection : and Chardin observes, that the married women in Persia wear a peculiar habit to the very same purpose. Chard. Pers. Vol. II. p. 187. It is much more difficult to ascertain the meaning of that clause, because of the angels. It seems neither reasonable, nor decent, to explain this of young ministers ; as if they were in peculiar danger of being man is not, in the first production of his nature, taken out of the woman ; but as we read in the sacred history, (Gen. ii. 21—23,) the woman out of the man. Neither [was] the man created for the sake of the woman, to accommodate and assist her ; but the woman for the sake of the man, that he might have a help meet for him, which before he found not in the whole creation. (Gen. ii. 20.) On this account therefore, as well as for the other reasons I have mentioned above, the woman ought to have upon [her] head a veil, as a token of her being under the power^b and subjection of the man : and so much the rather should she wear it in worshipping assemblies, because of the angels who are especially present there, and before whom we ought to be exceedingly careful that nothing pass which may be indecent and irregular, and unlike that perfect order and profound humility with which they worship in the Divine presence.

I have treated the matter with a plainness and freedom becoming my character ; nevertheless, let not any hints which I have dropped of the superior dignity of the man be abused, to render him haughty and tyrannical : for it is evident, that the man [is] not without the woman, nor the woman without the man, in the Lord. You know that the existence and comfort of either sex has insured by the beauty of women ; and it is more grossly absurd still to suppose with Tertullian, (de Vet. Virg. § 7,) that there was any room to apprehend it could be a snare to celestial spirits ; which mistake seemed to be grounded on the wild interpretation of Gen. vi. 2, so generally received among the fathers.) Dr. Whitby understands it of evil angels, and thinks it refers to the punishment which Eve incurred, (Gen. iii. 16,) for hearkening to the suggestions of Satan. A late ingenious writer by ἀγγελων, understands spies ; who he supposes came into Christian assemblies to make ill-natured remarks, and so would be glad to blaze abroad any indecencies they might observe there. (See Mr. Gough's Diss. in loc.) I have not room to canvass all these ; but only add in support of the sense, which, as least exceptionable, I have followed, that the presence of angels in religious assemblies is favoured by Eccles. v. 1, 6, and the figures of Cherubim in the tabernacle and temple.

Sacr.
xxi.

1 Cor.
XI. 9.

SECT.
XXI.1 Cor.
XI. 12.

has a dependance upon the other; which the genius of the Christian religion requires us to consider, and to behave in a manner correspondent to it. For as the woman [was] at first taken from the rib of the man, whom he ought therefore to love as a part of himself, and she to revere him, as under God the source of her being; so also, in the ordinary course of the Divine production, the man [is] by the woman; born, nourished, and in the tenderest years of life educated by her; a circumstance that ought to be ever most tenderly remembered, as a spring of grateful affection and regard. But let me add, that whether in the first creation, or the successive production of human creatures, all things [are] of God; whose constitution ought therefore humbly and obediently to be revered, and all the duties of relative life performed; as for his sake, and to his glory.

- 13 But with respect to the particular circumstance I was speaking of, I may leave you to judge of yourselves, whether it be, according to the usages generally prevailing among us, decent^c for a woman to pray to God with that masculine and confident air which she must have when her
- 14 head is uncovered: Or rather, doth not the sight immediately shock us, previous to any reasonings upon it in our own mind? So that nature itself seems to teach you, that on the one hand, for the man to have long hair solicitously adjusted and artfully adorned, is such a mark of an effeminate character, as is, on the whole,
- 15 a disgrace to him. Whereas, on the other hand, if a woman hath long hair spread over her shoulders, it is rather a glory to her; for her hair was given her instead of a veil, in the first constitution of her nature, and before the arts of dress were invented or needed.

- 16 Thus the matter appears to me, when I reflect upon the original; and the present state of things, and what seems from that to be the voice of nature. But if any one appears to be contentious, and will dispute this, upon his own different views of what is naturally decent, I shall not controvert it farther; but content myself with saying, that we have here no such custom,

12 For as the woman is of the man, even so is the man also by the woman; but all things of God.

13 Judge in yourselves: is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?

14 Doth not even nature itself teach you, that if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him?

15 But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her, for her hair is given her for a covering.

16 But if any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custom;

^c Judge whether it be decent, &c.] The Grecian women, excepting the feathered priestesses, used to appear in their veils, when they came into public assemblies; as we find in Homer, and many other ancient writers.

custom, neither the churches of God.

tom, for women to appear with their head uncovered; neither do I know of its prevailing in any of the other churches of God^d, whether planted by me, or any of my brethren. I think therefore that it ought to be avoided, as a singularity which may appear like affectation, and give offence, even if it be not judged a natural indecorum. And thus I leave the affair to your consideration; and promise myself, you will give me no farther cause of complaint on this head.

5 EPI. XXI.
1 Cor. XI. 16.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET Christians frequently remember the honourable relation^{Ver.} in which they stand to Christ as their head; and as beyond³ all dispute, he is, under his mediatorial character, most willingly⁴ and joyfully subject to God, let us learn to imitate him in that cheerful and entire subjection, out of love and reverence to him, guarding against whatever is unbecoming, lest he be dishonoured thereby.

By the passage before us, we see the force of custom for deter- 14, 16 mining, in many respects, what is decent, and what is otherwise. Let us maintain a proper regard to this; lest even our good should be, through our imprudence, evil spoken of, and all our infirmities magnified into crimes. Let us often recollect the original dignity of our nature, by which we are the image and glory of God: that, so far as by sin and folly this honour is lost, we may endeavour to regain it; and where it is not, may think and act more suitably to so high a relation.

When in any act of Divine worship, we have the honour to¹⁰ approach the blessed God, let us reverence his awful presence, and even that of his holy angels, who attend the assemblies of the saints. We pray, that the will of God may be done upon earth, as it is done in heaven: let us be careful to worship God in such a manner, that these celestial spirits, who ever appear before him with sacred awe, may not be offended at the rudeness and folly of sinful mortals; whom they may well wonder to see admitted, in their best estate, to this Divine privilege which they have forfeited by repeated provocations.

As

^d Nor any of the other churches.] Mons. Amyrant understands it in this sense, "The churches do not use to contend with me, but submit to my decisions;"

but the former clause, we have no such custom, will not admit this. The argument on the other interpretation is clear and strong.

a Com

SECT.
xxi.

As for what St. Paul observes of the mutual dependence which the sexes have on each other, let it dispose them to mutual candour and respect; avoiding the cruel tyranny, or the vain affection, which often arms them, on either side, with ungenerous reflections. And as all things are of God, let it be our concern, that all things be to him, that all things be faithfully employed for his glory; and whatever comforts we receive in relative life, which are indeed many and important, let us adore the wisdom of the Divine constitution in the original formation of our nature, and the secret influence and conduct of his Providence, in the regulation of our respective circumstances and affairs.

SECT. XXII.

The apostle, in order to reform several scandalous abuses of the Lord's supper, which had crept into the church of Corinth, leads back their views to the original institution of the solemn ordinance and infers from thence the danger of profaning it. 1 Cor. XI. 17, to the end.

I CORINTHIANS XI. 17.

SECT.
xxii.1 Cor.
XI. 17.

THUS you have my free sentiments of the manner in which women, even when most singularly honoured by God, should appear in your religious assemblies. But while I am giving you these instructions, I do not, and cannot praise [you,] as I would, on several accounts; and particularly on this, that when you come together in these assemblies, and on the most solemn occasions, there are such irregularities, and sometimes such indecencies among you, that your meeting is not for the better, but for the worse, as you lose more in religion one way ¹⁸ than you gain another. For, before I mention any other instance of this, I must observe in the first place, that when ye come together in the church^a, though it is so evident, that nothing but reverence to God, and love to each other, should reign on such occasions; I hear that there are schisms, or uncharitable, and angry divisions and disputes among, you, and I do, in some ¹⁹ respect, and in regard to some of you, believe it: For in the course of things, it is to be expected,

1. COR. XI. 17.

NOW in this that I declare unto you, I praise you not, that you come together not for the better, but for the worse.

18 For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be divisions among you, and I partly believe it.

19 For there must be also a Come together in the Church.] Some have urged this as an instance in which church signifies a building for public worship: and have urged also the 22d verse in the same view; but both may be interpreted of the assembly, as the paraphrase shews.

b There

also heresies among you, that they which are approved, may be made manifest among you.

pected, that there must be even heresies among you^b: contentions will arise to such a degree, that separations will ensue. The warmth of some tempers evidently leads to this; and Providence may probably permit it, that they who are of the most approved characters, may be made manifest among you, by the steadiness and candour of their conduct.

SCT.
XVI.

1 Cor.
XI. 19.

19 When ye come together there fore into one place, this is not to eat the Lord's supper.

It is particularly grievous to me, to be forced to complain of your irregular behaviour, while celebrating that most excellent and endearing ordinance of the eucharist: but I am compelled to do it; and therefore I tell you plainly, that when you come together in such a manner, as you do, into one place, under pretence of attending this grand solemnity; it is not eating the Lord's supper: it does not deserve to be called by that name. Instead of regarding it in a holy and religious view, you confound it with a common meal; and do not indeed behave in the manner that decency would require if it were no more than a common meal: for though you sit down at what, even in that case, ought to be a social and friendly table, yet each has his particular mess, and without offering a share of it, in an obliging manner to the rest, every one in eating greedily taketh before [the other] his own supper^d, both the food and liquor which he hath 21 For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper; and one is hungry, and another is drunken.

^b There must be even heresies.] It seems evident from hence, that heresy is spoken of as something worse than the schism mentioned above; but whether it be an evil entirely of a different kind, or only of a higher degree, is not so clear from this passage. I think, for reasons not here to be enumerated, that the word αἵρεσις signifies, a sect of people separated from others and forming what we call a distinct denomination; whereas there may be schisms, without separation, if people assembling together have uncharitable contentions with each other; which was the case of these schismatical Corinthians.

^c It is not eating the Lord's supper.] The Corinthians seem to have been guilty of two great faults in the matter here referred to, which St. Paul, in the following discourse, labours to reform:—The one, that they confounded the Lord's supper with the common meals they made together; (from whence the love-feasts were afterwards derived; thinking it sufficient, (as the Quakers now do,) if they mingled some thoughts of Christ's death, with this common use of bread and wine:—The other, that they used such a rapacious behaviour at these feasts, and treated one another so rudely and unkindly, as on their own principles would have been very indecent: This latter circumstance is finely illustrated in a passage from Xenophon. Memor. lib. 3, cap. xiv. § 1.) in which he observes, that Socrates was much offended with the Athenians for their conduct at their common suppers, as some prepared delicately for themselves, while others were but slenderly provided for. That worthy man endeavoured to shame them out of this low taste, by offering his provisions to all the company. See Grove hath with great propriety mentioned a passage from Socrates the ecclesiastical historian, (lib. v. cap. 22.) in which he speaks of some Egyptians living near Alexandria, who partook of the sacrament in a very peculiar manner, (as it seems much after the Corinthian fashion,) introducing it with a jovial feast, in which they regaled themselves with all kinds of food. See Grove on the Sacrament, p. 108.

^d His own supper.] This monstrous and to us unaccountable circumstance, is

SECT.
xxii.1 Cor.
XI. 21.

hath provided; and so while one poor brother, for want of suitable provisions, is hungry, another eats and drinks to excess^e; which would in all circumstances be a scandal to a Christian, and especialy to a religious assembly, as this certainly ought to be.

22 What a reproach is this to your common profession? Give me leave to ask you, have you not houses to eat and to drink in on common occasions, that you must come to the place of public worship thus to entertain yourselves there, which is certainly in all views very ill-judged? Or do you despise the church of God, which you must greatly offend by such a conduct as this? and at the same time shame those that have not provisions and accommodations of their own, and might hope at your common meals to be relieved? What shall I say to you, on this occasion? Shall I praise you in this [respect?] I wish I could fairly and honourably do it; but at present, I praise [you] not; I must rather blame you, and exhort you to amend what is so grossly amiss.

23 And that my admonitions and exhortations may come with the greater weight, let me lead back your thoughts to the original institution of this profaned and affronted ordinance; which if you reflect upon, I am sure you must be heartily grieved at the indignities you have offered it, and will be engaged to resolve, you will never repeat them. Now I am able to speak of this matter with great certainty and exactness: for my knowledge of it did not depend upon any human tradition whatsoever; but I received by special revelation from the Lord^f Jesus Christ himself,

22 What, have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye the church of God, and shame them that have not? what shall I say to you? shall I praise you in this? I praise you not.

23 For I have received of the Lord, that which also I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus, the same night cleared up by what is said above of the social suppers used among the Greeks; to which each brought his own provisions, which were not always made so common to the whole company as decency and friendship might have required.

^e Drinks to excess.] The word μεθυσεν has this signification in a great latitude; but one would hope, that though the Jews and heathens were often intoxicated in their religious festivals, these Christians, imprudent and irregular as they were, did not carry their excesses so far; and therefore I chose to soften the version. Compare Vol. I. p. I, 154 note k.

^f I received by especial revelation, &c.] This epistle seems to have been written before any of the Gospels; and it seems to be intimated, Gal. i. 17, &c. that when he wrote it, he had seen none of the apostles. It is very remarkable, that the institution of this ordinance should make a part of that immediate revelation with which Christ honoured him; and it affords a strong argument for the perpetuity of it in the church. For had others of the apostles [as Barelay presumes to insinuate,) mistaken what passed at the last pass-over, and founded the observation of the eucharist on that mistake, surely Christ would rather have corrected this error in his new revelation to St. Paul, than have administered such an occasion of confirming Christians in it. For some notes which might have been inserted here, see Vol. II. sect. 172.

nicht in which he was betrayed, took bread :

himself, that which I also delivered to you, in my former preaching on this subject, in which, as in all things else, I have been careful most exactly to adhere to my original instructions. And you know the substance of it was this, That our Lord Jesus Christ, the very [same] night in which he was betrayed, and amidst all those serious thoughts which his own nearly approaching sufferings must suggest, after he had finished the paschal supper, took bread, some of the remainder of those unleavened cakes with which that solemn feast is celebrated; And having in 24

STU-
XXII.
1 Cor.
XI. 23.

24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me.

a most reverent manner, given thanks to God, the great Author of all temporal and spiritual blessings, and looked up to him for his blessing upon it, for the purposes to which it was going to be appropriated, he brake [it] into several pieces, and distributing it to his disciples who were present, said, Take this bread, and eat it with due reverence and regard; for this is the solemn representation of my body which is just going to be broken, by the most bitter pains and agonies, for you and your salvation; this therefore do in all the succeeding ages of my church, as a commemoration of me: that the memory of my painful death may be kept up in the world, and your hearts, and those of all my faithful followers, be properly affected with the review of it. In like manner also [he took] the cup: 25 which, you well remember, was after he had supped; so that it was by no means a part of that meal they had been making, but something quite distinct from it: and he likewise distributed that to them as he had done the bread; saying, This cup is the solemn seal and memorial of the new covenant, which is established in my blood, by which all its invaluable blessings are derived to you. This likewise do, as often as ye drink [it] in commemoration of me, and in order to maintain the memory of my bleeding dying love to the church and the world. You therefore, as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup,

25 After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me.

26 For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink

[This do, &c.] Because the word communi-cations, in some few instances, is sacrifice, Dr. Bret would render it, sacrifice this: whence he infers, that the eucharist is a sacrifice. And a learned prelate in the council of Trent, pleaded, with much the like judgment, that when Christ uttered these words before the cup, he ordained them priests; whereas he gave them bread as thanks. See Lat. Paul's the Council of Trent, p. 100.

Therefore, as often as ye eat of this bread, and drink of this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come. Luke xx. 28.

[Eat this bread, &c.] It is no w

SECT.
XXII.

1 Cor.
XI. 26.

do indeed perform a very solemn and important action ; for, according to his own interpretation and institution, you shew forth, and as it were proclaim, the Lord's death in its most affecting circumstances ; which the church must throughout all ages continue to do, until he come^k to close the present scene of things, and to receive all his faithful servants to a place, where, for ever dwelling with him, they will no more need these memorials of an absent Saviour. So that you see, by a farther consequence, whosoever shall eat this bread, or drink^l [this] cup of the Lord unworthily, that is, in an irreverent manner, without a due regard to him, and to the great original purpose of its appointment, shall be counted guilty of profaning, and affronting in some measure, that which is intended to represent the body and blood of the Lord ; and consequently the affront does evidently rebound to our Lord himself, who was pleased with infinite condescension, for our sakes, to assume human flesh, and to suffer in it.

- 27 Let none therefore come to the ordinance in a rash and irreverent manner ; but let a man examine himself as to his knowledge of its intent, and his desire to comply with its great design ; and so let him eat of the sacramental bread, and drink of the cup which is used with it. For he that eateth and drinketh in an irreverent, profane, and unworthy manner^m, must certainly dis-drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death, till he come.

27 Wherefore, whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.

28 But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

29 For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnatext in which this element is so plainly called bread after consecration, should be urged against the Popish doctrine of transubstantiation. And it signifies little for them to plead, that the scripture sometimes calls things changed, by the name of the thing out of which they were made, (as Adam is called dust, Gen. iii. 19 ; Aaron's serpent, a rod, Exod. vii. 12 ;) or calls them according to their sensible appearance, (Josh. v. 13 ; Mark xvi. 5 ;) for these instances rather turn against them, by proving, that where the literal interpretation is evidently absurd, we must have recourse to the figurative.

^k [Until he come.] Nothing can be more unreasonable, than to refer this, (as the Quakers do,) to the time when Christ should come, by his spiritual illumination on their minds, to take them off from carnal ordinances ; for, not to insist upon it, that we have at least so much need of the Lord's supper, as the primitive Christians had, (not having so many advanttages as they, to keep up the memory of Christ in our minds, to quicken us to holiness, and to unite us in love,) it is evident, the grand coming of Christ by the Spirit was, when it is poured out on the day of pentecost ; an event, which had happened many years before the date of this epistle.

^l [Eat, or drink.] So it is in the original, καταβητε ; nor could our translators surely be under any temptation to render it, eat and drink, to elude the argument drawn from hence for communion in one kind only ; since, as that excellent French preacher, Mons. Superbille observes, (Ser. Vol. IV. p. 245,) it might as well prove that the cup may be received without the bread, as the bread without the cup. So that it is surprising assurance in a late Popish writer, to plead from hence, that communion in one kind only was the practice of the Corinthian church. See Mod. Controv. p. 100.

^m [In an unworthy manner.] To receive to damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body.

displease and provoke God; so that it may truly be said, that he *eateth and drinketh judgment to himself*³⁰: he takes the readiest way to bring down the judgments of God upon him, not distinguishing the Lord's body, nor making that proper difference which he ought to make between that and common food.

SECT. XXII.

I Cor. XI. 29.

30 For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep.

And accordingly many of you have actually³⁰ brought such judgments upon yourselves; and I must plainly tell you, it is upon this account, and to manifest the Divine displeasure against you for such shameful irregularities, that God hath sent distempers among you, so that many of you [are] now weak and sick, and some considerable numbers of your society are fallen asleep in death. Survivors therefore ought to lay the matter seriously to heart, and set about an immediate reformation. *For if we would judge ourselves*³¹ with a due severity and impartiality, we should not surely be so severely judged, and unadverted upon by God. *But when we are thus*³² judged, it is not in a displeasure wholly inexorable, but with kind designs of paternal goodness; and we are corrected of the Lord, that we may not be condemned with the impenitent world, and consigned over to final and everlasting destruction.

31 For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged.

32 But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world.

33 Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another.

Therefore, my brethren, in one word, *when*³³ ye come together to eat in those feasts which frequently precede the administration of this ordinance among you, wait decently and respectfully one for another, till the whole assembly be convened. And if any one be so hungry, that³⁴ he cannot conveniently stay till that time, let him to purposes of faction, or intemperance, was receiving very unworthily; but the sense of that phrase must extend to every manner of receiving contrary to the nature and design of the ordinance; and consequently, to the case of doing it merely in a secular view; which I heartily pray that all concerned in it may seriously consider.

34 And if any man hunger, let him eat at home;

[Judgment to himself.] I think it the most unhappy mistake in all our version of the Bible, that the word καταδικαζομαι is here rendered damnation. It has raised a dread in tender minds, which has greatly obstructed the comfort and edification they might have received from this ordinance. The apostle afterwards says, we are judged, (that is, as he afterwards explains it, we are corrected;) that we may not be condemned;

which plainly shews, the judgments spoken of might be fatherly chastisements. This sin, as sin, does indeed expose us to condemnation, should God be extreme to mark it, as an irreverent behaviour under any other ordinance does; but it is supererogatory to set this at so vast a distance from all the rest, as many do.

[Judge ourselves.] Διακρίνω, ver. 29, signifies to distinguish: here, κατακρίνω signifies, examine; that we may distinguish, and judge of our own character and fitness for the sacrament. Mr. Locke justly observes, that he is little attentive to St. Paul's writings, who has not observed, that he often repeats a word he had used before, though in a sense something different from the preceding.

SECT.
XXII.
I Cor.
XI. 34.

him eat at his own house; or at least take a kind of antepast, that may prevent any inconvenience arising from a little necessary delay; that you may not come together to your condemnation, and in such a manner, as to provoke the judgment of God against you. It may suffice to have said thus much, for the present, on this subject; and what remains farther to be adjusted, I will regulate when I come to Corinth; which if Providence answer my hopes, and succeed my schemes, will be in a little time.

home; that ye come not together unto condemnation. And the rest will I set in order when I come.

IMPROVEMENT.

WHAT just matter of thankfulness to our blessed Redeemer, does that account of the institution of the sacred supper afford us, which St. Paul assures us he received immediately from ^{Ver.} ²³ him. Let us often reflect it was in that very night in which he was betrayed, that his thoughts so compassionately wrought for our comfort and happiness; when it might have been imagined, that his mind would be entirely possessed with his personal concerns, with the doleful scene of his approaching sufferings. We learn from this account, the perpetuity, as well as the great leading ²⁶ design, of the ordinance. We shew forth the Lord's death, and we shew it forth till he come. If we do indeed desire to preserve the memory of Christ's dying love in the world, if we desire to maintain it in our own souls, let us attend this blessed institution; endeavouring by the lively exercise of faith and love, to discern, and in a spiritual sense, to feed upon, the Lord's body. Nor let any humble and upright soul be discouraged, by these ²⁹ threatenings of judgment, to the profane sinners who offered such gross affronts to this holy solemnity; affronts, which none of us are in any danger of repeating. These scandalous excesses, when they pretended to be worshipping God on this great occasion, might justly provoke the eyes of his holiness, might awaken the ³² earn of his indignation. Yet even these sinners were chastised, that they might not be finally and for ever condemned.

Let not any then be terrified, as if every soul that approached the ordinance without due preparation, must by necessary consequence, seal its own damnation. Thus to attend the table of the Lord is indeed a sin; but, blessed be God, not a sin too great to be forgiven. Let those therefore, who, though they feel in their heart v Let him eat at his own house.] Mr. Amyrant and Mr. Crodock, (Apost. Hist. p. 174.) understand this, as a prohibition of love-feasts; but I think it evident from antiquity, they were retained in the church long after; though dubious whether they prevailed so soon.

hearts a reverential love to Christ, yet have hitherto refrained from attending this feast of love, be engaged to come; to come with due preparation, and self examination, as to their repentance and faith, their love and obedience; then may they, with the most hearty welcome from the great Lord of the feast, eat of this bread, and drink of this cup, receiving it as the memorial of Christ's body broken, and of his blood shed for the remission of our sins. Through that blood alone, let us seek this invaluable blessing, without which indeed, nothing can be a solid and lasting blessing to us: and let us, on every occasion, treat our brethren with a tenderness and respect becoming those who have considered ourselves and them, as redeemed by that precious blood, and indebted to it for the hopes of everlasting salvation.

In a word, let us never rest in the external rites or exercises of worship, how decently and regularly soever performed; but look to our inward temper, and to the conduct of our minds, if we desire to maintain their peace, and that our coming together should be for the better, and not for the worse.

SECT. XXIII.

The apostle comes to treat on spiritual gifts; and introduces what he had farther to say concerning them, by observing, that various as they are, they all proceed from the same sacred Agent, and are intended for the edification of the same body, in which all Christians are united. 1 Cor. XII. 1—13.

1 Cor. XII. 1.
 NOW concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.

2 Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb

1 CORINTHIANS XII. 1.

IT is now time I should proceed to speak something concerning those spiritual [gifts] with which God hath been pleased so abundantly to bless you, my Corinthian brethren; and as to the right use and improvement of which, I would not by any means have you ignorant. Upon this head you in the general know, that during your natural state, before the cheering rays of the gospel broke in upon you, ye were heathens, without any knowledge of the true God, and carried by a blind implicit credulity after dumb idols; which were so far from being able to bestow on their votaries any supernatural endowments, by which they might be enabled to speak extraordinary truths, or in languages before unknown, that they were themselves destitute of the common powers of speech, or any capacity of perception and action. Yet you were

SECT. XXIII.
 1 Cor. XII. 1.

SECT.
XXIII.I Cor.
XII. 2.

were blindly enslaved to the worship of such stupid forms, degrading as it evidently is to the rational nature of man; [just] as you were led by the artifices of your priests, who found their account in your delusions. And I hope therefore you will always remember, that the unmerited goodness of God in bestowing such gifts on persons who could pretend so little claim to them, lays you under a lasting obligation to use them in a most dutiful and grateful manner.

- 3 And therefore^a I hope you will not allow yourselves to despise any of your brethren, on account of their deficiency in them: since there is an important sense in which they may all be said to have been enriched by Divine and supernatural influences. For I give you to know, and desire you to admit and retain it, as a principle equally certain and weighty; that, as no one, speaking by the Spirit of God, calleth Jesus accursed; and consequently all pretences made to the Divine Spirit by the Jews are notoriously false and detestable; so, on the other hand, no one can sincerely say, [that] Jesus [is the] Lord: none can embrace his religion, and support the profession of it in truth, but by the powerful operation of the Holy Ghost on his heart; and therefore, as you are all in a sense spiritual, it would dumb idols, even as ye were led.

3 Wherefore, I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God, calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.

^a Therefore.] The force of this particle ergo, seems to be this; I am careful to give you the following hints concerning spiritual gifts, because in proportion to the degree in which God hath magnified his grace in calling you from idolatry to such extraordinary privileges and endowments, I am solicitous you may be preserved from abusing them, and engaged to improve them in the wisest and most faithful manner.

[Called Jesus accursed.] Mr. Nathaniel Taylor, (on Deism, p. 60, 61.) thinks this refers in general to the test put on Christians, by their persecutors, that they should not only deny, but blaspheme Christ. This the Gentiles indeed required, (see 1st Cor. Epist. x. 97, Euseb. Eccles. Hist. iv. 15.) But I rather think this refers to the Jews, who while they uttered blasphemies against Christ themselves, (1 Tim. i. 10.) and extorted them, if possible, from those they apprehended to be his disciples, (Acts xxvi. 11.) pretended to the gifts of the Spirit, by which they undertook to cast out devils; and perhaps they might imitate some of the exorcisms which Christians under the operation of the Spirit performed. Such a caution might therefore be very useful. (Compare 1 John iv. 1—5, which seems nearly parallel to this passage.) Dr. Owen pertinently observes, that the Jews sometimes call Jesus ישו, instead of ישוע; concealing their blasphemy under the three initial letters of the words, יסוהו שמו ונברו, which signify let his name and memory be blotted out; which is equivalent to Anath ma, or let him be accursed. Owen on the Spir. p. 3.

^c Sincerely say, [that] Jesus [is the] Lord.] Chrysostom well observes, this phrase of saying, that Jesus is the Messiah, must be supposed to proceed from true faith in him; and the expression is used to import a man's being a true Christian, because such strong temptations lay against professing Christ under this character, that they who maintained this doctrine were in heart real believers; though there might be a few excepted instances. This seems as plain a proof as could be desired, that true faith is the work of the Spirit of God upon the heart. See The third letter to the Author of Christianity not founded on a sunset, p. 54—56.

SER.
XXIII.
1 Cor.
XII. 3.

4 Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit.

5 And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord.

6 And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all.

7 But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

8 For to one is given by the Spirit, the word of wisdom; to another, the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; would be highly unreasonable, that the greatest should despise the least, on account of any distinction which may have been made in his favour; especially, when you consider who is the great Source of all. Now there are diversities of gifts, in different persons, but there is one and the same Divine Spirit, from whom they are all derived; And though there are diversities of administrations^d, there is one and the same common Lord, who appoints his ministers under their distinct offices, and gives them their powers, their ability, and their success. And though there are diversities of operations and effects produced, yet it is one and the same God who worketh all these effects in all the persons concerned; and they can pretend to nothing more than being the subjects, or at most, the instruments of his almighty and universal agency.

But to every one of his believing servants, who are thus honoured, is given, according to his wise and holy distribution, a manifestation of the Spirit: (for that our portion of gifts may properly be called :) and this in such a degree, as is most agreeable and profitable for the interest of the whole; that all may harmoniously carry on the great design of glorifying God, in the edification and happiness of the whole body. For to one, for instance, who is placed in the highest rank of the Christian church, is given by the Spirit, the word of wisdom; a comprehensive view of that grand scheme in which the wisdom of God is so wonderfully displayed, that even angelic intelligences are continually admiring it: to another, by the same Spirit, such lower degrees of it, as may be called the word of knowledge^e; whether respecting the meaning

^d Diversities of administrations.] Calling them, administrations, or services, (ὑποτάξεις) was a gentle manner of reminding them of the great design of these gifts; and so of reproving those who perverted them to contrary purposes.

^e Word of wisdom—and of knowledge.] There are, perhaps, few texts in the New Testament more difficult than some in this chapter, and in the sixth of this epistle, relating to the extraordinary gifts then in the church; which were at that time so well known, as not to need explication; and it is a noble instance of the genuine simplicity and modesty of the apostle, that he did not expatiate on so grand a subject with any unnecessary parade. I think the late Lord Barrington, and after him Dr. Benson, have made it highly probable, that the word of wisdom was that extensive plan of Christianity which was revealed to the apostles by the Holy Spirit. See Barrington, Misc. Sac. Essay i. p. 39—41. Benson, Proba. of Christianity, Vol. I. p. 40—46. But that the word of knowledge was, as they, after Dr. Whitby, assert,

SECT.
XXIII.I Cor.
v. 11. 9.

meaning of the Old Testament, or other things in the Christian plan, which may render them superior to most of their brethren; though inferior to the class I mentioned above. To another is given such an extraordinary faith† by the same Spirit, that he can commit himself to the Divine protection in the midst of the extremest dangers; and is thereby qualified courageously to assert the truth of the gospel, in the very face of its most violent persecutors: to another, the gifts of healing, by the same Spirit, in consequence of which, while under its operation, he can by a word, or a touch, remove the most inveterate diseases. To another, the working of miracles‡ of a different kind, such as taking up serpents, drinking any deadly draught unhurt, and especially the ejection of demons: to another the gift of prophecy; whereby he shall be able exactly to foretel some contingent future event; to another, the discerning of spirits, so as authoritatively to determine by what impulse any one speaks, who pretends to inspiration; or to be capable of pronouncing on the sincerity of men's professions, or their fitness for any public work to be assigned to them; to another, the gift of speaking; with various kinds of tongues, which he had never had the natural means of acquiring: and to another, the no less useful, though less splendid endowment, which we distinguish from the former, by calling it the interpretation

9 To another, faith, by the same Spirit; to another, the gifts of healing, by the same Spirit;

10 To another, the working of miracles; to another, prophecy; to another, discerning of spirits; to another, divers, assert, (Misc. Sacr. ibid. p. 42—45, and Bens. ibid. p. 46—48.) an extraordinary ability to understand and explain the Old Testament, and especially its prophecies, I do not think equally apparent. Perhaps it might be a lower degree of the word of wisdom. See Mr. Chandler on Joel, p. 133—137. In confirmation of which opinion, it may be observed, that when wisdom and knowledge, (חכמה and דעת,) are mentioned together, wisdom is generally put first, as most excellent. Compare Eccles. i. 16; chap. ii. 26; Isa. xxxiii. 6; chap. lvi. 10; Col. ii. 3. And it is well known, that the highest orders of teachers in Israel were called anciently, חכמים, wise men. See Deut. i. 15; chap. xvi. 19; 1 Cor. i. 20. Mr. Saunier explains knowledge of a discerning of mysteries; such as the appearance of Christ to change the scints found alive, the re-establishment of the Jews, the man of sin, the beast, &c. Saur. Sem. Vol. VI p. 11.

† Faith.] Faith, as an extraordinary gift, in this connection, must in the general signify, “a firm persuasion of being called out by God, at any particular time, to perform some miracle, and accordingly going about it without any suspicion or fear, in confident dependence on a correspondent Divine interposition.”

‡ Working of miracles.] It is difficult to distinguish this from faith, as explained above. Some understand it of some very extraordinary miracles, such as taking up serpents, drinking any deadly draught unhurt, curing diseases by a shadow passing over the patient, &c. Compare Mark xvi. 18; Acts v. 15. But I rather think, with Mons. Amyrant, (in his excellent Paraphrase,) that ἐπισημαίνω δυνάμειν, may refer to the dispossession of demons, or debarring persons over to them. This gift, and that of healing, might be comprehended in faith; but perhaps in some instances, it might work only in the one or the other of these effects.

divers kinds of tongues to another, the interpretation of tongues.

pretation of tongues^b; in consequence of which a person shall be able to understand, and render into a known language, that which is spoken by a foreigner, in a tongue, with which neither he himself nor the other hearers have been acquainted. But the one and the same almighty APPT.
FIND.
1. 10.
XII. 10.

11 But all these worketh, that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

Spirit worketh all these diversities of gifts, dividing unto every one severally as he thinketh fit^c; his wisdom fixes the scheme, what this variety should be; and his sovereign pleasure determines, why they should be imparted to such and such particular persons, rather than to 12 For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ.

others. The variety, I say, is wisely appointed: for as the body is one, and yet hath many members, but all the members of that one body, many as they are, constitute one body, united in one well regulated system; so also [is] Christ, that is, the whole society of which Christ is the 13 For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.

Head; and for the whole of which he may, as it were, be put, being indeed all and in all.

For by, and according to the operation of one Spirit, we Christians are all baptized into one body, whether we be originally Jews or Greeks, whether slaves or freemen; the religion we before professed, whether true or false, the rank which we now hold in life, whether high or low, makes no difference as to the grand point; our union with the body is the same; and the same happy consequences follow from that union. And this in particular, that we are all made to drink into one Spirit^k; as we drink of the same sacramental cup, so we do by our communion with Christ, whose blood is represented by it, all imbibe the influences of the same Spirit, by which the Divine life was at first produced, and is continually preserved. I say, we have all imbibed it; as the whole body may be said to imbibe the wine, which enters in at the mouth, and descends to the stomach; yet it is not intended for the benefit of those members alone, but of the whole; so in like manner, the body is not one member, but many; yet

14 For the body is not one member, but many.

SO

^b To another, the gifts of tongues.—to another, the interpretation of tongues.] For the farther illustration of these clauses, and the interpretation here given, see the notes on chap. xiv. 28.

^c As he thinketh fit.] Eccl. i. does not so much express arbitrary pleasure, as a determination founded on wise council.

^k Drink into one Spirit.] Mr. Locke thinks St. Paul refers to the sacramental cup, rather than the bread here, because the wine is more spirituous, and in a lively manner represents the animating effects of Christ's blood, and the Spirit communicated by it.

SECT.
XXIII.
1 Cor.
XII. 14.

so united, that the Spirit, imparted to one, is designed, whether in its miraculous operations, or sanctifying influences, for the benefit of the whole.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. LET us thankfully acknowledge the Divine goodness, that we 2, have not been led on after the example of our Pagan ancestors, to the vain worship of dumb and stupid idols; but have been taught from our infancy, to adore the living Jehovah. May we, in the most solemn and consistent manner, say, That Jesus is the
3, Lord! And while our actions speak our regard to him as such, may it appear, that our hearts are under the influences of the Spirit of God, by which alone men are brought to that Divine temper.

Let us often reflect upon those glorious attestations which were given to the truth of our holy religion, by that diversity of gifts and operations with which its first teachers were furnished and 4, &c. adorned. Let us thankfully receive their testimony, and thereby set to our seal, that God is true. And let a view to that great design, in which all these wonderful things centre, engage us to study more a union of heart, with all who in every place call on the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. In him Greeks and Barbarians, bond and free, are united. His glory therefore let all unanimously seek; and while his name is blasphemed by the ignorant and malignant, who cannot bear the purity of that religion which he teaches, may it so be defended by us, as at the same time to be exemplified and adorned.

SECT. XXIV.

The apostle, farther to enforce that humility in the use of their spiritual gifts, and that mutual affection which the Corinthians so much needed to be farther taught, goes on, in prosecution of the allegory used above, to represent christians as so united in one body as to have entirely the same interest; and insists on a tender care of the least member, from its subservience to the good of the whole.
1 Cor. XII. 15, to the end.

I CORINTHIANS XII. 15.

SECT.
XXIV.
1 Cor.
XII. 15.

IT is of the highest importance, in your present circumstances, for the honour of God and your comfort and edification, in the use of the gifts with which God hath endowed you, that I should farther illustrate and enforce the observation

1 COR. XII. 15.
IF the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of
the

the body : is it therefore not of the body ?

observation I have just been making, that the body is not one member, but made up of the conjunction of many, which have various offices and purposes. None can therefore complain of its own situation, as if it were insignificant ; nor should any despise another, as unworthy of regard. As to the first of these, if the foot should say, Because I am not the hand, but am placed in the lowest order, rest upon the ground, and am often covered with dirt, therefore I am not of the body ; is it indeed for this, not any part of the body ; or would it have reason to represent itself, as, on this account, an out-cast ?

SECT.
XXIV.
1 Cor.
XII. 15.

16 And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body ; is it therefore not of the body ?

And if the ear should say, Because I am not so visible, so beautiful, so useful, as the eye, therefore I am not of the body, is it indeed, for this reason not of the body ? Is it not a very important and useful part ? Yea, is not the body far more perfect, in consequence of the foot, and the ear, being what they respectively are, than it would be, if each of them were another hand, or another eye ? For if the whole body [were] 17 as it were, an eye ; and a man could look at will, through every pore ; where [were] the hearing, that important sense, which admits so much pleasing entertainment and improvement ?

17 If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing ? if the whole were hearing where were the smelling.

And if the whole [were] hearing, where [were] the smelling, a sense which though less important than the former, is not destitute of its proper delight and its proper use ? But now we see, that God, the great and wise Creator, hath placed the various members every one of them in the body, as he hath seen fit ; and his imitable contrivance, and overflowing goodness ; is glorified in their variety, and in their arrangement. But if they all were one member, or the 19 18 But now hath God set the members one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him.

19 And if they were all one member, where were the body ?

members all of one form and use, where [were] the body ? How could it possibly subsist ? What a monstrous thing would such a detached member be, if it could be supposed to exist alone ? Or if each member were to be transformed into that which might in itself seem most noble, how ruinous to the whole would such a transformation be ? But now, as [there are] 20 many members, there is in the union of them all, but one harmonious regular body, furnished for 20 But now are they many members, yet but one body.

* If the whole body [were] an eye, &c.] The apostle by this intends probably to insinuate, that, were there no other gifts in the church but those which they so much extolled in some of their teachers, it would be a very great disadvantage to the body.

° If you

SECT.
XXIV.
1 Cor.
XII. 21.

for the various animal functions, and capable of a variety of sensations and actions. And no one of them ought to despise any of the rest; for the eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee; since by the hand the body is maintained and fed, and the eye itself preserved and defended. And again, the head, elevated as it is, and so admirably furnished with all the nerves and organs planted in it, [cannot say] to the most distant and extreme parts, even the feet, mean as their form and office seems, I have no need of you; since by means of them, the head, and all the other parts of the body, are supported, and removed from place to place.

22 But it may farther be observed here, agreeably to the point which I have now in view, that the members of the body, which appear to be weaker^b than the rest, and perhaps are most delicate and tender in their structure, are more abundantly necessary; so that without them the animal functions can by no means be discharged.

23 And so likewise with respect to those which seem to be the more ignoble and dishonourable [parts^c] of the body, those we surround with more abundant honour^d and those which seem our uncomely [parts] have, by virtue of the dress we put upon them, more abundant comeliness than most

24 of the rest. For our comely and graceful [parts] have no need of being so adorned, as they appear to greater advantage uncovered; but God hath so tempered the several parts of the body together, as to give a more abundant honour to that which is so formed, as rather to appear deficient; for by making the meanest part thus necessary, he hath entitled it to the care of

25 the noblest: That so there might be no schism in the body, no division of separate interests; but [that] all the members might have the same care of 21 And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you.

22 May much more, those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary.

23 And those members of the body, which we think to be less honourable, upon these we bestow more abundant honour and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness.

24 For our comely parts have no need but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lacked;

25 That there should be no schism in the body; but that the members

^b Appear to be weaker.] Some think this refers to the brains and bowels, which are very tender, and liable to many disorders. Others understand it, of the least muscular parts or veins, arteries, and other minute channels in the body; the least obstruction in which would be fatal. If more feeble, be put for less noble; it suggests a very obvious and important sense, relating to the channels by which nature has provided for throwing off the dregs; which dishonourable as they may seem, are so necessary, that if they be obstructed, intense torment and inevitable death must ensue.

^c Our dishonourable parts, &c.] It seems as if he had said, the face, on which the image of God is particularly stamped, we leave uncovered; but as for those parts, which decency, or custom teaches us to conceal, we contrive not only to cover, but also as far as we conveniently can, to adorn by covering.

^d We surround with more abundant honour: ἵνα: τιμῶν περισσεύσας περιβήματι.] Our version by no means expresses the force of the Greek idiom here.

members should have the same care one for another.

26 And whether one member suffer; all the members suffer with it: or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it.

27 Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular.

28 And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.

of each other, as being each an important part of the whole. So that if one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; and are concerned to remove the complaint; or if one member be honoured and adorned, all the members rejoice with it: the ornament of one part being looked upon as that of the whole.

Now to apply this to the purpose for which I introduced it: you are all the body of Christ, and members [each] in particular. And as God hath placed some members in more eminent stations in the body; so also some Christians in the church. He hath placed in the first rank, apostles; who are honoured with an office of the highest distinction, and furnished with endowments peculiar to themselves. In the second place, are ranked prophets; whose business it is to foretel future events, or to speak by immediate inspiration, for the edification of the church. In the third, teachers, of a more ordinary kind, afterwards, those who are endowed, upon some particular occasion, with [miraculous] powers, then the gifts of healing diseases by anointing the sick with oil, and praying for their recovery. Besides these, he has endowed some with such extraordinary activity and sagacity, as may fit them to be helpers in the management of charities; others are qualified by their prudence to be governments, by whose advice, the affairs of societies may be steered and conducted in the safest and happiest manner; there are also wonderful operations, by which men are taught [different] kind of tongues, which they had never learned by any human methods. Now as the offices of the church are different, the gifts by which men are fitted to discharge them, are proportionably so. [Are] all the members

29 Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all

* If one member suffer, &c.] Bos, in his Exercises on this text, has collected many parallel passages from Seneca, and other heathen writers.

[Helpers—governments, &c.] I think, we can only guess at the meaning of these words; not having principles on which to proceed in fixing them absolutely. I have inserted what seemed to me most probable in the paraphrase. The Author of Miscellanea Sacra thinks, much light is to be derived by comparing verses 8—10, with verses 28—30, the order in one text corresponding with that of the other; but the order of the same words differing in the two places demonstrates the contrary. I have met with no remark here, which seems more pertinent than that of Mons. Annyrant; who thinks, that the same persons might possess many of these gifts, and sustain several of these characters, which were not stated distinct offices; and might be called helpers, in reference to their great dexterity and readiness to help those in distress; and governments, in regard to that genius for business, sagacity in judging the circumstances of affairs, and natural authority in the councils and resolutions of societies, which rendered them fit to preside on such occasions.

SFCT.
XIV.1 Cor.
XII. 29.

members or ministers of the church, apostles ?
Yea, [are] all, who are subordinate to them, prophets ? Or, [are all that sort of inferior teachers, whom I observed to stand in the third class ? [Have] all those [miraculous] powers, all teachers ? are all workers of miracles ?

- 30 Or, to instance only in one of the lowest of them, have all the gifts of healing diseases, in that extraordinary manner in which some have effected it ? Yea, do all speak with tongues which they have never learned ? Or do all others find themselves able to act in that lower sphere I spoke of before, and to interpret into their native language, or any other, what has been uttered in 31 a tongue to them generally unknown ? These things are well worthy your consideration : but instead of attending to them, ye contend earnestly about the best or most shining gifts^b, envying and it may be, detracting from the superior endowments of others. Yet I shew you a way of the highest excellence, to which it will be your greatest wisdom carefully to attend.

30 Have all the gifts of healing ? do all speak with tongues ?
do all interpret ?

31 But covet earnestly the best gifts :
and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver.
18

THE wisdom and goodness of God, as displayed in the for- mation of the human body, is a subject that well deserves our attentive reflection, and humble acknowledgment. All its sever-20 ral parts are useful to the whole ; and the most noble cannot upbraid the meanest as an incumbrance. Each has reason to rejoice in its own situation, as well as in the addition of all the rest ; and were the lowest placed higher than it is, it would become useless, burdensome, and monstrous.

Let us acknowledge the same hand in the wise subordination appointed in civil societies, and in the church of Christ. Let none be discouraged at the low station wherein they are fixed, but rather let all acquiesce in the prudent and gracious disposal of
the

g Are all apostles ? &c.] It appears that this invidious temper was not extirpated from among the Corinthians even by this just and lively expostulation ; for Clemens Romanus, writing to them many years after, complains of its continued prevalence, as leading them to neglect a due regard to those presbyters, who were according to Divine direction fixed among them, and to throw them out of their episcopal office. See Clem. Epistle to the Cor. Sect. 44.

h Ye contend earnestly about the best gifts, &c.] I doubt not but this is the just rendering of ζηλοῦτε τα χρισματα τα κριβιτερα : for it seems quite contradictory to suppose, that after the apostle had been shewing them, that these gifts were not at their own option, and that they ought not to emulate the gifts of each other, nor to aspire to superiority ; he should in effect unsay all again, and give them such contrary advice, the supreme Lord, and apply themselves to their proper functions. Let each member consider all the rest with pleasure; and rejoice with thankfulness, in the health and vigour of the other parts, making the proper use of them, and communicating in return its proper services. If any be weak, let all strengthen it. If there be any blemish and imperfection in any part, let all the rest tenderly cover it; unless when a regard to the health and happiness of the whole, requires that it should be laid open, and searched 23 in order to its being cured. And upon the whole, so far as we can prevent it, let there be no schism in the body. Alas, that there 25 should be so many breaches and contentions! Let us lament them; let each in his place endeavour to heal them; and unite in a sympathizing care of one another. So shall we best express our regard to our common Head; so shall we, in the remotest consequences, best consult our own interest and honour.

Blessed be God, that he hath, in his church, given not only 23 apostles and prophets, but also pastors and teachers! Adored be that bounty with which he hath scattered down his gifts, whether ordinary or extraordinary, on the children of men. Let all be used, not to the purposes of ostentation, but of edification. And let us be desirous of those whereby we may bear most of the image of Christ, and may most promote the great design for which he visited this low world of ours, and was pleased to unite his church unto himself, and its several members to each other, in such dear and indissoluble bonds.

SECT. XXV.

To engage the Corinthians to cultivate charity, as more excellent and important than any of those gifts about which they were so ready to contend, the Apostle gives a most lovely description of it, which he concludes with a reflection on its perpetual duration in which it exceeds even the graces of faith and hope. 1 Cor. XIII. throughout.

1 Cor. XIII. 1.
THOUGH I speak with the tongues
 of

1 CORINTHIANS XIII. 1.

I HAVE been urging you to pursue something more excellent than any of those gifts about which some among you have been so ready to contend; and I have recommended it as a more excellent way. That of which I speak, is the incomparable and Divine grace of LOVE; which indeed is not only of the highest excellence, but of absolute necessity. For if I were

SECT.
XXV.1 Cor.
XIII. 1.

to

SECT.
XXV.1 Cor.
XIII. 1.

to speak with all the variety of tongues^a which are used among all the nations of men, and were capable of employing them even with the eloquence of angels, and knew their ecclesial dialect; but have not love^b to God and my fellow-creatures, be my strains of discourse ever so harmonious, or ever so sublime, I am become but sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal^c, at best but like an instrument of music, and hardly worthy to be compared to an instrument of the nobler kind. So little delight would any of my most pompous performances give to God, or to any of his most valuable creatures, who should know that love was wanting, that I might as well think to recommend myself to acceptance, by the noisy clank made by brazen instruments, ²in the worship of Isis or Cybele. And if, besides those gifts of tongues and eloquence, I have that of prophesying, so as to foretel the most distant and important future events; and know all these mysteries which have hitherto been concealed from the most penetrating and illuminated eyes: or have all the exactest knowledge of religion, or any other object that can be supposed the subject of my inquiries; and if, joined with this, I have all the most miraculous faith^d, by virtue of which I should be able to produce effects that might amaze the whole world, so as to remove mountains from their basis, to transport them from one part of the earth to another, and to change the whole face of nature with a word; but with all these wonderful endowments, have not love, simple as that principle is, and comparatively mean as it may be esteemed, yet for want of it, I am nothing^e in the

of men, and of angels, and have not charity. I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

² And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.

^a Speak with the tongues, &c.] Dr. Whitby shews, by a great many admirable quotations, both from Josephus and the Jewish rabbies, how much each of these things was regarded by the Jews, which St. Paul here speaks of as absolutely of no avail without charity.

^b Have not love.] Αγαπη is not so properly rendered charity. It must here be taken in the noblest sense, for such a love to the whole church, and the whole world, as arises from principles of true piety, and ultimately centers in God.

^c Tinkling cymbal.] Mr. Locke very justly remarks, that as a cymbal was made of two pieces of hollow brass, which being struck together made a tinkling, with very little variety of sound; St. Paul chose to instance in this, rather than in a harp or flute, or any other more harmonious instrument of music. See Commentar. de Cymbalis, at the end of Fortuita Sacra.

^d Most miraculous faith.] As it is here supposed that this faith might in fact be separated from love; it cannot signify the same, as in the epistle to the Romans: where it is such an assent to a Divine declaration as produces a suitable temper and conduct.

^e I am nothing.] A person so eminently favoured by God, as this description supposes, yet destitute of true piety and benevolence, must be very contemptible, and justly odious.

5 And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

the sight of God, and have in reality no true worth and excellence. And I may farther add, that no external act of charity, or of zeal, will signify any thing, if this inward principle, which should be the life of all, be wanting; for if I distribute all my goods in alms for the sustenance of the poor, and deliver up my body to be burnt in defence of religion itself, and do it from a secret design of human applause, and ostentation of charity, or of piety; but have not in the sight of God that love to which I make so high a pretence, I shall receive no advantage by it; but in the day of final account, my Judge, instead of applauding and rewarding me as a saint and a martyr, will condemn me as a wicked and vain-glorious hypocrite.

SECT.
XIV.
1 Cor.
XIII. 5.

4 Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up.

Indeed the properties of this love which I am now recommending, are such, that one would imagine the description of them should be enough to charm the whole world to pursue it. Sufficiently must that shew how happy it renders the soul, which is under its influence, as well as how amiable such must be both to God and man. For love suffereth long injuries [and] provocations, without being transported into rage, or instigated into revenge. On the contrary, under all this ill-usage it is gentle and kind. Love envieth not the advantages which others enjoy; but rather takes pleasure in them, and by friendly participation makes them its own. Love is not insolent and overbearing^f, does not act with such precipitancy and rashness as pride and ill-nature often hurry men into; but engages us with tenderness to look round on those about us, lest we should by any means harm them before we are aware. Love is not presently puffed up with arrogant self-conceit, on account of any distinguished station, or peculiar endowment, which a man may possess; nor outwardly boasteth of these things, or inwardly overvalueth itself upon them. Love doth not behave indecently^g,

5 Doth not behave itself

^f Is not insolent, &c.] The Greek word ἐπιθυμῶ, from whence the verb here used is derived, signifies rash and inconsiderate, so that the word must here import, "one that acts with such precipitancy and inconsideration as pride and ill-nature often hurry people into," which charity would preserve them from, and induce that tenderness and caution which engages us to look about us, that we may do ourselves, and others, no harm.

^g Does not behave indecently] I cannot read this passage without thinking of the venerable Mr. Hale's story of the lancet concealed in a sponge, in order to open an imposthumated part without giving any alarm to the patient who dreaded the operation. There is great reason to bein a manner unbecoming a person's station, age or circumstances. Love seeketh not her own things, but makes all reasonable concessions in any point of self interest, where any superior interest of others is concerned. Love is not exasperated, and thrown into bitter and implacable resentments, even where the usage it meets with is most apparently unjust ; and where the intention is dubious, it imputeth not evil ; but puts the kindest construction upon the action itself, or the principle from whence it proceeds, which the nature of circumstances may by any means allow. Love rejoiceth not at iniquity ; it takes no pleasure to see an adversary fall into a crime by which his reputation should be blasted, and his interest ruined ; but on the contrary, it rejoiceth with others in the truth, and is pleased, when its greatest enemies behave themselves in a manner agreeable to the word of God, and the reason of things. Far from delighting to blaze abroad the faults of others, it covereth all things that are amiss, so far as it can lawfully conceal them : all, which benevolence to the public, or kindness to an individual does not require them to make known. It is not apt to suspect the integrity and veracity of others ; but rather, knowing itself to be sincere, believeth all things, so far as with the most candid allowances it rationally can ; and where it is constrained to confess, that many things are wrong, it is unwilling to treat the worst of mankind as utterly incorrigible ; but hopeth all things, and with that hope supports itself in every kind effort it can make for their recovery ; and as it is long-suffering with regard to human provocations, so from the hand of God it endureth all things, even the most sharp and heavy afflictions, acquiescing in his will, trusting in his care, and rejoicing, if its own sufferings may be a means of consolation and edification to others

SECT.
XXV.

8 And farther to recommend this excellent principle of love, give me leave to observe, that it is a grace which never faileth ; but will accompany and adorn us to all eternity, and indeed makes a very essential part of our preparation for the heavenly world ; in which it hath an apparent itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil.

6 Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth ;

7 Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

8 Charity never faileth ;

love, that in all this description, the apostle had in his mind that contrast to this beautiful character which was so prevalent among the Corinthians, as is evident from many passages in both these epistles eth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

rent advantage over many of those gifts which some are so ready to emulate and pursue, to the neglect and injury of love. But whether men admire prophecies, it is fit they should know they shall be abolished, when the faith of God's people shall no longer need to be encouraged, nor their devotion to be assisted, by such exhortations and instructions as are necessary now: or whether they boast themselves of the variety of tongues, they shall cease in those celestial regions: one speech and one language shall prevail among all the blessed inhabitants, and the languages of earth be forgotten, as too low and imperfect. Yea I may add, that a great deal of that knowledge, which we now pursue with the greatest eagerness, and which is very conducive to our present usefulness among mankind, shall then be abolished^b and superseded, as referring to things altogether antiquated and passed away; or swallowed up in discoveries so much clearer, stronger and more important, that it shall appear, in comparison of them, as nothing. For now we know but in part, and we prophesy but in part; there is a great deal of obvious imperfection, attending all our knowledge, and all the services we can here perform for God and for his church: But when that which is perfect is come, as in the

SECT.
XXV.
I Cor.
XIII. 8.

9 For we know in part, and we prophesy in part.

10 But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.

11 When I was a child, I spake as a child,

10 heavenly state it shall, then that [which is] only in part, shall be abolished: all these slow and unsatisfactory methods of obtaining knowledge, and all the little stock we have here laid up, shall be exchanged for the most extensive views of whatever it can be desirable to know, opening upon the mind in the most easy, clear, and delightful manner.

It shall indeed be like a state of adult age, 11 when compared with that of feeble infancy. Just as when I was a child, I spake as a child would naturally do, a few imperfect words, hardly at first articulate and intelligible, and often in themselves unmeaning; I was affected as a child, thrown into transports of joy or grief on trifling occasions,

^b Knowledge shall be abolished.] This cannot refer to all kind of knowledge; for the noblest shall be much improved. Some think it here signifies, that of Old Testament mysteries, which will be superseded in that world where scripture shall be of no farther use; and hence some have farther argued for that interpretation of the word of knowledge which was spoken of above. (chap. xii. 8) But the explanation given in the paraphrase, seems to be more natural and acceptable. To trace the gradual openings of the kingdom of glory scheme, through the various dispensations of God to the church, may be an important part of the celestial happiness.

SECT. XXV.
 I Cor. XIII. 11. occasions, which manly reason soon taught me to despise; I reasoned as a child, in a weak, inconclusive, and sometimes ridiculous manner. But when my faculties ripened, and I became a man, I put away the things of the child, and felt sentiments, and engaged in pursuits, correspondent to such advancements of age and reason. Such shall be the improvements of the heavenly state, in comparison with those which the most eminent Christian can attain here. For we now see the most noble objects of our intellectual view, *in an ambiguous and obscure manner, as we discern distant objects by means of a glass or mirror*ⁱ, which reflects only their imperfect forms, so that, (as when riddles are proposed to us,) our understandings are often confounded with the uncertain and indeterminate appearances of things. But then we shall see, not the faint reflection, but the objects themselves, face to face, in as distinct a manner as we could wish. Now I know [but] in part, and though the light of an immediate revelation from heaven has been imparted to me in many instances, and in an extraordinary manner, I am sensible how great a part is still kept under the veil. But then it shall be taken off, and I shall know, even as also I am known, in an intuitive and comprehensive manner; so that my knowledge shall bear some fair resemblance to that of the Divine Being, which, while our notices of things hover about their surface, penetrates to the very center of every object, and sees through my soul, and all things, as at one single glance.

13 And thus upon the whole it appears, and I hope you will remember and consider it; that there now abide these three most excellent graces, faith, hope, and love; each of them far to be preferred to the most shining gifts about which you can contend. But the greatest of these graces [is] love; which most directly transforms us into the image of God, and which shall continue to exert all its influence, when faith is superseded by sight, and hope by enjoyment.

child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things.

12 For now we see through a glass darkly: but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know, even as also I am known.

13 And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.

IMPROVE-

ⁱ By means of a mirror.] This is the exact rendering of ἡ ὀψιθία. It is well known, that the use of dioptic glasses in telescopes, did not prevail till many ages after the date of this epistle. And the Seventy use this word for the women's looking-glasses, or mirrors of metal, out of which Moses made the laver. Exod. xxxviii. 8.

IMPROVEMENT.

SURELY after having attentively surveyed the beautiful description which the apostle gives us of this Divine grace, love, it cannot be necessary that its cause should be farther pleaded. It speaks for itself; speaks to our very hearts. But O, who that enters into the description, must not mourn, that its angelic form is so much a stranger to multitudes who bear the Christian name! So that in many instances it can hardly pass uncensured; while those extremes which most evidently violate it, are often consecrated under honourable names, and men build much of their hopes of heaven, on breathing what is indeed the temper of hell. How many that stile themselves Christians, can endure no provocations, can cover no faults of their brethren, can keep themselves within no bounds, can believe nothing to their advantage, against whom, on party-principles, they have entertained prejudices! They vaunt themselves, they are puffed up with the conceit of their own wisdom, they behave unseemly, they seek only their own reputation and profit, they believe the worst thy can hear of others, and suspect more than they hear; they envy those whose endowments and stations are superior to their own, and instead of labouring themselves to excell, they affect by calumny and slander to bring down their brethren to their own level, or rather, as far as possible, below it. Alas, that the dictates of our Divine Master, and the genius of our religion, are so little understood, are no more regarded! and that we so entirely forget the precepts of Christianity, as not to remember even those of common humanity.

Yet surely, if these precepts are wholly forgotten, it is in vain that we remember, or contend for any of its doctrines and principles. As all languages and gifts, so all knowledge and faith, is vain, if it be separate from love, by which true faith always operates.

Let us cultivate love more and more; and so much the rather, as it is a plant of the celestial paradise; which will there for ever flourish, when tongues shall cease, and that knowledge, on which men value themselves highly, shall utterly vanish. The ripeness of adult age, and the knowledge of the most approved sciences, human or divine, is but as the trifling of an infant, when compared with that manly and perfect state after which we are aspiring. The dim mirror of faith shall then be laid aside; and the truth of the objects, now so imperfectly discerned, shall in full lustre be presented to our eye, purged from every film, and strengthened for a brightness which would now overwhelm it.

In

ser.
xxx.

Ver.
4, &c.

8—10

11

12

SECT.
XXV.

In the mean time, attending humbly to the narrow limits, and necessary obscurity, of our present knowledge, let us not be Ver. puffed up in ourselves, let us not despise others; but by a modest estimate, and a faithful improvement, of such degrees of light as God shall be pleased to afford us, let us press on towards the regions of eternal day; where in his light we shall see light, and where amidst the fullest communications of his love, we shall for ever love him, and each other, with arduours which the best hearts in their best moments on earth, can neither attain nor conceive.

SECT. XXVI.

The apostle cautions the Corinthians against that vain ostentation of the gift of tongues, which was so prevalent among them: and reasons with them concerning the absurdity of the manner in which that gift was abused by some of them. 1 Cor. XIV. 1—19.

I CORINTHIANS XIV. 1.

SECT.
XXVI.1 Cor.
XIV. 1

I HAVE exhorted, and I would still exhort you, my brethren, to pursue love^a, to cultivate it to the utmost of your power, in your own breasts, and in all around you, not grudging any labour, necessary to promote so excellent a cause. Yet I would not lead you to slight any inferior endowments, by which the edification of the church may be promoted. I permit you therefore, zealously to desire spiritual [gifts] so far as submission to God, the great Dispenser of them, and love to your brethren may admit. But I would especially urge you to desire and pray that ye may be enabled to prophesy, in that sense of the word in which we commonly use it, to express the gift whereby we are enabled to explain scripture, and publicly to discourse of Divine things, in an instructive and edifying manner; for by this you may hope to do the greatest good. For he that speaketh in a tongue^b, unknown

1 COR. XIV. 1.
FOLLOW after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy.

2 For he that speaketh
eth

^a Pursue love.] The word διωκετε properly signifies to pursue with an eagerness like that with which hunters follow their game. And it may be intended to intimate, how hard it is to obtain and preserve such a truly benevolent spirit, in the main series of life; considering on the one hand, how many provocations we are like to meet with, and on the other, the force of self-love, which will in so many instances be ready to break in upon it.

^b He that speaketh in a tongue unknown, &c.] Dr. Whitby thinks, that the gifts of languages and prophecy were always to be found in the same person; but that the first was permanent, the other transient. Yet it seems to me very conceivable, either might be without the other. The miraculous instamping, as it were on a man's mind a new language would indeed enable him to speak all he knew in it; but his fitness to discourse in public, as well
as

eth in an unknown tongue, speaketh not unto men, but unto God: for no man understandeth him; howbeit in the spirit he speaketh mysteries.

3 But he that prophesieth, speaketh unto men to edification and exhortation and comfort.

4 He that speaketh in an unknown tongue, edifieth himself: but he that prophesieth, edifieth the church.

5 I would that ye all spake with tongues, but rather that ye prophesied: for greater is he that prophesieth, than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church unknown to the auditory to whom he addresses himself, speaks in effect not to men, but to God; for no one else present understands [him;] and as God alone knows, the truth and importance of what he says, so it is all lost on the audience, though in the spirit he speak the most sublime mysteries. Whereas he that prophesieth, in the sense in which I now use the word, that is, discourses of Divine things in a known language, speaketh to men, and affords them edification, and exhortation and comfort, according to the particular tenor and contents of what he says. And thus, on the most favourable concessions that can be made, he that speaketh with a tongue, edifies himself^c only, if peradventure his own good affections may be awakened by the truth he fervently delivers; and the consciousness of that miraculous power which he feels working in him, may farther establish his faith in christianity; but he that prophesies, while he has a share of this advantage, edifies the church also, by taking those methods which are most likely to promote the number of its converts, and to do good to those who are already gathered into it.

For my own part, far from envying any of your gifts, I wish them increased, and indeed that ye all spake with tongues, in as great a variety as I myself can, or as God hath imparted the gift to any man living: but on the whole, I had much rather, that ye might all prophesy; for when we come to consider the different effects and tendencies of these different gifts, we must own that, with respect to the prospects of usefulness, by which these things are much to be estimated, he that prophesieth [is] greater than he who speaketh with tongues^d, which the auditory as his capacity of predicting future events were matters quite of another nature.

^c Edifieth himself.] After all that is said in the paraphrase, to prove that this might be possible, it was much more probable, that a man might be hurt, than edified, by the exercise of this gift, when attended with such ostentatious circumstances. But the apostle, according to that happy address for which he was so remarkable, makes his supposition most honourable and favourable to the person reproved; as Hector ascribes the retreat of Paris from the battle, to resentment against the Trojans, rather than to cowardice. Hom. Iliad. lib. vi. verse 326; and Eustath. in loc.

^d He that prophesieth, &c.] How happily does the apostle teach us to estimate the value of gifts and talents, not by their brilliancy, but usefulness. Speaking with tongues, was indeed very serviceable for spreading the gospel abroad; but for those that staid at home, it was much more desirable to be able to discourse well on useful subjects in their own language; which might serve more for the improvement of the society they belonged to, and the conviction of such of their unbelieving neighbours

SPEC.
XXVI.

1 Cor.
XIV. 2.

SECT.
XXVI.1 Cor.
XIV. 5.

tory cannot understand, except he interpret what he says, that the church may receive edification: and even then, his speaking with an unintelligible tongue is but an unnecessary incumbrance which it would be much more modest and prudent to omit.

6 Now, as perhaps you will apprehend this better by an example, suppose it were your own case, brethren: if I came to you, the next time I make you a visit at Corinth, speaking to you with a variety of unknown tongues, what shall I profit you, who are supposed not to understand me, unless I speak not merely in your hearing but to you, that is, in a language with which you are acquainted? Else all is absolutely lost, whatever my message may be, whether I speak by the revelation of some gospel-doctrine and mystery, or by knowledge^e in the explication of some controverted text in the Old Testament, or by prophesy in the prediction of some future event, or by doctrine for the regulation of life and manners.

7 So also inanimate things which give a sound, whether it be pipe or harp, or any other instrument of music, unless they give a due distinction, in the variety of sounds proceeding from them, how can it be known what is piped or harped? How should dancers be directed by music, unless the proper tone and modulation be duly

8 maintained? Moreover, in war, if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, so that there is an undistinguishable mixture of various kinds of notes who should prepare himself to battle? Could soldiers know, when to advance, or when to retreat, unless the trumpet's sound be adjusted and constantly adhered to? So likewise, in your religious assemblies, unless ye utter by the tongue significant words, to which the ear of your auditory are accustomed, how shall it be known what you speak? For ye shall be in that case, as those that speak to the air, or make a mere inarticulate noise; and I leave you to judge, how absurd it would be, to bring such unmeaning sounds into the worship of God, as ye would not endure in the common affairs of life.

There

neighbours, as might out of curiosity happen to step into their assemblies. Compare verse 23—25.

^e Revelation or knowledge, &c.] I am not certain, how far different ideas are to be affixed to each of these words; or sup-church may receive edifying

6 Now, brethren, if I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine?

7 And even things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp; except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped?

8 For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?

9 So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak into the air.

posing that, how far these are the appropriate ideas intended by each; but I could think of no more proper explication; and must number this among the many texts which I dare not pretend fully to understand.

f Understanding,

10 There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification.

11 Therefore, if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian; and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me.

12 Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church.

13 Wherefore, let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue, pray that he may interpret.

14 For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful.

There may be ever so many sorts of language in the world, perhaps as many as there are persons in your most numerous assemblies; and none of them is without its proper signification among those that use it; there are great numbers that inhabit the same region, who perfectly understand it. Yet unless I know the proper force and import of the particular language which is used in my hearing, no one can converse with me; and I shall in vain ask an explication in my own; for I shall be to him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh [shall be] a barbarian to me; and if the language be ever so copious, harmonious, expressive and polite, I shall hardly be able to distinguish it from that of the most unpolished savage. So that on the whole, I must urge it upon you also, that seeing ye desire spiritual [gifts,] and are ready to vie with each other in the excellence of them, ye seek to abound [in them] for the edification of the church and not merely for your own honour, according to those rules of honour which you may too rashly lay down to yourselves.

Therefore let him that speaketh in a tongue generally unknown to the congregation to which he would address himself, pray that he may be able rather to interpret the discourse of another, than to amuse, or indeed, amaze and weary the audience by the ostentatious exercise of the gift he has already received, and with which he is fond of making a vain parade. For if I pray in a strange and unknown tongue, without making use of any explication, my spirit indeed prays, and I may have true devotion of heart towards God, as I understand the language myself; but my understanding is in this respect unfruitful as to others; and I perform an action void of that prudence and good sense which ought always to govern in my addresses to God, and act so childish and foolish a part, that the reason of a man may seem at that time to have deserted [Understanding, unfruitful to others.] This I think a more literal interpretation, than that which supposes the apostle to suggest a necessity, which the Papists urge to palliate the absurdity of prayers in an unknown tongue, namely, "there may be some special good affection working, where the person praying does not particularly understand what he says." But this would make it almost impossible to conceive, how the gift of tongues could be abused, if the person exercising it was under such an extraordinary impulse of the spirit, as to utter sensible words, which he did not himself understand; in which case, a man must be, in the most extraordinary sense that can be conceived, the mere Organ of the Holy Ghost himself.

SECT.
XXVI.
1 Cor.
XIV. 15.

deserted me. What then is [my duty] in these circumstances? Truly it is plain enough; it requires me to say, I will pray with the spirit, exercising the faculties of my own soul in devotion; but I will pray with the understanding also. I will sing the praises of God with the spirit; but I will sing them with understanding also, and will take great care to mingle no foolish trifling action, unworthy the dignity of a rational creature, with my prayers or songs of praise. And it becomes you especially to consider this, who are so proud of your own wisdom, and yet in some respects act so foolish a part.

- 16 Moreover, whoever thou art, who actest in this ostentations manner, consider a little, for the farther illustration of this argument, the situation of one of thine own hearers. If thou givest thanks, for instance, in the spirit, in the manner that we now suppose it to be done, that is, in an unknown tongue, how shall he that filleth up a private place, and should join with thee in thy devotion, say Amen to thy thanksgiving, seeing he knows not what thou sayest? You know it is customary for the audience to pronounce their amen: now it seems a very absurd, not to say, hazardous thing, for people to testify in such a public and solemn manner their consent to, and concurrence with, they know not what. For we will grant, that thou indeed givest thanks well, and that there is nothing improper either in the sentiments or expressions, if they were understood; nevertheless, the other is not at all edified, or improved; in order to which it is absolutely necessary, that he should know what is said.

- 18 For my own part, I thank my God, and desire to mention it entirely to the glory of that blessed Being from whom all my gifts and talents are derived, that I speak with tongues more than you all, even the whole society taken together, and am distinguished from my other brethren in this endowment, in proportion to the more extensive commission which I have received to bring a variety of nations to the knowledge

15 What is it then? I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also.

16 Else when thou shalt bless with the spirit, how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned, say Amen at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest?

17 For thou verily givest thanks well, but the other is not edified.

18 I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than you all:

[Pray with understanding.] Mr Locke and most other commentators, seem here to have lost the sense and high spirit of the apostle in this clause, when they explain in spirit, as if it merely signified a manner intelligible to others. I apprehend, it is designed further to intimate, what a want of manly sense and right understanding it must betray, to talk in a language the hearers could not take in, how sublime soever the discourse might be. This the 20th verse, and specially the use of ταλωθαι, there, strongly suggests.

19 Yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.

ledge of the gospel, and persuade them to embrace it. But in a Christian church, when assembled with them for the purposes of public devotion, I had rather speak five plain words with my understanding, in a rational manner, that I might teach others also, and promote the edification of those who were joining with me, than ten thousand of the most pompous and elegant words in an [unknown] tongue, though uttered with the greatest readiness, and expressing conceptions ever so excellent; yea I had rather be entirely silent in an assembly, than take up their time, and prostitute the extraordinary gifts of God, to such vain and foolish purposes. And I heartily wish I may be able to bring you to the same reasonable way of thinking; which would be much to the credit of your own understanding, as well as of your Christian profession.

SECT.
XXVI.
1 Cor.
XIV. 19.

IMPROVEMENT.

How weak and poor a thing is pride and ostentation, and how wise and honourable, charity and humility! Who, that has a right discernment, would not rather have been the obscurest Christian, that now, almost unseen, joins our assemblies, and in heart at least, humbly puts his amen to the petitions presented there, than the most fluent talker at Corinth; abusing the special gifts of the Spirit, and trifling away, in an unseasonable display of his own, then unprofitable endowments, the precious moments, which were destined to the highest purposes of religious edification? Who must not lament to see pride and vain-glory, so early insinuating themselves into Christian societies! Who must not, from so sad an instance, learn to be greatly watchful over their own hearts, on the side where they are subject to such dangerous attacks!

Ver.
2—1

Had the most able and zealous Protestant divine endeavoured to expose the absurdity of praying in an unknown tongue, as practised in the church at Rome, it is difficult to imagine what he could have writ, more fully to the purpose, than the apostle hath here done. And when it is considered, how perversely the Papists retain the usage of such prayers, it will seem no wonder they should keep the scriptures in an unknown tongue too. But they proclaim at the same time, their superstition and idolatry in so universal a language, that even a barbarian might perceive and learn it in their assemblies. Let us pray, and pray for them, that 13—16

God

sect.
xxvi.

God may give their prejudiced minds a juster and happier turn. And since we see the unreasonable and pernicious humour of immutably adhering to ancient customs, prevailing to maintain in the church of Rome, so flagrant an absurdity, as praying in an unknown tongue, let it teach us to guard against every degree of the like disposition; and not so much consider, what hath been the practice of any church, in which we were educated, or have chosen to worship, as what the reason of things, and the authority of scripture concur to dictate.

18, 19

Of this wise and benevolent apostle let us learn, to estimate the value of gifts by their usefulness; and to seek above all things the edification of our brethren; especially if we are providentially called to minister in public. There is perhaps a manner of speaking in an unknown tongue, even when the language of our own country is used; a height of composition, an abstruseness of thought, an obscurity of phrase, which common Christians cannot understand. Let not the ministers of the humble Jesus seek such high things; but in this important sense of the exhortation, condescend to men of low estate. If the ignorant may be instructed, if the careless may be convinced, if the vicious may be reformed, if the devotion of our Christian brethren may be excited, their love to each other cherished, and their holy resolutions confirmed, the great ends of Divine ordinances are answered; and that plainness of speech, which may be most likely to promote them, is rather the glory, than reproach, of the Christian orator.

3, 4

SECT. XXVII.

St. Paul gives proper advices for preventing that abuse of the gift of tongues which he had been reproving in the preceding section.

1 Cor. XIV. 20, to the end.

SECT.
xxvii.

1 Cor.
XIV. 20.

I CORINTHIANS XIV. 20.
MY brethren, permit me to be the happy means of forming you to a more noble and manly way of thinking, with respect to these spiritual gifts which are the occasions of so many unbecoming emulations among you. Do you desire to be distinguished in the church? distinguish yourselves by solid wisdom; and be not, as this ostentation of tongues would shew you to be, children in understanding^a; but in malice

1 Cor. XIV. 20.

BRETHREN, be not children in understanding: howbeit, in malice

a Children in understanding.] This is an admirable stroke of true oratory, adapted to strike and bring down the height of their spirits, by representing those things in which they were most ready to pride themselves, as comparatively childish.—

malice he ve children, but in understanding be men.

malice indeed, be as much as possible, like little infants; have all the gentleness, sweetness and innocence of their tender age; but, as ye have arrived to years of maturity, in understanding be perfect [men;] for that religion which the gospel hath now taught you, far from impairing any of the natural faculties, rather exalts and improves them, and directs them to the highest and noblest use. To return to the subject we were upon, you know it is written in the law, that is, in the Old Testament, (Isa. xxviii. 11, 12, where God had been complaining of the unteachable disposition of the Jews.) "Surely in foreign language^b and with foreign lips I will speak unto this people; and even so they will not hear me, saith the Lord:" which may be considered and interpreted as an intimation of the purpose God had of sending one last message to them, by his servants endued with the gift of tongues. So that, according to this intimation, tongues are a sign not to believers, but to infidels. The gift was intended to propagate the gospel among those who were strangers to it, not to edify those that had already believed. Whereas, on the contrary, prophecy [is] designed not for infidels, but believers, to edify churches already gathered; in which respect it is nobler, and more worthy your pursuit. But as there is a manner of using this gift of tongues, which would even pervert the original end for which it was given, and obstruct, rather than promote, the conversion of infidels, I must observe, therefore, that if the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with a variety of unknown tongues, and any of the uninstructed, or in other words, the infidels, come in, when they hear such a confused jargon as this must be, will they not presently say that you are distracted,

SECT.
XXVII.

1 Cor.
XIV. 20.

21 In the law it is written, With men of other tongues and other lips, will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear me, saith the Lord.

22 Wherefore, tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe.

23 If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad?

The word μαλακίαι refers to infants, and is not sufficiently expressed by the word children, for they are sometimes vain and sometimes malicious too.—Ταλιαι, signifies full grown men; intimating, it was a kind of boyishness, if I may be allowed to use that word, to emulate and quarrel with one another.

^b In foreign language, &c.] Most critics refer these words, as they stand in Isaiah, to the Babylonians, who should come and speak to the Jews in a language unintelligible to them; in which sense the phrase is used elsewhere, Dent. xxviii. 49. Jer. v. 15. Diodotus thinks the meaning is, "Because they would not attend to plain messages, God would speak to them by such as they could not understand;" and then the apostle's argument will be, "Since God threatens this as a curse, do not voluntarily bring it upon the church, merely to make ostentation of your own gifts." But perhaps the apostle in this application intends to give us the true, though not most obvious interpretation of the words.

* Secrets.

SECT.
XXVII.
1 Cor.
XIV. 24.

distracted, and adopt the censure which was at first so rashly passed in the day of Pentecost, that these men are full of new wine? (Acts ii. 13.)

24 Whereas if all prophesy, and an infidel, or ignorant man, (for I esteem every one ignorant, who is uninstructed in the great mysteries of the gospel, whatever else he may know,) comes in, he is convicted by all who thus speak; he is judged by all; every one says something to which his conscience bears witness; And so the secrets of his heart are made manifest^e, in a manner to him very surprising and unaccountable; inso-much, that sometimes a person who comes into your assembly out of mere curiosity, or possibly with some ill design, is not able to command himself under the impression which the word of God thus spoken makes upon him; and so, under the power of it, falling down upon [his] face, he will worship that one living and true God whom you adore; declaring, that this ever-blessed God is indeed among you; and perhaps, immediately professing on that account, his resolution of joining himself to you; and proclaiming afterwards wherever he comes, in what an extraordinary manner he has met with the Divine presence, and what a wonderful impression hath been made upon his mind. Now surely, that degree of honour which is brought to God and his gospel by one such effect of prophesying, should appear far more desirable to you than any applause or admiration which you can receive from your fellow-christians by the exercise of your most splendid gifts.

26 I might also urge, upon this head, the great disorder which is introduced into your assemblies, by this ostentations manner of proceeding; for indeed, if you think seriously, what a shocking thing is it, my brethren, that when you come together for the purposes of social worship, in which all hearts should unite, each of you is desirous

24 But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all:

25 And thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face, he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth.

26 How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one

^e Secrets of his heart are made manifest. It is very possible, that (as in the known cases of Nathaniel, and the woman of Samaria, John i. 47; chap. iv. 18,) some secret facts, relating to a stranger, might in some instances be revealed to the prophet; perhaps the ill designs which had brought them into the assembly, when they came only as spies; and this was well suited to the purpose of producing strong convictions of the presence of God with Christians. But I chose to paraphrase the words in such a manner, as to include any remarkable correspondence between what was spoken, and the thoughts and state of the mind which such a stranger might be conscious of. Many memorable instances of which still happen, where ministers preach in an experimental manner; and lasting effects have often been produced, in consequence of such impressions.

one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done to edifying.

sirous himself to officiate publicly, in such a manner as best suits his present inclination, without any regard to decency and order? Every one of you hath a psalm to read, hath a doctrine to inculcate, hath a tongue in which to preach or pray, hath a revelation of some mystery to produce, hath an interpretation, which perhaps he immediately begins, while the person, from whom he is to interpret, hath but begun to speak, and thus five or six^d, if not more, may be speaking at the same time: in consequence of which no one can be distinctly heard, and the assembly degenerates into a kind of tumultuous riot. I beseech you, my friends, to rectify this, and to proceed upon the general canon, which I would recommend to you upon all such occasions, let all things be done, not for ostentation, but for edification^e, in such a manner as you do in your consciences believe will be most like to do good to the souls of men, and to build up the church of Christ.

SECT.
XXVII.
1 Cor.
XIV. 26.

27 If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret.

28 But if there be no inter-

And in particular, if any should speak with an 27 [unknown] tongue, [let it be] by two, or at most [by] three in one meeting, and that by course; and let some one present still interpret what is said. But if there be not an interpreter, let 28 him be silent in the church^g, where he can do no manner

d Five or six, &c.] Five such cases are mentioned. It seems probable, that some of these Christians were so full of themselves, and so desirous of exercising their respective gifts, that without waiting for the permission and direction of him who presided in the assembly, (which in the synagogues the apostles themselves seem to have done, compare Acts xiii. 15.) several began speaking, or singing, in the same minute, and some began while others were speaking. The manner in which discourses were carried on in the schools of the philosophers, where several little knots of disputants seem so to have been engaged at the same time, and what happened in Jewish synagogues after worship was concluded, might possibly have given some occasion to an irregularity which to us seems so shocking.

e Done for edification.] I must presume to say, that it appears probable to me, that had one officer been appointed, as a representative of the apostle, to whose direction the society would in conscience have been obliged in all indifferent matters to submit, some hint would have been given of it, amidst the many opportunities which the state of this Corinthian church especially, gave both to St. Paul, and afterwards to Clemons Romanus.

f Let one interpret.] In this method it is evident, that any discourse thus delivered, would take up more than twice the time in which it might have been delivered had it first been spoken in a known tongue.

g If there be no interpreter, let him be silent.] Dr. Whitty thinks this was only enjoined to avoid the ostentation of a man's speaking, first in an unknown tongue, and then acting as his own interpreter; but I think it evident, from this text, compared with verse 13, that a man might have the gift of speaking with tongues, who could not interpret; and the great difficulty is to say, how this could happen, and yet the thing wanting not be another tongue; which the distinction between the gift of tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, seems to demonstrate that it was not. I can only offer a conjecture here, which it becomes me to do with the greater modesty, as I think it is

SECT.
XXVII.
1 Cor.
XIV. 28.

- manner of service by uttering what none but himself can understand; and let him speak to himself, and to God: let him make use of this language in his own private devotions, if he has a mind by exercise to keep up his readiness in it: but let him not produce it so unreasonably, as
- 29 in the present case. And as for those prophesyings which we chiefly speak of, when scriptures are explained; let only two or three of the prophets speak in one assembly; and let the rest judge, and compare one doctrine with another for the farther improvement of all. But if while the discourse continues, [any thing] be revealed to another that sitteth by, let him not immediately arise, and interrupt the first; but let him sit still, till he have done speaking^h.
- 31 For by this means ye may all, who are thus furnished for it, prophesy one by one, that your instruction and consolation may not be thrown away, which would be the case, if many were speaking at once; but all may learn, and all may
- 32 be comforted. And there is no impossibility of doing this: for the Spirit of God that inspires you, is not a wild irresistible impulse, like that, by which the Pythian priestess, and others who profess inspiration and prophesy among the Gentiles, pretend to be agitated; but the spirits, or inspirations, of the Christian prophets produce those interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God.

29 Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge.

30 If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace.

31 For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted.

32 And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets.

a pretty singular one: (as indeed the difficulty itself, great as it is, has seldom been stated by commentators.) The miracle, which conferred the gifts of tongues, seems to have been the instantaneous impressing on the mind the familiar and perfect knowledge of a language with which the person was before unacquainted; yet so, that from that time the person receiving it should be able, without any new miracle, to use it as he thought fit, and this, as Dr. Leland well observes, is the only hypothesis on which the abuse of this gift can be accounted for. (See Leland against Morgan, Vol. I. chap. xiii. p. 375.) But I apprehend, that though every man using this gift, and understanding what he said, must have been able to have rendered his discourse sentence by sentence, into his native language, he might be unable to render it into a third, which might be that of many present. Now in such a circumstance, the gift of interpretation might take place, if it consisted, as I conjecture it did, in an instantaneous capacity of understanding in a strange language, just for that time, and rendering what was spoken in it, into the native tongue of the interpreter. (Compare the paraphrase on chap. xii. verse 10.) On this hypothesis, and truly I think on this alone, one, who had the gift of interpretation, might not be able to speak any foreign language at all; and he who had the gift of a tongue, might not in some circumstances be able to interpret to those who were then his hearers. In this case, the gift of interpretation, enabling a man only to act a secondary part, would be less splendid; but whenever it was exercised, it would always argue the person under an immediate agency of the Spirit, and conduce to his usefulness.

^h Let the first have done speaking.] So I think συνέχω must here be rendered; for if the direction had been, "Let him that was speaking immediately hold his peace, as soon as another intimates that he has a revelation;" it would introduce a confusion, which this advice was intended to prevent; and I think such an interpretation equally inconsistent with reason, and connection of the place. Compare verse 32, 33.

those calm emotions which are subject to the prophets: they leave a man master of himself, so that he can moderate his passions, and wait the most convenient time and manner of uttering his oracles. For God is not [the] [author] of disorders and confusion, but of peace and regularity; and this orderly method of proceeding, I the rather urge upon you, as it is practised in all the other churches of the saints; and I should be sorry, that you, my Corinthian friends, should be remarkable for the irregularity of your proceedings, when God hath been pleased so graciously to distinguish you by such a variety of gifts, and the flourishing state of your society.

SECT.
XXVII.

1 Cor.
XIV.

33

33 For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints.

34 Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law.

35 And if they will learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for a woman to speak in the church.

36 What? came the word of God out from you

Let your women be silent in your religious assemblies, if they have not some extraordinary revelation; for it is not commonly permitted to them to speak on such public occasions, but it is their duty to be in subjection to the superior authority of the man; as the law also says, in recording that early sentence on Eve and her daughters for the first transgression, (Gen. iii. 16.) To him shall be thy desire subjected, and he shall rule over thee. And if they have a mind to learn the meaning of any thing which they cannot well understand, let them ask their own husbands at home, as they may more conveniently and freely talk with them, without any appearance of ostentation, or suspicion, of any other ill principles; but let them not break in upon the assembly with questions; for it is evidently an indecent thing for a woman to speak in the church, and suits very ill with that modesty and reserve which is so universally esteemed an ornament to the sex.

I know the present custom among you is contrary to some of these regulations, and perhaps some opposition may be made to them: but permit me to ask, Did the word of God indeed come out from you? Are you the first church in the world

[A woman to speak, &c.] There is an apparent difficulty in reconciling this with chap. xi. 5, 13, in which the apostle seems to grant a liberty, which he here denies. Besides the solution suggested in the paraphrase on the verse 34; some have thought, he intended in the former passage only to say, how women should speak, if they spoke at all; but here absolutely to prohibit their doing it: but I cannot think he would debate and adjust the circumstances of doing an unlawful action. Taking this prohibition to be universal, I should suppose with Dr. Whitby, that prophesying in the foregoing place, signified singing psalms, and prayers, not leading the devout, but joining with others in prayer.

* Did the word, &c.] That scoicism, whether did the word of God come forth from you alone, would be the exactest version of 1 Cor. xiv. 33, &c.

SECT.
XXVII.1 Cor.
XIV. 36.

world, by whose example all others should be modelled? Or did it reach to you alone? Are you the last, and the only christian society, that you should take upon you to act in so singular a manner? The gospel came from Jerusalem, it is going all over the world, and therefore I must admonish you to behave with such a modest respect to others as becomes those who know yourselves to be but a very small part of that noble and extensive body.

37 And if any of you appear to be a prophet, or spiritual [person] endowed with extraordinary gifts above his brethren, let him prove that he is indeed under the influence of the Divine Spirit, by his submission and obedience to these determinations; for he must necessarily acknowledge, that the things which I now write unto you, are the commandments of the Lord, dictated by inspiration from him, and not the private conception of my own mind.

38 But if any one is, or affects to appear, ignorant, or uncertain about it, let him be ignorant¹: if he pretend not to own these decisions, I shall not enter into any debate with him; let him stand by the consequence of his ignorance, whether real or affected. But I am confident, that most of you have received proofs of my mission, too convincing to be shaken by any petulant opposition which may arise against it.

39 Therefore, my brethren, to conclude this long discourse, and to sum up the point in a few words, desire chiefly to prophesy, and yet forbid not those who are willing to do it, under such regulations as I have advanced, to speak with tongues; for it is a noble endowment, which I would encourage none to slight or neglect.

40 But especially remember this great comprehensive rule, to be applied to a thousand varieties which may arise, Let all things be done decently^m and according to order: let all be conducted in a regular manner, to prevent such disturbances, disputes you? or came it unto you only?

37 If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you, are the commandments of the Lord.

38 But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant.

39 Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues.

40 Let all things be done decently, and in order.

¹ Let him be ignorant.] Dr. Whitby would render αποσινω, let him not be acknowledged to be a true prophet; but that is changing the interpretation of the word in a manner one would not choose to admit without greater necessity.

^m Decently, &c.] It must be by a mere accommodation, that this expression can be applied to ceremonies, which may be decent or indecent, according to different circumstances attending them. In the sense given in the paraphrase, the words are used by the philosopher, when he exhorts men to consider the exact order and regular motions of the heavenly bodies that they may thereby learn το εὐσχημον καὶ το πᾶσι γινώσκον, what is decent and orderly. Whichol's Sol. Serm. p. 177, Edin. Edit.

disputes, and scandals for the future, as have already arisen in your society, and will proceed to greater evils, if you do not immediately set upon reforming them.

SECT.
XXXII.
I C or.
XIV. 40.

IMPROVEMENT.

How fondly do men flatter themselves with empty appearances! And often, how justly do those deserve the imputation of childish folly, the height of whose temper will least allow them to bear it! Let us dare to examine ourselves impartially, and be concerned Ver. that we may not be children in understanding; but forming our 20 minds on the maxims of scripture, and our lives on the example of Christ, may we grow up in him to the measure of the stature of a perfect man. But let us be children in malice: let us endeavour to be as free from every gloomy, malignant, selfish passion, as newborn infants are. We can say he has fully attained this happy and amiable character? Yet let us follow after it; remembering, that there is a sense, in which, (proud and interested, envious and malignant, as alas! we too much are,) we must become us little children, or we cannot inherit the kingdom of God.

Those extraordinary gifts, which suited the first planting of Christianity in the world, are now ceased; but let us bless God, they were ever given: and that we have such an incontestable evidence of the truth of the gospel as this chapter affords. Such endowments must certainly argue a Divine power, setting its seal to the gospel; and the reality of such endowments can never be questioned, when we reflect on the manner in which the apostle here reproves the abuse of them; and that in a society where so many were alienated from him and his ministry; and consequently, waere such appeals, if not founded on the strictest and most apparent truth, must have exposed him to a contempt never to have been removed.

These miraculous gifts, having abundantly answered their end, are wisely withdrawn; yet still the Divine presence is with the church; of which we have this happy proof, that there are those who find the secret of their hearts made manifest, by the faithful and skilful administration of Christian ordinances: so that if they do not publicly fall down upon their faces, in such extraordinary transports, they inwardly adore the Lord God in their hearts, and acknowledge that he is with his church of a truth. May instances of this kind be more frequent, and may the spirituality and fervour with which Divine ordinances shall be administered, be such as may afford more reason to expect them!

Let us regard God, as the author, not of confusion, but of peace; 33 making it our concern to behave in his sanctuary, in a manner agreeable agreeable to this view; with such solemn decorum, and with such a tender regard to the edification and comfort of each other, as he may approve. May the God of peace deliver Christians, of every sect, and rank, from that spiritual pride which has thrown many religious societies into great disorder. And, to advance a state, so happy, as that of humility and love must necessarily be, may what the apostles have written, be acknowledged as the commandments of the Lord, and christian worship, and practice, be more regulated by their truly authentic canons; which would render many that have been since devised, relating to indifferent matters, an unnecessary, as some others are burdensome, superstitious, and absurd.

SECT.
XXVII.

SECT. XXVIII.

The apostle enters on his discourse concerning the resurrection of the dead; which he introduces with some remarks on the certainty and importance of Christ's resurrection. 1 Cor. XV. 1.—11.

1 CORINTHIANS XV. 1.

SECT.
XXVIII.1 Cor.
XV. 1.

THERE is one topic more that remains to be handled, of those concerning which you write to me; I mean, the great doctrine of the resurrection of the dead; which I perceive some among you begin to doubt; whether seduced by any Jewish teachers of Sadducean principles, or biassed by the vain pretences of heathen philosophers, who would despise it as a mean and unworthy hope. But I make known unto you, brethren, and remind you of the gospel which I have preached to you at the very beginning of my ministry among you; which ye have also received with readiness and delight, and in which ye may be said to stand, as much as your establishment in Christianity will depend on your retaining it in its genuine simplicity and purity; 2 By which gospel also, whereof the doctrine of the resurrection makes so considerable a part, ye are

1 Cor. XV. 1.

MOREOVER, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also you have received, and wherein ye stand.

2 By which also ye are

[unworthy hope.] It is well known, that the primitive Christians were often insulted by the heathen philosophers, for their hope of a resurrection; which one of them, ridiculously enough, calls the hope of worms. Compare 2 Tim. xi. 18. and the note there. Others taught virtue to be its own necessary reward, in such a manner as tended to overthrow the strongest of all natural arguments for a future state, I mean, that taken from such an unequal distribution of rewards and punishments, as could not otherwise take place under the government of a righteous God. If Christians were by this tempted so to refine on the doctrine of the resurrection, as in effect to explain it away, it shows the propriety of the apostle's setting himself to prove the resurrection of Christians, rather than a resurrection in general.

b Retain.]

375. 2. 1, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain.

3 For I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures:

4 And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day, according to the scriptures:

5 And that he was seen of Cephus, then of the twelve.

are happily brought into the way of being completely and eternally saved, if ye faithfully retain^b those joyful tidings which I delivered unto you; unless indeed^c ye have believed in vain: which will certainly be the case, if ye let go that great anchor of your soul which must support it in the fierce storms and tempests to which you will here be exposed. For I delivered to you among the first [principles] which I inculcated, when I came to preach the gospel among you, what I have also received^d, and been taught by Divine inspiration, that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures of the Old Testament, in which he was foretold, and represented, as the great Sin-offering; (Isai. liii. 6, 12; Dan. ix. 25.) And I also instructed you,⁴ that he was buried in a new tomb; and that his dead body was kept by a guard of his enemies: but kept in vain, for to their confusion, and the perpetual establishment of the faith and hope of his humble followers, he was raised the third day according to the scriptures^e, which intimate that he should not see corruption in the grave. (Psal. xvi. 10.) And in confirmation of this⁵ great truth, I told you, that the same day that he rose, he was seen first of Cephus, or Peter, to whom, that he might comfort his wounded heart under its sorrows for his late fall, he condescended to make his first appearance, excepting that to the women at the sepulchre; and afterwards he was seen by that company who were called the twelve^f apostles, though several of

SECT.
XXVIII.
1 Cor.
XV. 2.

^b Retain.] So ῥησιν is evidently significant. To keep in memory, suggests a very moderate sense.

^c Unless indeed.] Ἐάντι μὴ is a very remarkable form of expression. Perhaps there may be more in it than most readers are aware. If I mistake not, it suggests the thought expressed, verse 17. So the two first verses may be a transition; as if he had said, I preach the same gospel still, and I hope you will retain it; yet I have reason to fear some of you entertain notions which tend quite to enervate it.

^d Received.] For the import of this phrase, see Gal. i. 12; 1 Cor. xi. 23.

^e Raised the third day, according to the scriptures. It has been queried, where the scriptures foretel that Christ should rise from the dead on the third day. Some think there is a transposition or parenthesis; so that the meaning will be, he rose again, according to the scriptures; and this on the third day. Chand of Christianity, p. 370; and so Dr. Bullock replies, that he would have risen according to the scriptures, had it been on the fifth or tenth day. (Bull. Fird. p. 48.) But Mr. Jefferies, whom I follow in the parabrase, gives what appeared to me the best solution, as it is intimated, John xi. 59, that bodies began to corrupt on the fourth day. See Jeffer. Review, p. 127.

^f Of the twelve.] It is certain, neither Judas nor Thomas were there; and as it is observed below, James might probably be absent; but as the council of twenty-three among the Jews might be said to be assembled, if the greater part were present, though the number might not be complete; so the company might be called the twelve, though we should suppose the fourth part to have been absent. Compare Mark xvi. 14; Luke xxiv. 36; John xx. 26.

SECT.

XXVIII.

1 Cor.

XV. 6.

of the number were then absent. Afterwards he appeared according to his repeated appointments, to above five hundred brethren at once [‡] in Galilee, where he gave the most glorious and incontestible proof of the reality of his resurrection, in the presence of this great concourse, of whom the greater part continue [alive] until now, and constitute a cloud of witnesses to this important truth; but some are fallen asleep in Jesus, and gone to dwell with him, as the great Lord of life.

7 And you may remember, I told you also, that after this he was seen of James, and afterwards, just before his ascension, by all the apostles^h,

8 But last of all he also appeared to me, as to an embryo, or one born out of due time, a poor, weak, contemptible creature, from whom nothing good was to be expected, not worthy of the least patience; how much less worthy of being marked out with such distinguishing favours!

9 For I must humbly acknowledge, and I would continually bear it in my mind, that I am the least of all the apostles, who am not indeed worthy to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the Church of God; on which account, considering the transports of my savage zeal, I think myself hardly deserving to be numbered amongst the meanest followers of my Divine Master, and less than the least of all saints. (Eph. iii. 8.)

10 But by the grace of God I am what I am, a Chris-

6 After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once: of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep.

7 After that, he was seen of James: then of all the apostles.

8 And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time.

9 For I am the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God.

10 But by the grace of [‡] Above five hundred.] Probably it was in Galilee, where there was such a number of disciples; though there were no more than an hundred and twenty at Jerusalem, when Mathias was chosen. Dr. Prideaux, Mr. Ditton, and many others, urge this as a glorious proof of the resurrection of Christ. Had it been an imposture, so many false hearts and tongues could never have acted in concert? nor would they all have kept a secret, which remorse, interest, and perhaps often torture, might urge them to divulge? especially as there had been one traitor among the twelve, on account of which, had they been conscious of fraud, a general suspicion of each other's secrecy must have arisen. See Prid. Lett. to a Deist, p. 241

^h By all the apostles.] The change of phrase, from that in the conclusion of the 5th verse, is very remarkable; and, as a very learned, candid, and sagacious person, has suggested to me, it very probably intimates, that they who were there called the twelve, that is, the greater part of the company who used to be so denominated, were not all the apostles. On which circumstance this gentleman grounds a very probable conjecture, that James might, by some accident, perhaps illness, or affairs indispensably necessary, be detained from meeting his brethren, both on the day of the resurrection, and that day seventh-night, and likewise at the time when Christ appeared to the five hundred; and that he might, in this respect, be upon a level with them, our Lord appeared to him alone, after all the appearances mentioned before. And this account of the matter appears vastly more credible than that which St. Jerome quotes from the gospel of the Nazarenes, that on the death of Christ, James made a vow, that he would neither eat nor drink till he saw Christ risen from the dead: an event of which the apostles had certainly no expectation.

of God I am what I am; and his grace which was bestowed upon me, was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all: yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me.

Christian, an apostle, and not inferior to any of my honoured brethren in that office; and his ^{SECT. XXVIII.} grace [manifested] towards me, in raising me to 1 Cor. XV. 10. so high a dignity, and so happy a state, was not dissolved in vain: but I laboured more abundantly than they all, conscious that I could never do enough to balance the mischief I had formerly committed, or answer the obligations under which such rich and distinguishing mercy had me. I exerted myself therefore to the utmost in my apostolical work; which should, by the way, shelter me from the contempt which some are ready to throw upon me: yet, to speak more properly, it was not I, but the grace of God that was with me: God furnished me for the work, he excited me to diligence and zeal in it; to him be the glory of all. His 11 grace was the cause of all; and whether therefore I, or they, laboured most, and to whomsoever we delivered our message, whether among you, or elsewhere, so we preach, and so ye believed. All agree in bearing our testimony to the death and resurrection of Christ, and ye, with all other Christians, have agreed to receive it, as the great foundation of our holy religion.

11 Therefore, whether it were I or they so we preach, and so ye believed.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET it be the daily joy of our hearts, to think how firm that foundation stands, and what various and convincing evidence we have, that as Christ became incarnate, visited this wretched Ver. world, and died for our sins, according to the scriptures; that as he condescended to go down into the caverns of the grave, and lie there in the cold and silent tomb, humbled in the dust of death; so also, according to the same scriptures, he was raised again on the third day. Let us be very thankful, that such convincing proof was given of his resurrection, demonstrated by such infallible tokens, and repeated appearances, to all the apostles; who had every opportunity the most scrupulous doubt could demand, of examining at leisure into its certainty. More than five 5 hundred persons were witnesses to it at one time; and witnesses, who survived to many future years to attest this important fact, that our faith and hope might be in God: in God, who quickeneth the dead, and who by this resurrection of Jesus his Son, hath begotten us again to a lively hope of an inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. As we have received, so let us stand fast

SECT.
XXVII.

fast in this doctrine; and remember, that our salvation depends on our stedfastly retaining it, and that we believe in vain, and worse than in vain, if we ever, on any considerations, make shipwreck of faith, and of a good conscience.

It is matter of joy and thankfulness, that St. Paul was added to this cloud of witnesses, who attested the resurrection of Jesus; that great apostle, in whom the grace of God was so richly magnified; magnified particularly in that humility which he here expresses in so amiable a manner; calling himself the least of the apostles, and declaring that he was unworthy of the name of an apostle; and amidst all the labours and glories of this eminent station in the church, still keeping in his eyes that madness with which, in the days of his infidelity, he had wasted it. Shall we not all learn of him to say, By the grace of God I am what I am? Let us be solicitous, that his grace bestowed upon us be not in vain; and ever bearing in mind the many sins of our unconverted state, and our great unprofitableness since we have known God, or rather been known of him, let us labour in our Lord's service with proportionable zeal; and when we have laboured to the utmost, and exerted ourselves with the greatest fidelity and resolution, let us ascribe it to that Divine agency which strengthened us for all, and say again, though some should esteem it a disagreeable tautology, Not I, but the grace of God that was with me.

SECT. XXIX.

The apostle shews the necessary connection between the resurrection of Christ, which he had established above, and the resurrection of the dead; and urges the importance of retaining that great fundamental of Christianity: in the series of his argument mentioning the surrender of the mediatorial kingdom which Christ shall make at the consummation of all things. 1 Cor. XV. 12—34.

1 CORINTHIANS XV. 12.

SECT. XXIX.
1 Cor. XV. 12.

YOU have heard, my brethren, something of the convincing evidence which attended this great and important doctrine of Christ's resurrection; but if Christ is thus preached, that he was assuredly raised from the dead, how do some among you presume to say, That there is no resurrection of the dead? With that face can any, who allow of Christ's resurrection, pretend to deny the other, whether out of an attachment to Sadducean, or philosophical prejudices?

15 For it is certain, that if there is no resurrection of the dead, if that doctrine be in the general

1 COR. XV. 12.

NOW if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you, that there is no resurrection of the dead?

13 But if there be no resurrection of the dead dead, then Christ is not risen.

14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith also vain.

15 Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God, that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not.

16 For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised:

17 And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins.

18 Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ, are perished.

altogether incredible, then neither is Christ raised^a. And this would be a consequence, at once the most false, and the most melancholy, that can be conceived; for if Christ be not raised, then our preaching, which pretends to take its authority from a commission after his resurrection, in a view of declaring the certainty of it [is] vain; and your faith, founded chiefly upon the testimony which God then bore to him, [is] also vain. Yea, and we the apostles, 15 notwithstanding all the miraculous evidences we give of the truth of our mission, are found, what I am sure you cannot believe we are, false witnesses of God; because you know that we bore this as our most important and solemn testimony concerning God, that he raised up Christ, whom nevertheless he indeed did not raise up, if the notion of a resurrection in the general be, as they teach, an absurdity, and the dead rise not at all. I repeat it again, as a point of the 16 highest consequence; for if the dead are not finally to be raised, neither is Christ raised: And 17 what terrible consequences would arise from hence? Surely such as might be sufficient to strike us with horror: for if Christ be not raised, all your faith in the gospel [is] vain, and ye are without any salvation: ye are in that case still in your sins^b, under the pressure of their unexpiated guilt; for with the doctrine of the resurrection of Christ, that of the efficacy of his atonement is inseparably connected. And then 18 also there would be this deplorable consequence farther attending, that they who sleep in Christ, are perished; even all deceased Christians, not excepting the most excellent of them, who have died for their religion. They have lost their life, and being together, on this supposition, in the cause of one, who, if still among the dead, must have been an imposter, and false prophet.

And

^a Neither is Christ raised.] This argument, on which the apostle dwells in so copious a manner, would appear to be of great moment, whatever the principles were by which the doctrine of the resurrection was assaulted. It could not be said, that was in its own nature impossible, which was accomplished in Christ; and it would prove, that the hope of a resurrection was not, as the Gentiles represented it, a mean and sordid hope, since it was accomplished in the Son of God. Compare verse 1, note a.

^b Still in your Sins.] This plainly shews how necessary it was that there should be something more than reformation, which was plainly in fact wrought, in order to their being delivered from their sins; even that atonement, the sufficiency of which God attested by raising our great Surety from the grave.

SECT.
XXIX.1 Cor.
XV. 19.

And this scheme, which would represent those that sleep in Christ as perished, would, I am sure, be a very terrible doctrine to us the apostle of Jesus, in such a circumstance as this ; for if it were in this life only that we have hope in Christ, we, who are exposed to such a variety of calamities and dangers for his sake, were of all men in the world the most pitiable^c : since it is evident, that amidst such evils as these, nothing could comfort and support us, but the hopes of immortality ; and we must be at once the vilest, and the most wretched of mankind, if, while we make such pretences to them, we were indeed governed by any lower views.

- 20 But we will now dwell no longer on these melancholy suppositions, for we assuredly know that Christ is indeed risen from the dead^d ; [and] we are sure, that in this his resurrection, he is become the first-fruits of them that slept^e ; so
- 21 that it is the security of ours. For as death [came] on the whole human race by means of one man, who brought mortality on all his posterity as the consequence of that one great offence, so likewise by means of another man [cometh] the resurrection of the dead ; and our happy

19 If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable

20 But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept.

21 For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

^c Of all men the most pitiable : ἐπιεικταίσι.] It is quite foreign to the purpose, to argue from this text, as some have done, that "if there were no future state, virtue would make men more miserable than they would otherwise be." It is evident, St. Paul here speaks, not of the case of good men in general, if their hopes of future happiness should after all be disappointed ; but of the case of the apostles, and other preachers of Christianity, if amidst all their hardships and persecutions, they were not supported by this hope. Destitute of this amidst the extremest sufferings, they must have been perpetually subjected to the upbraidings of their own minds, for sacrificing every view of happiness in this world or another, to advance what they knew to be a pernicious falsehood. Perhaps there never were men on earth so criminal, and so wretched, as they must, on this supposition, have been. See the thought illustrated at large in my Sermons on the power and Grace of Christ, &c. S. r. m. ix.

^d Christ is indeed risen, &c.] It is a great mistake to imagine that the apostle is employed throughout this chapter in proving the resurrection. The proof lies in a very little room, chiefly verses 12—

19, and almost all the rest of the chapter is taken up in illustrating, vindicating, or applying it. The proof is indeed very short, but most solid and convincing—the fact which arose from Christ's resurrection. Now that not only proved a resurrection to be in fact not impossible, but, which was much more, as it proved him to be a Divine Teacher, it proved the doctrine of a general resurrection, which he so expressly taught. It was natural for so good a man also, to insist on the sad consequences which would follow with respect to himself and his brethren, from giving up so glorious a hope ; and the cordial manner in which he speaks of this, is a noble internal argument, which I hope many of my readers will feel, though I have been obliged to be less copious in the paraphrase than I could have wished.

^e First-fruits of them that slept.] It is without sufficient reason, that Mr. Fleming, (Christ, Vol. 1, p. 218,) would render ἀπαρχή, ruler, governor, or commander.—Κεφάλαιον here is explained by μαθητῶν, verse 18, and both must refer to Christians, of whose resurrection alone, and not that of the wicked, he evidently speaks in this whole chapter.

Abolished

22 For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

23 But every man in his own order: Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's, at his coming.

24 Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority, and power.

25 For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet.

26 The last enemy that happy relation to him abundantly repairs the damage we sustained by our fatal relation to the former. For as in Adam all are dead, and a sentence of inevitable death is come upon us all, as descended from him: so we Christians have a joyful persuasion for ourselves, and for our brethren, that, (though we are neither capable of effecting or meriting such a change,) in Christ we all shall also be made alive. But it was fit that every one should be re-animating, raised and glorified in his own order: it was fit that Christ, after a very short abode in the grave, should rise as the first fruits, and as such should present himself to God, and use his recovered life in his service; and they who are Christ's property, the whole body of those that belong to him, should be raised up a considerable time afterwards, and appear as a glorious harvest in full maturity, at the important hour of his coming, when his voice shall awaken, and his almighty hand restore them.

And then [shall] the end of the world [be] the grand catastrophe of all those wonderful scenes that have held in suspense so many succeeding generations; when he shall publicly and solemnly deliver up the mediatorial kingdom to God, even the Father, by whose commission he has held it, and to whose glory he has always administered it; when he shall have abolished and deposed all principality and all authority and power, that has opposed itself to his government, and shall have triumphed over all the efforts, which either men or devils could ever make against his ever-growing empire and dominion. For we know, that according to the tenor of that ancient prophecy, (Psal. cx. 1,) which carries with it so illustrious a reference to the Messiah and his kingdom, he must reign, till he have put all [his] enemies under his feet; so as that they should become his footstool, and subserve that exaltation which they have endeavoured to prevent. And so universal shall the triumph be, that the very last enemy, [even] death, shall be deposed and destroyed: that enemy that energy any more." Thus it is used of Satan. Heb. ii. 14; of death here, and ver. 26; and 2 Tim. i. 10; of temporal princes, 1 Cor. i. 28, chap. ii. 6; and of the ceremonial law, Eph. ii. 15.

[Abolished and deposed.] The word καταργεῖται generally signifies, "divesting a thing of some power, whether lawful or usurped, which it formerly had, and reducing it to an incapacity of exerting

SECT.
XXIX.

my which continues in some measure to hold the subjects of Christ under its dominion, even when the temptations of the world, and the malice of Satan, can hold them no longer, and when every remainder of corrupt nature and human infirmity has long since ceased in the perfect holiness of the intermediate state, and its unmingled serenity and joy.

27 This, I say, must necessarily be implied: for it is elsewhere said, he hath put all things under his feet, (Psal. viii. 6,) and it must accordingly be accomplished; but [it is] evident enough, that when he saith, that all things were subjected to him, it is with the exception of him by whom all things were thus subjected to him. None can surely imagine, that the Son was ever to reign over the great and glorious Father of all; but on the contrary it may naturally be concluded, that he would still direct his administration to the glory of him from whom he received his kingdom.

28 But when the Father shall have fulfilled this promise in its utmost extent, and all things shall be subjected to him, so that it shall appear to every eye, that he is indeed Lord of all; then shall the Son also himself, amidst all the glories of that triumph, be, and declare himself to be subject to him that subjected all things to him, by a public act, in the midst of this most august assembly, giving up, as it were, his commission to preside as universal Lord in the mediatorial kingdom, to him; as having answered the end for which it was given him, in the complete salvation of all his people, whom he shall then introduce into a state of the greatest near-that shall be destroyed is death.

27 For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith all things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted which did put all things under him.

28 And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all.

§ Then shall the Son also himself be subject, &c.] I hope I shall be forgiven, if after the best attention I could use, I have missed the true and exact sense of this most difficult text. It is surprising to find authors of such different sentiments, as Witsius, and Crellius; agreeing to speak of Christ, as returning, as it were, to a private station, and being "as one of his brethren," when he has thus given up the kingdom. The union of the Divine and human natures in the person of the great Emanuel, the incomparable virtues of his character, the glory of his actions, and the relation he bears to his people, with all the texts which assert the perpetuity of his government, prohibit our imagining that he shall ever cease to be illustriously distinguished from all others, whether men or angels, in the heavenly world through eternal ages. To me it appears, that the kingdom to be given up, is the rule of this lower world, which is then to be consumed; and that it may not seem, as if a province of his empire were destroyed, his administration, undertaken in avowed subservience to the scheme of redemption, (Eph. i. 10.) and completed in the resurrection of all his people, shall close in a decent and honourable manner; God will declare the ends of it fully answered, and the whole body of his people shall be introduced by him into a state of more intimate approach to, and communion with God, than had been known by the spirits of the blessed in their separate state.

L'W'ho

ness to God, and most intimate converse with him ; that God may be, and that he may appear to be, all in all ; that they all may enjoy complete and everlasting happiness, in the full communication of the Divine favour to them, for ever, in a world where they shall no longer need a Mediator to introduce them to him.

29 Else what shall they do, which are baptized for the dead if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?

Such are our views and hopes, as christians ; 29 else if it were not so, what should they do, who are baptized in token of their embracing the christian faith in the room of the dead^h, who are just fallen in the cause of Christ, but are yet supported by a succession of new converts, who immediately offer themselves, to fill up their places, as ranks of soldiers, that advance to the combat in the room of their companions, who have just been slain in their sight. If the doctrine I oppose, be true, and the dead are not raised at all, why are they nevertheless thus baptized in the room of the dead, as cheerfully ready at the peril of their lives to keep up the cause of Jesus in the world? And indeed, how could 30

30 And why stand we in jeopardy every hour.

my conduct be accounted for in any other light, but by supposing, that we act with a steady and governing view to this great principle, and this glorious hope? Why otherwise are we every hour exposed to so much danger, in the service of a master from whom it is evident we have no secular rewards to expect? Yet, my 31 brethren, I do upon this solemn occasion protest, and even swear to you, by the greatest of all asseverations, by our hopes and our joys as Christians, by our rejoicingⁱ and confidence common

31 I protest by your rejoicing which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I die daily.

^h Who are baptized in the room of the dead.] It would be almost endless to enumerate, and much more to canvass, all the interpretations which have been given of this obscure and ambiguous phrase, ὡς τῶν νεκρῶν. I think that of Sir Richard Ellys, which I have given in the paraphrase, much preferable to any other. See Fortula Sacra. p. 157, &c. As for other interpretations, there is no reason to believe, that the superstitious customs, mentioned by Epiphanius, of baptizing a living person, as representing one who had died unbaptized, is here referred to ; it is more likely to have risen from a mistake of this passage, than to have been so early prevalent. Mr. Cradock's supposing it to allude to washing dead bodies, neither suits the grammar, nor really makes any significant sense. Nor is there any need of supposing, that νεκρῶν is put for νεκρῶν, and refers to their being baptized into the religion of Jesus, who, on the adversary's hypothesis, is still dead. The senses, which Crellius, and Bishop Atterbury maintain, differ so little from each other, and that we have given, that it may suffice to say, that each expresses but a part of the sense, and loses something of the spirit which we apprehend in these words.

ⁱ Our rejoicing.] Our received copies read it, ὑμῶν, your rejoicing ; but the reading which I follow, seems so much more natural and easy, that one can scarce forbear believing it authentic. Yet it may be interpreted into a very pertinent sense, " I protest by your joys, which I do so cordially take part in, that I may call them my own."

SECT.
XXIX.1 Cor.
XV. 31.

common to us all, and which I with you have in Christ Jesus our Lord; I protest, I say, by this, that I daily die; that is, that I am every day surrounded, as it were with death in its most terrible forms, and bear so many evils, that every hour of my life seems a new martyrdom. One great instance of this has so lately happened, that I cannot forbear mentioning it. If to speak after the manner of men, or to use a common proverbial phrase, I have, like a slave exposed upon a public theatre, fought with wild beasts at Ephesus^k, having been assaulted with the most savage fury by a tumultuous multitude there, what advantage have I gained by such a combat, if my hopes may not be allowed to open into immortality? On the contrary, if the dead rise not at all, the epicurean maxim might seem to be justified, "Let us make the best of this short life, which is the whole period of our being; and giving up those sublime sentiments and pursuits which belong not to creatures of so short and low an existence, let us eat and drink, since we are to die, as it were, to-morrow^l, or the next day: for so little is the difference between one period

of

32 If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus; what advantage hath it me, if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.

^k Fought with wild beasts at Ephesus.] The stories which Nicophorus, (lib. II. cap. 25.) and Theodoret give us, of an encounter which St. Paul had with wild beasts on the theatre at Ephesus, (see Wurst. Mel. Vit. Paul. cap. viii. sect. 23. &c.) have been so far regarded by Dr. Whitby, that he contends for the literal interpretation of this passage; in favour of which it is also urged, that had he spoken of brutal men, he would rather have mentioned the assaults that were made upon him at Lystra, where he was stoned, and supposed to be dead. But the danger of being pulled to pieces might be greater at Ephesus: it had happened very lately, and as the scene was much nearer Corinth, it might be more natural for him to mention it here. The silence of St. Luke in his history, as to so memorable an event, as a combat with beasts would have been, and St. Paul's omitting it in the large catalogue of his sufferings, (2 Cor. xi. 23.) together with his known privilege as a Roman citizen, which would probably, as to be sure it should legally, have protected him from such an insult, do all, (as Mr. Cradock, and others have observed,) favour the figurative interpretation. And the expression, καὶ ἀγῶνας, after the manner of men, humanly speaking, has a propriety on this hypothesis, which it cannot have on the other, and seems to be quite decisive.

[Let us eat, &c.] This is the great argument urged to prove, that by the resurrection of the dead, St. Paul means a future state. But the true solution seems to be, that he writes all along upon a supposition, that if such proof as he had produced of Christ's resurrection, were not to be depended upon, we could have no certainty at all with respect to any future existence. And I must declare, that it seems to me, that the natural arguments of the immortality of the soul, and future retributions, do appear to carry with them great probability, notwithstanding all that Mr. Hallet has offered to invalidate them. Yet the degree of evidence is by no means comparable to that, which, admitting the truths of the facts alledged, the Corinthians must have had of Christ's resurrection, with which ours has so necessary a connection. And consequently, had these proofs been given up, what might have been pleaded in favour of the other, would probably have made very little impression.

33 Be not deceived: Evil communications corrupt good manners.

34 Awake to righteousness, and sin not;
for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame.

of such a life, and another, that it is scarce worth while to make the distinction."

SPER.
XXIX.

Be not deceived, brethren, but be upon your guard against such pernicious maxims and reasonings as these: and if you value either faith, or a good conscience, do not converse familiarly with those that teach them; for, as the poet Menander well expresses it, Good manners are debauched by talk profane^m. Awake, therefore, *as becomes righteous and good men*ⁿ, from the intoxications of such wild and delusive dreams as these; and sin not in supporting or countenancing doctrines, so subversive of the christian faith and hope; for some are still ignorant of God, and with the abused light of christianity know less of him than well-improved reason might teach them. I say this to your shame, considering how much you boast of your knowledge, which in this plain and important branch of it, appears so wretchedly deficient; while you cultivate so many vain subtilties, which tend rather to corrupt, than to exalt and perfect your minds.

1 Cor.
XV. 33.

IMPROVEMENT.

WELL may we rejoice, to see the doctrine of our resurrection so closely connected in the sacred writings, and especially in this excellent discourse of St. Paul, with that of our blessed Redeemer; as that they should be declared to stand, or to fall together. For Christ is assuredly risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that sleep. He hath repaired, to all his spiritual seed, the damage that Adam brought upon his descendants; yea, he is become to them the author of a far nobler life, than the posterity of Adam lost by him.

Ver.
12—16
20
21—23

Let us meditate with unutterable joy on the exaltation of our glorified Head, of our gracious Sovereign, who has conquered death himself, and will make us partakers of his victory. He hath received from his Father, glory, honour, and dominion; and he shall reign till his conquest be universal and complete, and till death be not only stripped of its trophies, but rendered subservient

24—26

^m Good manners are debauched.] The original words of Menander are an imbecitose; I choose therefore to translate them thus, and it is very agreeable to the Greek in this connection, which seems to determine upon the sense of debauched.

ⁿ Awake, as becomes righteous men.] As some read for Awake, ye men, which gives rather a more forcible sense, I chose this rendering, which is a kind of medium between the two readings.

SECT.
XXIX.

servient to his triumphs; shall reign till all his purposes for his Father's glory, and his own, be finally accomplished.

Ver.

But O, who can express the joy and glory of that day! when

27 Christ shall give up the kingdom to the Father, and present unto him all his faithful subjects, transformed into his own image: a beautiful and splendid church indeed, for ever to be the object of the Divine complacence, for ever to dwell in the Divine presence, in a state of the greatest nearness to God, who shall then be all in

28 all. Well may the expectation of this illustrious period cheer the christian under his greatest extremities, and make him of all men the most happy, when otherwise, on account of his sufferings in the flesh, he might seem of all men the most miserable.

29 Well may this his rejoicing in Christ Jesus, that sacred oath, which this persecuted and distressed apostle, with so sublime a

31 spirit, here uses, encourage him to go on, though he be daily dying;

32—34 though he were daily to encounter the most savage of mankind, and death itself in its most dreadful forms. Well may this knowledge of God, of his gracious purposes, and of his exalted Son, awaken us to righteousness; well may it deliver us from the bondage of sin.

Let us retain these noble principles of doctrine and action, and guard against those evil communications, those sceptical and 33 licentious notions, which would corrupt our spirits, which would enervate every generous spark which the gospel kindles up into a flame, and by bounding our views within the narrow circle of mortal life, would degrade us from the anticipations of angelical felicity, to the pursuits of brutal gratification.

SECT. XXX.

The apostle answers objections against the resurrection, drawn from our not being able to conceive of the particular manner in which it shall be effected; and concludes with urging it, as a noble incentive to the greatest steadiness and zeal in religion. 1 Cor. XV. 35. to the end.

SECT.
XXX.

I CORINTHIANS XV. 35.

1 Cor
XV. 35.

I HAVE thus endeavoured to confirm your faith, and establish your hope, in the great and glorious doctrine of a resurrection; but some one will perhaps be ready petulantly to object, and say, How are the dead raised up, when their bodies are quite dissolved, and the particles, of which they consisted, scattered abroad, and perhaps become parts of other bodies? and if they are raised, with what [kind of] bodies do they come

1 Cor. XV. 35.

BUT some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?

come out of their graves, and what alteration is made in their constitution, and organization, to fit them for a future life, in so many respects different from this?

SECT.
XXX.

1 Cor.
XV. 35.

56 Thou fool, that when thou sowest is not quickened except it die.

Thou thoughtless creature, who perhaps prides thyself in the sagacity of this objection, as if it were some mighty effort of penetration, how easily mightest thou find an answer to it from what passes every day in the works of nature? That seed which thou sowest in thy field, is not quickened to new life and verdure, except it appear to die^a: before it springs up to the future vegetable: whatever it be, it is macerated, decayed, and at length consumed in the earth.

36

And [as for] that which thou sowest, thou sowest not the body which shall be produced from that seed which is committed to the ground, but bare grain, perhaps of wheat, or of any other kind of [grain], in which there is no appearance of root, or of stalk, of blade, or of ear. But God, in the course of his natural operations, by certain laws of vegetation, with which thou art entirely unacquainted, gives it a body as he pleases, and such a variety of parts as he hath thought fit to determine for that particular species, and to each of the seeds its own proper body^b: not only a body of the same sort, but that which by virtue of some connection it had with this or that individual grain, may properly be called its own, though in its form much different, and much more beautiful.

37

38

57 And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other rain:

58 But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body.

59 All flesh is not the same flesh: but there is one kind of flesh

There is an immense variety in the works of God, even in those which fall under the inspection of our senses, feeble and limited as they are, while we dwell in flesh and blood. All flesh, you know, is not the same kind of flesh, but the flesh

^a Except it die.] To this it hath been objected, "that if the seed die, it never bears fruit." But it is certain, that the seed in general does consume away in the ground, though a little germen, or bud, which makes a part of it, springs up into new life, and is led by the death and corruption of the rest. So that these wise philosophers of our own, talk just as foolishly as the Corinthian tree-thinkers, whom they vindicate. — See Joan. vii. 17.

^b Its own proper body.] The apostle seems more directly to speak of that as its proper body, which is peculiar to that species of grain; yet undoubtedly each ear has a peculiar reference to one individual, as its proper seed, in such a manner, as another of the same species has not; and what follows, plainly suits such a view.— God is said to give it this body as he pleases, because we know not how it is produced; and the apostle's leading thought is, "that it is absurd to argue against a resurrection on a principle which is so palpably false, as that must be, which supposes us to understand all the process of the Divine works."

SECT.
XXX.1 Cor.
XV. 40.

flesh of men, and of cattle^c, of fishes, and of fowls, is different each from the other, in its form, qualities, and manner of being subsistent. [There are] also celestial bodies, and terrestrial bodies; but the glory of the celestial, and the terrestrial, are apparently different, and the brightest lustre the latter can have, is but a faint reflection of what is received from the former.

41 And even in the glory of the celestial bodies there is also a wonderful variety: There is one superior and incomparable glory of the sun, which often shines with a lustre scarce to be endured; and another reflected and milder glory of the moon; and another glory of the stars, which as they appear to us, are far inferior to either of the two great luminaries. And again, [one] star differeth from [another] star in glory, according to their respective magnitudes, in reference to which they are ranged by astronomers under different classes.

42 So [shall be] also the resurrection of the pious dead^e: another kind of glory shall appear, than human nature has known in its purest state, in any beauty of form, or ornaments of dress. There shall indeed, as I intimated but now, be some difference in the degree of that glory, correspondent to the different excellencies in the characters of good men, on whom it is to pass: but all shall experience a most illustrious and happy change; so that it may be said concerning the body of them all in general, it is sown, or committed, like seed to the ground, in corruption, just ready to putrify, and through various forms of putrefaction to be reduced to the dust: but it is raised in incorruption, so that no accident or disorder whatsoever shall be able to dissolve it again, or to threaten it in the least degree. It is sown in dishonour, in a poor contemptible state, and under a kind of infamy, put upon it by the execution of God's first sentence flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds.

40 There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another.

41 There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory.

42 So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption;

43 It is sown in dishonour, it is raised in glory:

^c Cattle.] So domus signifies; but it seems to be put for beasts in general.

^e And one star differeth, &c.] It is in the original yes, that is, so; but I conclude, that particle is here used only as a copulative; else we must suppose the apostle to argue more philosophically than he probably intended, and to assert that the sun and moon were stars. He plainly speaks of the lustre which these celestial luminaries exhibit to us, not of what they have in themselves, without any regard to their aspects on us.

^e The resurrection of the pious dead.] Of them it is evident the apostle here speaks, and not of the dead in general. Compare verses 23, 42, 43, and 57, with 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17, and verse 54. St. Paul, (Phil. iii. 11,) and our Lord, (Matt. xxii. 30, Luke xx. 35,) mean the same thing by the resurrection.

glory: it is exalted in weakness, it is raised in power:

44 It is sovereign a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body.

45 And so it is written. The first man Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening spirit.

tence against sin: but it is raised in glory, every part and trace of the curse being abolished, and itself being formed in such a manner as to make it appear that the King of heaven delights to honour the happy spirit on which he bestows such a dress. It is soverain in weakness, absolutely incapable of any, even the lowest degree of action, or sensation, and deprived of those limited abilities which it possessed in this mortal life: but it is raised in power, endowed with almost angelic degrees of strength, vigour and activity. It is soverain an animal body,⁴⁴ formed to the purposes of animal life in this present world: but it is raised a spiritual body, formed to a noble superiority to the mean gratifications of this imperfect state, and fitted to be the instrument of the soul, in the most exalted services of the spiritual and Divine life. For it is certain, that as there is an animal body, with which we are now by daily, and frequently, by unhappy experience, acquainted; so there is also a spiritual body: God can exalt and refine matter to a degree of purity and excellence to us unknown; and there are many bodies now existing so pure and active, as that in comparison they may be called spirits. And so it is written with respect to the former, (Gen. ii. 7,) that the first man Adam, when God had breathed into its nostrils the breath of life, was made a living soul; so that even in the original state of rectitude and felicity, in which man was created, he was made capable of, and fitted to, an animal life here upon earth: whereas the Lord Jesus Christ, who by virtue of the influence he has upon all his seed, as their spiritual Head, and great federal Representative, may well be called the second, or latter Adam, [is] for an enlivening spirit^h to those who are united

SECT.
XXX.
1 Cor.
XV. 45.

f It is raised in glory.] Some think this refers to the garment of light which the body shall put on at the resurrection; on which Dr. Whitby has a remarkable note here, (compare Matt. xvii. 2; Acts ix. 3; Rev. i. 11, 15; Dan. xii. 3; Wisd. iii. 7; Matt. xiii. 43; and Mark ix. 3,) and which he thinks remarkably to illustrate the matter ex adverso.

g Made a living soul.] This is a quotation from Moses; and there seems to be a peculiar emphasis in the original, which I know not how to preserve in the translation, in the reference of ψυχῆν to ψυχῆων, in the former verse, as distinguished from ψυχαίον; and refers to such a difference between ψυχῆν, the animal soul, and ψυχαίον, the rational spirit, as is more clearly expressed, (1 Thess. v. 23,) and is also very agreeable to the import of הַיְהוּה שְׂדֵה, the word which Moses uses.

h The second—an enlivening spirit.] This is not a quotation from scripture, as some have thought, but what the apostle adds on occasion of the quotation brought above, as if he had said, Christ is the 1. Adam, as an illustrious antitype of the first, (Rom. v. 14; and he hath

SECT.
XXX.1 Cor.
XV. 46.

united to him, and will not only purify their souls by the operation of his Spirit communicated to them, but at last spiritualize their very bodies. Nevertheless, the spiritual Adam [was] not first, but the animal, and afterward the spiritual; and as the first Adam existed before Christ was sent to become our Saviour, so must we first wear that animal body which we derive from the one, before we put on that spiritual body which we derive from the other. The first man [was], from the earth, and so earthy: he was created out of the dust of the earth, and his body was only a mass of animated clay, in reference to which it was said, Dust thou art, (Gen. iii. 19;) the second man, of whom we speak. [is] the Lord from heaven: he came originally from the heavenly world, to which he is returned; and whatever of earth there was in the composition of the body he condescended to wear, it is now completely purified and refined into the most glorious form. And such as the earthy [was, are] they also that are earthy: they all descended from him, and have no higher original, are mean, mortal, corruptible creatures; and such as the heavenly [is, are] they also that are heavenly: they who are, as it were, born of Christ by the regenerating influences of his Spirit, and therefore are to live with him in heaven, shall at last have such glorious bodies as he hath. And it is delightful beyond all expression, to think of it with self-application, that as we in particular have borne, and do now bear the image of the earthy; as assuredly as we are now sinful, afflicted, and mortal men, like the first Adam: so surely shall we also bear the image of the heavenly: so surely shall we be brought to resemble Christ in purity, glory, and immortality.

50 But when I spake of bearing the image of the earthy Adam in mortality, I would not be understood as asserting, that every one of the descendants of Adam shall, in fact, go through these pangs of death, and that dissolution in the grave, which Adam has experienced. This I say, brethren, I affirm it as a constant and important

46 Howbeit, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual.

47 The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven.

48 As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy: and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly.

49 And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

50 Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the self a spirit, with which he quickeneth whom he pleases, and in what degree he pleases, John i. 4; and verse 21, 26. The words living, and enlivening, have such a correspondence to each other, as ζωον, and ζωοποιον. I therefore preferred the latter of them to quickening, though the sense be entirely the same.

the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption.

portant truth, that flesh and blood, such weak and crazy systems of it, as those in which we now lodge, cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth a body impregnated with the seeds of corruption inherit incorruption: it is utterly unfit for the pure ethereal regions of the blessed, and indeed incapable of subsisting in them.

sect.
xxx.

1 Cor.
XV. 50.

This is universally true; yet *behold! I tell you*⁵¹

a mystery, that is, a doctrine hitherto unknown, and which you cannot now be able fully to comprehend: for we Christians shall not all sleep, shall not all submit to the stroke of death, so that our bodies should all lie mouldering in the grave, which is their general doom; but we shall all, the living as well as the dead, at the appearance of Christ to the final judgment, be changed in a most glorious and happy manner into the image of our descending Lord. And⁵²

this change, great and illustrious as it is, the Divine power shall effect in less time than we have been speaking of it: for it shall pass in a moment, in an imperceptible point of time, and even in the twinkling of an eye, just at the instant when the last trumpet is blown by the Divine command, to awaken all the millions of saints who are sleeping in the dust: for the trumpet shall then sound, the voice of the archangel, and attending celestial legions, shall fill the whole earth and heaven with an astonishing noise, and the dead shall immediately, as upon its summons, be raised incorruptible, and we, that is, those of us Christians who are living, shall be changed, as Enoch and Elijah were in the day of their translation: that body, which but a moment before appeared just as ours now do, shall quick as thought, be transformed into an image of that worn by our triumphant Lord, and fitted for all the most active services, and all the purest sensations and delights of the celestial state.

For in order to that, as I have just observed, it is necessary, that this corruptible put on incorruption, and that this mortal put on immortality, so as to be no longer subject to diseases

or

⁵¹ Behold, I shew you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed,

⁵² In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump. For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed, ⁵³ For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.

[If, that is, those of us Christians who are living, shall be changed.] As the phrase will admit of the looser sense the paraphrase gives, I cannot allow of the argument drawn from hence, to prove, either that the apostle expected he should live till Christ appeared to judgment, or that he should be raised from the dead, and continue upon earth some time before that great event happened: Though I confess, the argument which Mr. Fleming draws from hence, in favour of the last of these opinions, is very plausible. Compare 1 Thess. iv. 15.

h Where

SECT.
XXX.1 Cor.
XV. 54.

or death. But when this glorious and long-expected event shall be accomplished, when this corruptible part of our frame shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall the saying be brought to pass, which is written, (Isa. xxv. 8.) Death is swallowed up in victory, and perfectly subdued and destroyed, and so happy a state introduced, that it would not be known, that death had ever had any place or power among Christ's subjects at all: And in the assured view of this, may the Christian, even now, with the greatest pleasure take up his song of triumph; Where [is] thy pointed and destructive sting, O death? Where [is] thy victory, O grave^k? How little hurt canst thou do me? For how little a while shalt thou be able to triumph over me? The very sting and torture of death, that which arms it with its greatest terrors, [is] the consideration of its being the punishment of sin, and consequently its foreboding future misery, as the effect of the Divine displeasure; and the power of sin, that which constitutes its malignity, and gives it these killing weapons, [is,] that it is a transgression of the Divine law: But thanks [be] to God, who in his infinite mercy hath taken away the sting and terror of death, and giveth us the prospects and the joys of a complete victory over it, by the displays of his pardoning grace, through our Lord Jesus Christ. May we ever remain under those grateful impressions that suit so important an obligation!

53 Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye fired on this as the great foundation of your souls, and immovable in your regards to it, though strongly borne and pressed upon, by a variety of temptations and dangers; be abounding always in the work of the Lord, in every service you are capable of performing, which may be acceptable to this your great and compassionate Redeemer; as well knowing, that your labour in the service of such a Lord is not, on the whole,

in

^k Where is thy sting, &c. The original has a kind of poetical turn, which seems in some measure to suit the sublimity of the sentiment; for the first of the clauses is an Ionic, and the second, a hothic verse, Ἦν, ὡς ὄντος, ὡς ἔστιν: πῶς ἔσται, ὡς ἔστιν: and Mr. Pope has only transposed them to make them, as they stand in our version, the conclusion of one of his stanzas; O grave, where's thy sting,

54 So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory.

55 O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?

56 The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law.

57 But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

58 Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.

tory? O death, where is thy sting? It is generally thought, that these words are borrowed from Hos. xiii. 10, 14, which we render, "O death, I will be thy plague, &c." and some urge that אֲרִי has been read for אֲרִי; but I do not see there is any certain evidence that the apostle intended any quotation at all.

in vain; but that whatsoever you may at present suffer for his sake, you shall receive a most glorious reward, in that happy day of the resurrection, concerning which I have been speaking so largely.

1 Cor. xv. 38.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET us learn from this incomparable discourse of the apostle Ver. to curb that vain curiosity which is so ready in matters of 35 Divine revelation, to break out into an unbecoming petulance; and where we are sure, that God declares the thing, let us leave it to him to overcome every difficulty that may seem to attend the manner in which it shall be effected. Nothing may be more useful, in order to the conquering such a weakness, than to observe the operations of God in the works of nature, where he gives to every seed, whether animal or vegetable, such a body as shall please him. Each is proper for its sphere, and beautiful in its 35 connection and order, though the degree of their glory be different. And thus all the diversity of glory, which shall at last be apparent, 39, 40 among the children of God, even the children of the resurrection shall serve to illustrate the Divine wisdom, and goodness, and faithfulness.

The alterations made in every instance, will indeed be wonderful, when this mortal puts on immortality, and this corruptible puts on incorruption. Let us for ever adore the Divine goodness, 53 that when, by our relation to the first Adam, we were under a sentence of condemnation and death, he was pleased in his infinite mercy to appoint, that we should stand related to Christ, 47, &c. as the second Adam, in so happy a bond, that by him we might recover what he had lost in the former; yea and far more: so that, as we have borne the image of the earthly, we might as surely 49 bear the image of the heavenly. O let us earnestly aspire after this blessedness; and remember, that our bearing the image of his holiness, is inseparably connected with the hope of so glorious a privilege!

Let us endeavour, therefore, by cultivating holiness in all its branches, to maintain this hope in all its spirit and energy; longing for that glorious day, when in the utmost extent of the prophetic expression, Death shall be swallowed up in victory, and millions of 54 voices, after the long silence of the grave, shall burst out at once 55 into that triumphant song, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? 56 And when we see death disarmed, and the 57 terrors of the law silenced, let us bless God for Jesus Christ, by whom the precepts of the law were perfectly fulfilled, and its penalty penalty endured; that so we might not only be delivered from the curse, but called to inherit the blessing. Let it be considered as an engagement to universal obedience; and in the assurance, that whatever other labours may be frustrated, those in the Lord shall never be vain, let gratitude, and interest, concur to render us stedfast, immovable, and continually active in his service.

SECT.
XXX.

Ver.
18, 19
58

SECT. XXXI.

The Apostle gives some advices, relating to the proposed collection for the poor saints in Judea. 1 Cor. XVI. 1—12.

1 CORINTHIANS XVI. 1.

SECT.
XXXI.1 Cor.
XVI. 1.

BEFORE I conclude this epistle, I must add a word or two concerning the collection which you propose making for the poor saints which are in Judea, who are in such great straits, both on account of the famine and the persecution to which they are exposed. And here I would only say this: as I have given it in charge to the churches of Galatia, so also do ye proceed: for nothing occurs to my thoughts at present, which can be more subservient to that generous and good design. When you hold your Christian assemblies on the first day of the week^a, in commemoration of the resurrection of our Lord, which has made that day sacred amongst us, let every one of you lay something by, in proportion to the degree in which, by the Divine blessing, he hath been prospered in his affairs; and let him bring it with him to the place where you meet for your public worship; then treasuring it up^b in the common stock, that so it may be ready in one sum, and there may be no necessity of making any particular collections when I come. This will save him some trouble, at a time when we shall necessarily have so much important business on our hands; and when a little is added to the stock weekly, it may rise by almost imperceptible degrees, to a greater sum than could perhaps be expected if the whole were

1 Cor. XVI. 1.

NOW concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye.

² Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.

^a On the first day of the week.] So κατὰ πρῶτον σαββάτου signifies. Compare Luke xxiv. 1; John xx. 1; with Mat. xxviii. 1; Mark xvi. 2.

^b Treasuring it up: καταθεσθε; παρ' ἑαυτῶν ἢ ἐν τῷ θησαυρῷ. [We render it, let every one of you lay by him in store. But the following words shew, that it was to be put into a common stock. The argument drawn from hence for the religious observation of the first day of the week in these primitive churches of Corinth, and Galatia, is too obvious to need any farther illustration, and yet too important to be passed by in an entire silence.

3 And when I come whomsoever you shall approve by your letters, he will send to bring your liberality unto Jerusalem.

were to be deposited at once. But when I am arrived at Corinth, whomsoever ye shall appoint and recommend by your letters; signed by the congregation, or its proper representatives; them will I send, to carry your favour to Jerusalem, and shall cheerfully instruct them to deliver it with their own hands to the poor Christians there. And if it be thought convenient, that I shall also go up thither myself on this occasion, they shall go with me; that every thing may be conducted in the most open and honourable manner, and that your messengers may witness for me, that none of the money has been employed to any purposes whatsoever, different from those from which it was given.

SECT.
XXXI.
1 Cor.
XVI. 3.

4 And if it be met that I go also, they shall go with me.

This I hope, will quickly be dispatched; for I will, if providence permit, come to you when I have passed through Macedonia; and I am just upon my journey through Macedonia; And then perhaps may continue awhile with you, and even spend the winter with you; that so when I have made you as long a visit as my affairs will admit, you may bring me forward on my journey to Jerusalem, or whithersoever else I shall go; or through whatever parts I may pass to it; for that is a circumstance about which I am not yet determined, and in which I refer myself to the future direction of Providence. I speak of my coming as at some distance; for though from these maritime parts I might easily come to you by sea, and so travel northward, when I have dispatched my business at Corinth; I will not now see you in this manner in my way; but hope the little delay which this scheme may occasion, will be made up some time with you, if the Lord permit; which the necessities of the churches of Macedonia will not at present give me leave to do. But I shall continue here at Ephesus till about pentecost

5 Now I will come unto you, when I shall pass through Macedonia; (for I do pass through Macedonia.)

for 5 I will, if providence permit, come to you when I have passed through Macedonia; and I am just upon my journey through Macedonia; And then perhaps may continue awhile with you, and even spend the winter with you; that so when I have made you as long a visit as my affairs will admit, you may bring me forward on my journey to Jerusalem, or whithersoever else I shall go; or through whatever parts I may pass to it; for that is a circumstance about which I am not yet determined, and in which I refer myself to the future direction of Providence. I speak of my coming as at some distance; for though from these maritime parts I might easily come to you by sea, and so travel northward, when I have dispatched my business at Corinth; I will not now see you in this manner in my way; but hope the little delay which this scheme may occasion, will be made up some time with you, if the Lord permit; which the necessities of the churches of Macedonia will not at present give me leave to do. But I shall continue here at Ephesus till about pentecost

6 And it may be that I will abide; yea, and winter with you, that ye may bring me on my journey, whithersoever I go.

for 7 though from these maritime parts I might easily come to you by sea, and so travel northward, when I have dispatched my business at Corinth; I will not now see you in this manner in my way; but hope the little delay which this scheme may occasion, will be made up some time with you, if the Lord permit; which the necessities of the churches of Macedonia will not at present give me leave to do. But I shall continue here at Ephesus till about pentecost

7 For I will not see you now by the way; but I trust to tarry a while with you, if the Lord permit.

8 But I will tarry at c I am just upon my journey through Macedonia.] Thus, I think, we may justly read it, Μακεδονίαν γὰρ διέρχουμαι. Macedonia was not the direct way from Ephesus to Corinth. It seems by his second epistle to the Corinthians, written a few months after this, that he was either in Macedonia, or on his way thither, (compare 2 Cor. i. 16.) from whence it appears, that he had a secret purpose of seeing Corinth in his way to, as well as from Macedonia, but he does not express this purpose here, so that we know not how it was signified to them, as from the text last mentioned it seems that it was.

d Whithersoever else I go.] In the fore-cited text, Judea is mentioned; but St. Paul does not seem to have fixed his scheme so particularly, as yet.

e I shall

SECT.
XXXI.1 Cor.
XVI. 9.

pentecoste, reserving the remainder of the summer for my tour through Macedonia, and the neighbouring parts. In the mean time, though I have spent so many months here, I am willing to make my stay as long, as with any tolerable convenience I can; for a great and effectual door of usefulness is opened to me under my apostolical character, in this populous and celebrated city, and [there are] many opposers, who may perhaps take the advantage of my absence, to injure this new planted church on which I have bestowed so much labour, and for the interest of which I have the tenderest concern.

- 10 But if in the mean time, my beloved friend and brother Timothy should come to you, see that he be with you without fear of any unkind usage, or of any attempt to set him up as the head of a party; as in some instances you have been ready to do by others; for as he is a man of a very tender and affectionate, so he is likewise of a very candid and humble spirit, and he laboureth in the work of the Lord Jesus Christ with great sincerity and zeal; as I also [do;] and we are in all respects so much in the same sentiments, that I am well assured, the things which would grieve me in your conduct, would be equally disagreeable to him. And therefore, though he be yet but a young man, (1 Tim. iv. 12,) let no man despise or make light of him; but on the contrary, bring him forward on his journey in peace, and do all that you can to make it commodious and agreeable to him; that so he may come to me at Ephesus, as soon as possible: for I expect him here with the other brethren, who

e I shall continue at Ephesus till pentecost.] I look upon this as a very plain intimation, that he was now at Ephesus; and consequently, that the inscription added at the end of this epistle, which tells us it was written from Philippi, is very far from being authentic, and I hope it will be remembered, that no credit is to be given to any of these additions, which have been very presumptuously made, and I think very imprudently retained.

A great and effectual door is opened, &c.] Some think that here is an allusion to the door of the Circus, from whence chariots were let out when the races were to begin; and that the word ἐναντιοῦνται, which I render opposers, signifies the same with antagonists, with whom the apostle was to contend, as in a course. (Acts xix. 20,

Ephesus until pteen
cost.

9 For a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries.

10 Now if Timothy come, see that he may be with you without fear: for he worketh the work of the Lord, as I also do.

11 Let no man therefore despise him; but conduct him forth in peace, that he may come unto me: for I look for him with the brethren.

&c.) This opposition rendered his presence more necessary, to preserve those that were already converted, and to increase the number, if God should bless his ministry. Accordingly a celebrated church was planted at Ephesus; and so far as we can learn from the tenor of his epistle to it, there was less to correct and reprove among them, than in most of the other churches to which he wrote.

g I expect him here with the brethren.] The original words are something ambiguous; but I have taken the sense which seemed most natural. Accordingly I think it probable, that he came to Ephesus before St. Paul was driven out of it by the tumult; and that the apostle being obliged to leave that city in so abrupt a manner, desired Timothy to stay a while after who are now the companions of his journey, and who are all dear to me in the bonds of christian love.

91. 10.
8. 11.
1 Cor.
XVI. 12.

12 As touching our brother Apollos, I greatly desired him to come unto you, with the brethren; but his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he shall have convenient time.

But as for [our] brother Apollos, who is so well known to you, and for whom many of you have so high a regard, I am sorry to tell you, that you are not at present to expect a visit from him. I was indeed very importunate with him to come to you with Timothy, and the other brethren; as I have an entire confidence, both in his friendship and prudence, and hoped, that whatever improper use has been made of his name in opposition to mine, (compare chap. i. 12, chap. iii. 4—6, his presence among you might have been useful, just at this crisis. Nevertheless, he was by no means willing to come now, lest any advantage should be taken from that circumstance to inflame those divisions he would gladly do his utmost to allay; but he will come when he shall have a convenient opportunity; and you may assure yourselves, that he retains a most cordial affection for you, and tender solicitude for your peace and prosperity.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET ministers, from the example of the apostle, learn to be ready to promote charitable collections for the relief of poor Christians; Ver. and let them frequently exhort their hearers to do good, and to communicate; reminding them, that their contributions ought to bear a proportion to the degree in which God has been pleased to prosper them.—We see an evident reference to the stated assemblies of the church on the first day of the week in this early age; and it is a proper duty of that day to devise and execute liberal things, 2 according to our respective abilities.

The prudent caution of St. Paul, as to the management of pecuniary affairs, is worthy the attention of the ministers of the gospel; and may teach them to take care, not only that they satisfy their own consciences, in the fidelity of their transactions; but also, that they provide things honest in the sight of all men. The apostle's courage, in making the opposition he met with at Ephesus a reason for his continuance there, may instruct us not to study our own ease, in the choice of our abode; but rather to prefer those circumstances, however disagreeable in themselves, wherein we may be providentially led to do most, for the advancement of religion in the world. 3, 4 after him, to settle the affairs of that important church more completely than he had an opportunity of doing it, 1 Tim. 1. 3 a Stord

His

SECT.
XXXI.

His care, that his young friend Timothy might be as easy as possible, constitutes likewise a very amiable part of his character ; Ver. and suggests, in a manner well worthy of notice, how careful 10, 11 private Christians should be, that they do not terrify and distress the minds of those who are entering on the ministerial office. A faithful disposition to labour in the work of the Lord, ought to command respect ; yet sometimes, as in the instance of Apollos, even that diligence may be so liable to misrepresentation, that it 12 may be the wisdom of ministers to absent themselves from places where they have many to caress and admire them. On the whole, the great business of life is to glorify God, in doing our best for promoting the happiness of mankind ; and no self-denial ought to seem hard to us, while we keep that glorious end in view.

SECT. XXXII.

The apostle concludes with some particular salutations, and directions ; with general exhortations to courage and love, a solemn benediction to true Christians, and an awful denunciation against those that were destitute of love to Christ. 1 Cor. XVI. 13, to the end.

I CORINTHIANS XVI. 13.

SECT.
XXXII.

NOW, my brethren, to conclude all, suffer a word of the most affectionate exhortation. Remember the situation in which you are, 1 Cor. XVI. 13. and with how many formidable enemies you are surrounded, and be watchful against all their assaults ; stand fast in the profession of the christian faith ; acquit yourselves not like children, but as men of knowledge and fortitude : and be strong^a in dependance on the best supports, 14 while you make that your constant care. And that you may not mistake this exhortation, as breathing any thing of a contentious spirit, or fitted only for persons in military life, I would subjoin this necessary caution ; let all your affairs be transacted in mutual love, and under the influence of that noble principle of unfeigned benevolence which I have been so largely describing and recommending in the former part of this epistle. (See chap. xiii.)

1 Cor. XVI. 15.

WATCH ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.

14 Let all your things be done with charity.

And

^a Stand fast—acquit yourselves like men, be strong.] There is no need of seeking a different sense of each word. If there be any difference, αὐτοῖς may refer to a strength of resolution ; καρτερωθεὶ to that cheerful and courageous expectation of a happy event, which the consciousness of so good a cause would naturally administer.

^b They

And to pay all proper regard to the house of Stephanas.

15 I beseech you brethren (ye know the house of Stephanas, that it is the first fruits of Achaia, and that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints,)

16 That ye submit yourselves unto such, and to every one that helpeth with us and laboureth.

17 I am glad of the coming of Stephanas, and Fortunatus, and Achaicus: for that which was lacking on your part, they have supplied.

18 For they have refreshed my spirit and yours: therefore acknowledge ye them that are such.

19 The churches of Asia salute you. Aquila and Priscilla salute you

And I farther beseech you, my brethren, that for as much as ye know the household of Stephanas, that it is the first-fruits of Achaia, he, and they, being among the first that were converted to Christianity in all your country, ye pay a proper regard to them: and so much the rather, as they have set themselves with peculiar resolution and care, according to the rank in which Providence has placed them, and the abilities which God hath given them, to the labour and charge of ministering to the saints^b. Now I would by all means inculcate it upon you, that you should, in all your respective ranks and circumstances of life, subject yourselves to such, and not only pay them all due personal regard, but act as you have opportunity, in harmony with them; and that under their influence you should do your utmost for the good of your Christian brethren. And thus I would have you behave to every associate in that good work and labour in which they are engaged; especially to those who are honoured with the ministerial office.

I could not but rejoice greatly at the arrival and presence of that worthy person I have just mentioned, that is Stephanas, and of Fortunatus^c, and Achaicus, who accompanied him; because they filled up your deficiency with respect to me, and gave me by their converse and friendly offices, the consolation which I might justly have expected from you all, had I enjoyed an opportunity of conversing with you, and about which I could, for your own sakes, wish that some of you had been more solicitous. For they refreshed my spirit greatly by their obliging behaviour, and edifying conversation; as I doubt not but they have often refreshed yours by their ministrations among you. Therefore I must again urge it upon you, that you pay all proper regard to such, and treat them on every occasion, with such respect and affection as so worthy a character well deserves

I must now tell you, that the churches of the provincial Asia, which lie about Ephesus, and with whom I have frequent opportunities of ^b They have set themselves, &c.] This seems to imply, that it was the generous care of the whole family to assist their fellow-Christians; so that there was not a member of it which did not do its part.

^c Fortunatus.] This worthy man sur- vived St. Paul a considerable time; for it appears from the epistle of Clement to the Corinthians, (§ 59.) that he was the messenger of the Church at Corinth to that of Rome, by whom Clement sent back that invaluable epistle.

d Aquila

secr.
xxxii.
1 Cor.
XVI. 19.

corresponding, salute you with all Christian affection; heartily wishing you peace and prosperity. Your good friends, Aquila and Priscilla, who have made so long an abode among you, and are now providentially brought hither, most affectionately salute you in the bowels of our common Lord. And with these tokens of respect receive those of the church in their house, as you know their family is happy in a large number 20 of Christian members. But I will not enter into a more particular detail of names; for your society is so celebrated, and esteemed of so great importance to the Christian interest, that I may truly say, that all the brethren salute you. Entertain therefore that affection for each other, which those that are almost strangers bear to you, and salute one another with an holy kiss; but let it be as cordially sincere as I doubt not but it will be decent.

21 I have hitherto used the assistance of a friend, to write what I dictated to him; but in order to assure you that this epistle is genuine, I here add the [salutation of [me] Paul, your well known minister, and father in the gospel, with my own hand; most cordially wishing you every blessing, 22 both temporal and spiritual. And let me here add, (that being thus written with my own pen, it may have the greater weight;) If there be any man amongst you, or elsewhere, who under the specious forms of Christianity, loveth not the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, but maintains a secret alienation of heart from him while he calls himself his servant, preferring any interest of his own to that of his Divine Master; let him be Anathema, Maran-atha: such an one is indeed worthy you much in the Lord, with the church that is in their house.

20 All the brethren greet you. Greet ye one another with an holy kiss.

21 The salutation of me Paul with mine own hand.

22 If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ,

d Aquila and Priscilla.] They had formerly made some abode at Corinth; and there St. Paul's acquaintance with them commenced. Acts xviii. 1, 2. It is therefore no wonder they were particular in their salutations.—Some copies add, πας? ος; ξενιστας, with whom also I lodge, but the authority of those manuscripts is small.

e Anathema—Maran-atha.] Among the various interpretations of these words, none seems to me so probable and satisfactory as this—when the Jews lost the power of life and death, they used nevertheless to pronounce an anathema on persons who according to the Mosaic law, should have been executed; and such a person became an anathema, or cherem, or accursed; for the expressions are equivalent. They had a full persuasion, that the curse would not be in vain; and indeed it appears they expected some judgment, correspondent to that which the law pronounced, would befall the offender; for instance, that a man to be stoned, would be killed by the falling of a stone or other heavy body upon him; a man to be strangled, would be choked; or one whom the law sentenced to the flames, would be burnt in his house, and the like. Now to express their faith, that God would one way or another, and probably in some remarkable manner interpose, to add that efficacy to his own sentence which they could not give it; it is very probable they might worthy of the most dreadful curse, and if he persist in such a wretched temper, it will certainly fall upon him. And let him be assured, that though his crime be of such a nature as not to admit human conviction and censure; yet it is known to him whose eyes are as a flame of fire, so that he searcheth the hearts and trieth the reins. And ere long, the Lord himself will come in awful pomp, to execute vengeance upon him, pronouncing him accursed before the assembled world and devoting him to utter and everlasting destruction.

Christ, let him be Anathema, Marau-atha.

SECT.
XXXII.

1 Cor.
XVI. 22.

23 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you.

But it is my hearty prayer, that no such root of bitterness and heir of misery may be found among you; and that it may not, may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ [be] with you, and all the blessed tokens and effects of his favour rest upon you, for time and eternity!

24 My love be with you all in Christ Jesus. Amen.

Be assured, that in what I have here said, I intend nothing in the least unkind to any single person among you. Far from that, my tenderest and most affectionate love [be] with you all in Christ Jesus^f; depend therefore upon my constant readiness to do all in my power, for promoting and establishing the Christian interest among you: and may it flourish more and more, till your happiness be completed in the kingdom of God above. Amen.

IMPROVEMENT.

HOWEVER the particular trials of Christians may vary in different ages, the same works in general demand their diligence: the same enemies, their watchfulness; the same difficulties, their courage might use the words, Maran-atha, that is, in Syrac, the Lord cometh, or he will surely and quickly come to put this sentence in execution and to shew, that the person on whom it falls, is indeed anathema, accursed. In beautiful allusion to this, when the apostle was speaking of a secret alienation from Christ, maintained under the forms of Christianity, (which might perhaps be the case among many of the Corinthians, and much more probably may be so among us,) as this was not a crime capable of being convicted and censured in the Christian church, he reminds them, that the Lord Jesus Christ will come at length, and find it out, and punish it in a proper manner. This weighty sentence the apostle chose to write with his own hand, and insert between his general salutation and benediction, that it might be the more attentively regarded. Compare Gal. on Rom. v. 15; and Isa. xiv. 20. Bishop Patrick on Deut. xxvii. 15.

f My love [be] with you all in Christ Jesus.] When we consider, what an alienation of affection some of these Corinthians had expressed, with respect to the apostle, this expression of tender regard to them all without any exception, is so much the more affectionate; but it would not have been agreeable to the generous spirit which dictated it, to have glanced too plainly on that circumstance in the paraphrase.

SECT.
XXXI.

rage and fortitude: nor will they ever be more likely to perform, to resist, and to endure well, than when charity reigns in their hearts, and presides over the whole of their behaviour.

We owe our humble thanks to the Author of all good, when he raises up the spirits of his servants to any distinguished activity and zeal in his cause. Christians of understanding superior to their brethren, ought to emulate such a character; and when they do so with genuine marks of becoming modesty and upright views, let all proper respect be paid to them: especially to those who are honoured with, and labour faithfully in, the ministerial office. To such let others submit themselves in love; not indeed, as to the lords of their faith, which even the apostles pretended not to be; but as friends, whom they esteem and reverence, ever tenderly solicitous to secure their comfort, and increase their usefulness.

We see, how much the apostle was concerned to promote mutual friendship among the disciples of our blessed Redeemer: how kindly he delivers the salutations of one, and another. It becomes us to remember each other with cordial regard; and in imitation of this wise example, to do all we can to cultivate a good understanding among our Christian brethren; and to abhor that disposition to sow discord, which has been so fatally successful in producing envyings, and strife, and every evil work.

To conclude all; let us lay up in our memory, and often review, this awful sentence, this Anathema—Maran-atha, which, to give it the greater weight, the apostle records with his own hand. Let it ever be remembered, that professing Christians, who do not sincerely love their master, lie under the heaviest curse which an apostle can pronounce, or a God inflict. Let the unhappy creatures take the alarm, and labour to obtain a more ingenuous temper, ere the Lord whom they neglect, and against whom they entertain a secret enmity, descend from heaven with unsupportable terror, and pronounce the anathema with his own lips, in circumstances which shall for ever cut off all hope and all possibility of its being reversed. If his solemn voice pronounce, his almighty hand will immediately execute it. How will they be cast down to destruction, as in a moment! How will they be utterly consumed with terrors! To prevent so dreadful an end of our high profession, of our towering hopes, may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with us. Amen.

THE
FAMILY EXPOSITOR:

OR, A

PARAPHRASE

ON

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE CORINTHIANS.

WITH

CRITICAL NOTES, AND A PRACTICAL IMPROVEMENT OF EACH SECTION.

A

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO THE

PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON

THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

THE first epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians was written, as hath been before observed, from Ephesus about the year of our Lord 57; towards the end of his continuance there, and in the neighbouring parts. (See Vol. III. sect 44. note a.) Upon leaving Ephesus, the apostle removed to Troas, which was situated on the shore of the Ægean sea, in expectation of meeting Titus, and receiving an account of the success with which he hoped his former epistle had been attended, and of the present state of the Corinthian church; (2 Cor. ii. 12.) But not meeting him there, (ver. 13,) he proceeded to Macedonia, where he obtained his desired interview, and received satisfaction concerning the promising state of affairs at Corinth. From this place the apostle wrote his second epistle to the Corinthians, intrusting it to the care of Titus, who was returning to Corinth to forward the collection intended for the poor christians in Judea. From these historical circumstances, the date of this second epistle must be fixed within a year after the former. (See Vol. III. sect. 45. note b.)

In the introduction to the first Epistle we observed, that its design was to rectify some sad disorders and abuses which had crept into the church of Corinth; and answer their queries upon some important points, in which they had desired his determination. The intention of the present epistle is, in general, to illustrate some of the same points upon which he had discoursed in the former, according to the light which Titus had given him into the circumstances and temper of the Corinthian church; interspersing and enforcing some occasional reflections and advices upon various

various subjects, as he thought most conducive to their instruction and edification.

But to give a more distinct view of the scheme and contents of this second epistle—The apostle, after a general salutation, expresses his grateful sense of the Divine goodness, in preserving him from the dangers to which he had been exposed in Asia; professing his unshaken confidence in God's continued guardianship, supported by a sense of his own integrity; (chap. i. 1—12.) Which declarations of his integrity he further illustrates; applying it particularly to those views on which he had declined the visit to Corinth, which in the former epistle he seems to have promised, (ver. 13, to the end.) The case of the unhappy person, who had committed incest with his father's wife, and whom upon account of the scandal he had brought on his Christian profession, the apostle directed them to exclude from communion, had made a deep impression on his mind: This, he intimates, was the reason of his having deferred the visit to Corinth; that he might not meet them with grief, nor till he had received advice of the effect of his apostolical admonitions, and their salutary and seasonable discipline. The affection of the apostle to the Corinthians is here manifested, both in his sympathy with the offending member of their church while under censure, whom now, being penitent, he advises them to re-admit to their communion; and also in his solicitude for certain tidings concerning their welfare by Titus, whom not finding at Troas, as before observed he went to meet in Macedonia, (chap. ii. 1—15.)

In further vindication and support of his apostolical character against the insinuations and objections of the false teachers at Corinth, the apostle, having just intimated that a large door of success had been opened to him at Troas, and elsewhere, makes a transition to this subject; and expresses in the most affectionate terms his thank-giving to God for having intrusted him with the ministry of the gospel, and for the success attending his services; declaring his lively confidence in all events, of the Divine acceptance, and speaking of the Corinthians as his credentials, written by the finger of God, (ver. 14, to the end. chap. iii. 1—6.) And as an illustration of the dignity of the ministerial office, he descants in a very pertinent and judicious manner, on the comparative obscurity of the Mosaic law, and the superior glory and permanence of the gospel, (ver. 7, to the end.) He then disclaims all sinister views, and distrust of success, in pursuing the glorious ministry he had described, from a firm persuasion that such a gospel could not be rejected, but in consequence of the most fatal prejudices, (chap. iv. 1—6.) And while he acknowledges his own infirmities, he glories in the strength communicated to him from God, as an effectual support under the extremest trials: (ver. 7—15;) Describing the glorious hopes which he entertained beyond the grave, as a ground of triumph in the face of danger, and a noble incentive to preserving fidelity and steadfastness, (ver. 16, to the end, chap. v. 1—10.) Touching again upon the ardour with which

which he prosecuted the gospel-ministry, he makes a kind of apology for it, pleading the irresistible constraints of the Redeemer's love, and the infinite importance of the overtures of reconciliation; which in a most pathetic address he urges the Corinthians to embrace; [ver. 11, to the end, chap. vi. 1, 2;) And then expatiates with great copiousness on the temper with which, in the midst of afflictions and persecutions, he and his brethren executed their important embassy, (ver. 3—10.)

It is easy to observe, on the most cursory view of this argument, with what delicacy, as well as energy, it is all along conducted. As the apostle manages his subject in the tenderest and most affectionate manner, and intermingles general reflections for the instruction and consolation of the Corinthians; which however had an evident sub-servience to his main design; he conciliates their regard, and fixes the impressions which his former epistle had made, in a more insinuating and therefore more effectual way, than if he had exerted his authority, and wrote with more closeness and severity of stile. And having been informed by Titus, that the defence of his mission, and apology for his conduct, contained in his former epistle, had not been utterly in vain, he manifests his satisfaction in the present disposition of the Corinthians, by giving his reasonings upon this head a more diffusive and practical turn.

After this, the epistle affords us a further instance of his affection, in his judicious and pathetic exhortation to the Corinthians, (additional to what he had formerly said, when they desired his opinion upon the head of marriage.) to avoid those alliances or intermarriages with idolaters, which might tend to ensnare them. pleading the gracious promises of God to his people, as an engagement to the strictest purity, and as a motive to aspire after the sublimest attainments in religion. (ver. 11, to the end. chap. vii. 1.)

From this digression he returns to the subject he had before been treating; and to remove any degree of prejudice which might yet lurk in their breasts against his apostolical character, he appeals to them for the integrity and disinterestedness of his conduct; professing that the freedom he uses, was not intended to reproach their diffidence, but sprung from an unfeigned and ardent concern for their welfare; which he illustrates by the pleasure with which he received the assurances of their good state by Titus, and the part he had taken in their sorrows, which his necessary reproofs had occasioned, and by his present joy, in that those sorrows had happily issued in their reformation. (ver. 2, to the end.)

The apostle had proposed to the Corinthians, in the close of the former epistle, their making a contribution for the relief of the poor saints in Judea: resuming the subject, he recommends to them the example of the Macedonians, reminds them of the grace of our blessed Redeemer, and gives some advices as to the manner manner of collecting and transmitting their bounty; (chap. viii. 1—12.) Expressing his joy for the readiness of Titus to assist in finishing the collection, and making an honourable mention of the worthy character of other Christian brethren, whom he had joined with him in the same commission. (ver. 16, to the end.) He then with admirable address further urges their liberal contribution, and in a full assurance of its success, recommends them to the Divine blessing. (chap. ix. throughout.)

Having expressed in the former part of the epistle, and on occasion of this contribution, his confidence in the abundant grace which had been bestowed on the Corinthians, the apostle takes an opportunity of stating and obviating some reflections which some among them had thrown upon him for the mildness of his conduct, as if it proceeded from fear. He therefore asserts his apostolical power and authority; cautioning his opponents that they should not urge him to give too sensible demonstrations of it upon themselves. (chap. x. throughout.) And further vindicates himself from the perverse insinuations of such as opposed him at Corinth; particularly on the head of his having declined to receive a contribution from the church for his maintenance; which, though greatly to his honour, was by his opposers ungenerously turned to his disadvantage. (chap. ix. 1—15.) To magnify his office as an apostle, he commemorates his labours and sufferings in the cause of Christ; yet in such a manner, as plainly shews, it was disagreeable, however necessary it might be, to dwell on a subject that appeared like sounding his own applause, (ver. 16, to the end.) And with great clearness and plainness, yet at the same time with equal reluctance and modesty, he gives a detail of some extraordinary revelations which he had received from God, and of his experience of those Divine aids which taught him to glory in his own infirmities. (chap. xii. 1—10.) And upon the whole, vindicates the undisguised openness and sincerity of his conduct, and his visible superiority to secular considerations, in all his carriage towards the church at Corinth. (ver. 11, to the end.) Closing his epistle with the tenderest assurances, how much it would grieve him to be obliged to evince his apostolical power, by inflicting any miraculous punishment on those who continued to oppose him; and then subjoining the most respectful salutations, and his solemn benediction. (chap. xiii. throughout.)

It is evident from this view of the epistle, that a very large part of it is employed in reclaiming the Corinthian church from their undue attachment to Judaizing teachers, and from that party-spirit into which they had fallen; and in re-kindling proper regards to the unadulterated doctrine of the gospel, and to his own apostolical counsels, who had been their spiritual father in Christ. That this leading design of the apostle is occasionally interrupted by the introduction of other matters, and particularly the

the subject of the contribution for the poor saints in Judea, will be no objection, I apprehend, if narrowly examined, to the accuracy and beauty of this excellent composition; for the transitions which St. Paul makes, arise from some obvious and important sentiments, which render them natural and just. And there is an admirable wisdom in such digressions, as they relieve the minds of the Corinthians from that painful uneasiness which they must have felt from a constant attention to so disagreeable a subject; I mean their unsuitable conduct towards the apostle himself. It is with the same kind of propriety and sagacity, that the severe intimations, which the dignity of the apostolic character obliged St. Paul to drop against those who might persevere in their opposition, are reserved to the close of the epistle; as they would fall with additional weight, in all probability, after their minds had been softened with the reiterated expressions of his tender affection to the Corinthians in general, and the innocence and amiableness of his character had been represented in such a variety of views.

PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON THE

SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS

SECT. I.

The Apostle Paul, after a general salutation, expresses his grateful sense of the Divine goodness, in preserving him from the dangers to which he had been exposed in Asia; professing his unshaken confidence in God's continued guardianship, supported by the consciousness of his integrity before him. 2 Cor. 1 1—12.

2 COR. I. 1.

PAUL an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints which are in all Achaia:

2 CORINTHIANS I. 1.

YOU receive this epistle from Paul, who hath the honour to call himself an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the sovereign will of God; who hath shewn by the victory of his grace over me, how able he is to bend the most obdurate and reluctant will to his own purposes, and triumph over the opposition of the most obstinate heart. And Timothy, a beloved brother^a in Christ Jesus, joins with me in this second address to the church of God, that is in Corinth; whom he hath mercifully called out from the world,

SECT.
i.1 Cor.
I. 1.

^a Timothy, a beloved brother. This shews, that Timothy was returned to St. Paul, since he wrote the last epistle; and his joining the name of Timothy with his own, is an instance of the generous desire which St. Paul had to establish, as much as possible, the reputation and influence of this excellent young minister. Some have thought this is the reason why the apostle so often speaks in the plural number in this epistle; but it is certain, he often speaks in the singular, and that there are passages here, as well as in the epistle to the Thessalonians, in which he uses the plural, without intending to include Timothy. See chap. iii. 1—3; chap. vii. 5; chap. xii. 19; 2 Thess. ii. 1—9. He also joins the name of Sosthenes with his own, in the former epistle, as also the name of Timothy to the epistle to the Philippians, and Colossians: yet does not use the plural there.

b Cannot

SECT.

i.

2 Cor.

I. 1.

world, and united to himself. A society for which I have always the tenderest regard; the respective members of which I now most cordially salute; with all, who, by their Christian profession, are numbered among the saints, that 2 are in the whole region of Achaia. I greet you, as I do all my brethren in such addresses: saying from my heart, May grace and peace [be] in rich abundance communicated to you all, from God our Father, the compassionate Source of universal goodness, and from the Lord Jesus Christ: through whom alone such invaluable blessings can be conveyed to such sinful creatures
 3 as we are. While I sit down to write to you, my dear brethren, in the midst of circumstances which the world might think very deplorable, (compare 1 Cor. iv. 9, &c.) I cannot forbear bursting out into the language of joy and praise^b, for such a variety of Divine favours, as is conferred on myself and you. Blessed, for ever blessed, by the united songs of men and angels, [be] the great God and Father of our beloved Lord and gracious Saviour Jesus Christ, through whom we have this free access to him, this secure interest in him: so that we can now, with unutterable delight, view him as the Father of mercies, from whose paternal compassion all our comforts and hopes are derived; and as the God of all consolation, whose nature it is ever to have mercy, and who knows how to proportion his supports to the exigence of every trial.
 4 For ever adored be this benevolent and compassionate Being, who comforteth us in all our pressing tribulation^c, by such seasonable appearances in our favour. And this, I know, is not merely for our own sakes, but that we, taught by our own experience, may be able, in the most tender, suitable and effectual manner, to comfort those

2 Grace be to you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort;

4 Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are

^b Cannot forbear bursting out, &c.] It is very observable, that eleven of St. Paul's thirteen epistles begin with exclamations of joy, praise and thanksgiving. As soon as he thought of a Christian church planted in one place or another, there seems to have been a flow of most lively affection accompanying the idea, in which all sensibility of his temporal afflictions, or theirs, were all swallowed up, and the fulness of his heart must vent itself in such cheerful, exalted and devout language.

^c Comforteth us.] It is certain, that the mention of these experiences must have a powerful tendency to conciliate the regard of the Corinthians to St. Paul; and such an introduction to his epistle, as the whole of this is, must naturally prejudice them strongly in his favour; yet this does not seem to have been by any means his aim, nor is there any appearance of art in it; but all is the genuine overflowing of an heart, which rejoiced in the consolations of the gospel felt by itself, and communicated to others. See verse 12, which is much illustrated by this connection.

d Comforted

are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God.

5 For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ.

6 And whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer: or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation.

7 And our hope of you is steadfast, knowing that as you are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the consolation.

d Comforted of God.] Some think this refers particularly to the comfort which the repentance of the incestuous person gave St. Paul, after the affliction he had endured on his account; (compare chap. vii. 7;) but it seems more natural, to understand it of the general consolation arising from the pardon of sin, an interest in God, an assurance that nothing should separate him from Christ, that afflictions should co-operate for his advantage, and that a crown of glory heightened by these trials should close the scene. On these topics he frequently insists in his epistles, and none can be more important and delightful.

o Our hope concerning you is steadfast.]

those who are in any tribulation, by the communication of that comfort whereby we ourselves are comforted of God^d, and methinks every support I feel, is much endeared to me, by the consideration, that the benefit of it may be reflected upon others. Because as the sufferings we endure in the cause of Christ, and in conformity to his example, abound with respect to us, so our consolation by Christ, the comforts which arise from God in him, does abound much more, and quite over-balance the distress.

And much of this satisfaction to us arises from 6 the hope we have with relation to you, my dear friends and Christian brethren; for whether we be afflicted, [it is,] we don't not, in subservience to the views of your present consolation, and your future and eternal salvation: which is so much the more effectually wrought out, by the patient enduring of the same sufferings, which we also undergo, and which by our example you are taught the less to wonder at, and to bear with the greater fortitude: or whether we be comforted, [it is] still with the same view, for your consolation and salvation; that your eternal happiness may be promoted by those comforts which we are enabled to communicate to you with the greater efficacy. And our hope concerning you, that this will be the happy end of all, [is] steadfast and cheerful^e: knowing, that as ye are partakers of the sufferings to which we refer, so you also have already, in some degree, your share of the consolation which arises from principles and hopes which are not peculiar to us, who are apostles, or inferior ministers of the gospel, but common to all sincere believers; in which

These words, in several good manuscripts, are put in connection with the first clause of the 6th verse; and so the version will run thus, Whether we be afflicted, it is in subservience to your consolation and salvation, which is effectually wrought out by the patient enduring of the same sufferings which we also undergo; and our hope concerning you is steadfast; or, whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation, knowing that as ye are partakers of the sufferings, so also of the consolation. And the repetition of the words consolation and salvation, shews how agreeable the thought was to him; so that he loved to speak of it again and again.

secr.
1.
2 Cor.
1. 4.

SECT.
i.

which number I persuade myself that you in the general are

2 Cor.
I. 8.

We write thus concerning the trials of the Christian life, having so lately experienced them in a large measure: for we would not have you, our dear brethren, ignorant concerning our affliction, which within these few months befel us in Asia^f, and particularly at Ephesus; that we were exceedingly pressed with it, even beyond our power; so that we despaired of being able even to live any longer, and were looked upon by others as dead men. And not only did others apprehend this concerning us, but we ourselves did indeed think, that the appointed end of our ministry and life was come; and had, as it were, received the sentence of death in ourselves, the execution of which we were continually expecting; but the event shewed, that it was wisely appointed by Divine Providence to make our deliverance the more remarkable; and that we might learn for the future, not to trust in ourselves, nor merely to regard human probabilities, but in the greatest extremities to repose a cheerful confidence in the power and providence of that God, who raiseth the dead, at his holy pleasure, by his omnipotent word: Who rescued us, on this ever-memorable occasion, from so great a death as then threatened us, and doth rescue us from every danger which now surrounds us, and in whom we trust that he will make our deliverance complete, and still rescue us from every evil, and preserve us to his heavenly kingdom.

11 I say, that I have this confidence in God's continual care; and it is the more cheerful, as I persuade myself you are, and will be, working together in prayer for us, that so the favour [obtained] for us by the importunate prayers of many, may be acknowledged by the thanksgiving of many

8 For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life:

9 But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead.

10 Who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us:

11 You also helping together by prayer for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of many persons, thanks may be given by many on our behalf.

^f The afflictions which befel us in Asia.] Mr Cradock thinks, that here he begins to apologize for not coming to Corinth, and introduces these troubles as an excuse for not seeing them. I think it is rather to be connected with the preceding discourse. Yet still it might incline them to drop their complaints, and judge more favourably of him, when they considered in what painful and dangerous circumstances he had, on the present openings of duty, been spending that time in which they had been expecting him at Corinth. As for the afflictions here spoken of, some have thought, that this may refer to the persecutions at Lystra, where St. Paul's danger had been so extreme, and he had been recovered by miracle; (Acts xiv. 19, 20;) but as that happened so long before the visit to Corinth, in which he planted the church there, (Acts xviii. 1.) it seems more probable, that he either refers to some opposition which he met with in his journey through Galatia and Phrygia, (Acts xviii. 23,) of which no particular account has reached us; or to what happened at Ephesus, (Acts xix. 29, 30.) which is Dr. Whitby's opinion.

12 For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity, and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-wards.

many on our account, as nothing can be more reasonable, than that mercies obtained by prayer, should be owned in praise. And this confidence which we have both towards God and you, is much emboldened, as we have an inward assurance of our own integrity, however men may suspect, or censure us: for this is still our rejoicing, which no external calamities can impair, or injuries destroy, even the testimony of our conscience in the sight of God who searcheth the secrets of all hearts, that in simplicity, and godly sincerity, maintaining perpetually that sense of the Divine presence and inspection, which is the surest guard upon unfeigned integrity, and not with that carnal wisdom which is so ungenerously and unrighteously imputed to us but by the grace of God, and such sentiments of fidelity and benevolence as that blessed principle inspires, we have had, and still continue to have, our conversation in the world; and more especially towards you, with respect to whom, in some circumstances of opposition that have happened among you, we have been peculiarly obliged to watch over our conduct; lest inadvertency should in any instance give an handle to the malice of our enemies, to exert itself in strengthening prejudices against us, and destroying those fruits of our labours among you, for which we could not but be greatly concerned.

SPEC.
I.
2 Cor.
I. 12.

IMPROVE-

g That so the favour obtained, &c.] There is something very perplexed and ambiguous in the structure of this sentence. I have sometimes thought it might be rendered, that υπερ ημων, on our account, thanks may be rendered by many persons, for (περ ημας χαρισμας) the gift, or miraculous endowment, which is in us, or deposited with us, (δεν πολλων,) for the sake of many; as if he had said, That many may join with us, in returning thanks for these miraculous endowments which were lodged with me, not for my own sake, but for the benefit of many. This would be a sentiment worthy an apostle; but the rendering in the paraphrase seemed, on the whole, the most natural and simple; especially as δεν, with a genitive, seldom, if ever, signifies for the sake, but rather by the means of any afterwards mentioned.

h Simplicity, plain-heartedness.] Not only meaning well on the whole, but declining an over-artful way of prosecuting a good end.

i Especially towards you.] His working with his own hands for his maintenance, among the Corinthians, (Acts xviii. 3. 1 Cor. ix. 15.) which he did not every where do, must be a convincing proof of this.

IMPROVEMENT.

SECT.

i.

LET the venerable title of saints, by which the apostle so often describes, and addresses Christians, be ever retained in our minds ;
 Ver. that we may remember the obligations we are under to answer it
 1 as we would avoid the guilt and infamy of lying to God and men, by falsely and hypocritically professing the best religion, very possibly to the worst, undoubtedly to the vainest purposes. And that we may be excited to a sanctity becoming this title, let us often think of God, as the father of mercies, and as the God of all
 3 consolation ; and let us think of him, as assuming these titles, under the character of the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ: so shall we find our hearts more powerfully engaged to love and trust in him, and enter into a more intimate acquaintance and frequent converse with him.

4 From him let us seek consolation in every distress ; considering these supports, which we so experience, not as given for ourselves alone, but for others ; that we on the like principles, may comfort them. Let ministers, in particular, regard them in this view, and rejoice in these tribulations which may render them more capable of comforting such as are in any trouble, by these consolations with which they themselves have been comforted by God ; that 11 so the church may be edified, and God glorified in all, by the thanksgiving of many, for mercies obtained in answer to united prayers.

Let us particularly remember the support which St. Paul experienced, when he was pressed above measure, and as it seemed, quite beyond his strength, so as to despair of life, and received the sentence of death in himself ; as what was wisely appointed to 9 teach him a firmer confidence in God, who raiseth the dead. Strong as his faith was, it admitted of farther degrees ; and the improvement of it was a happy equivalent for all the extremities he suffered. He therefore glories, as secure of being rescued from future dangers. Nor was his faith vain, though he afterwards fell by the hand of his enemies, and seemed as helpless a prey to their malice and rage, as any of the multitudes whose blood Nero, or the instruments of his cruelty, poured out like water. Death is 10 itself the grand rescue to a good man, which bears him to a state of everlasting security ; and in this sense every believer may adopt the apostle's words, and while he acknowledges, past and present, may assuredly boast of future deliverances.

Happy shall we therefore be, if by Divine grace we are enabled, at all times, to maintain the temper and conduct of Christians ; and may confidently rejoice in the testimony of our consciences, that our

our conversation in the world is in simplicity and godly sincerity ; that our ends in religion are great and noble ; that our conduct is simple and uniform ; in a word that we act as in the sight of an heart-searching God. Then may we look upon the applauses, or the censures of men, as comparatively a very light matter ; and may rest assured, if, as with regard to the apostle in the instance before us, he suffers a malignant breath, for a while, to obscure the lustre of our character, the day is near, which will reveal it in unclouded glory.

SECT. II.

The Apostle goes on solemnly to declare his general integrity ; and particularly applies that declaration to the views on which he had declined that visit to Corinth, which he had intimated an intention of making. 2 Cor. I. 13, to the end.

2 Cor. I. 13,

FOR we write none other things unto you, than what ye read, or acknowledge ; and I trust ye shall acknowledge even to the end ;

2 CORINTHIANS I. 13.

I SPEAK of the integrity with which I have conducted myself among you, with great freedom ; for we write no other things to you on this head, but what ye well know^a and must be obliged to acknowledge ; and I hope that ye will have equal cause to acknowledge [them] even unto the end ; for by the Divine grace, you shall never have just cause to speak or think dishonourably of us, or to reflect upon any inconsistency in our behaviour. As indeed ye have already, acknowledged us in part ; you have acknowledged, that you have had no occasion of blaming us ; for though some among you are not so ready to do us justice as the rest are, yet most avow it with pleasure and thankfulness, that we are your boasting, and that ye have cause to glory in your relation to us ; as ye also in this respect. (with humble gratitude to the great author of all our successes, be it ever spoken,) [are] ours now, and will, I trust, be so in the great day of the Lord Jesus ; when we hope to present you before Christ, as the seals of our ministry, and to lead you on to that heavenly kingdom, in the faithful pursuit of which we have already been so happy as to engage you:

And

^a What ye know.] The word ἀγνοέω is ambiguous, and may signify either to acknowledge, to know, or to read ; but I think the sense here plainly determines it to knowing.

^b Make seer.

ii.

2 Cor.
I. 15.

And in this confidence I was long before desirous of coming to you, and enjoying another interview with friends, who have long lain so near my heart : that the expected transports of that blessed day, might in some degree be anticipated both on my part, and on yours; and accordingly would have come to you much sooner, not only on my own account, but likewise that ye might have a second benefit: as I doubted not but it would have been much to your advantage, as well as have given you a great deal of joy, to have seen and conversed with your father in Christ, who had once been so dear and so welcome to you.

16 And indeed my scheme was to pass by you into Macedonia, and make you a short visit^b in my way thither; and then having dispatched my business in the churches there, to come to you again from Macedonia, and make a longer stay; that so I might be brought forward by you in my journey toward Judea, when I shall go thither to deliver the money raised by the contribution of the Gentile Christians for their Jewish brethren, when they shall meet at Jerusalem on occasion of some of their great feasts. (See Acts xx. 16.)

17 Now when I intended this, did I use levity in projecting my scheme or throwing it aside on any trifling occasion? Or the things which I purpose, in general, do I purpose according to the flesh; according to carnal principles and views; that I should be continually changing my measures in the prospect of every little interest that may lead one way or another, and breaking my word so that there should be with me, yea, yea, and nay, nay; such an uncertainty and inconsistency of counsels and actions, that none should know how to depend upon me, or what they had

15 And in this confidence I was minded to come unto you before, that you might have a second benefit;

16 And to pass by you into Macedonia, and to come again out of Macedonia, unto you, and of you to be brought on my way toward Judea.

17 When I therefore was thus minded, did I use lightness? or the things that I purpose, do I purpose according to the flesh, that with me there should be yea, yea, and nay, nay?

^b Make you a short visit] δι' ὑμῶν διελθὼν εἰς Μακεδονίαν some have understood of going into Macedonia without calling on them in his way. But as he went from Ephesus to Macedonia, it was not his direct way to go by Corinth; especially considering the road we know he did take, by Troas; and if he were now in Macedonia, as I think there is great reason to believe he was, there would on that interpretation have been no such appearance of change in his purpose, as should have needed any apology. I therefore conclude, that his first scheme was to have made them two visits, the one in his way to Macedonia, (perhaps sailing from Ephesus to Corinth,) and then another and longer, in his return. This the word πάλιν, again, seems to intimate, and if this were his purpose, it was now plain in fact, that he had changed it. The grand objection against this is 1 Cor. xvi. 7, which can only be reconciled by a supposition, that he had altered his purpose between the date of that epistle and his quitting Ephesus; and had given them, perhaps, by some verbal message, some intimation of it.

18 But as God is true our word toward you was not yea and nay.

had to expect from me? No; I solemnly protest, that [as] the God, whom I serve, [is] faithful, our word to you on other occasions, and on this, hath not been wavering and uncertain; sometimes yea, and sometimes nay; but that I have always maintained a consistency of behaviour, the natural attendant of sincerity and truth, which is always uniform and invariable.

scrip. ii.
2 Cor. I. 18.

19 For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea.

For our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, our great Redeemer, who was preached by us amongst you, that is, by me, and Silvanus, and Timothy, who joined our labours among you, (Acts xviii.

19

15,) as we now join in writing to you this epistle, (according to what I observed in the inscription of it,) was not yea and nay: Christ and his gospel were not inconsistent and contradictory; but in him all was yea; and he is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, the declarations of his word, and the engagements of his covenant are inviolably the same. For all the many and invaluable precious promises of God, which are given us by this covenant, and established in his blood, [are] in him yea, and in him amen. They are now attended with stipulations and engagements, which may be sufficient to confirm the weakest faith, when we consider what an astonishing way God has been pleased to take for the communication of mercy by his Son; so that the more we attend to them the more we shall see of their invariable truth and certainty; and all tends to the glory of God by us, which we constantly make the end of our administration, and so are animated to maintain one regular series of uniform truth, as in his sight and presence.

20 For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen, unto the glory of God by us.

But we say not this, as arrogating any thing to ourselves; for we most readily acknowledge, that he who also by his strengthening grace, confirmeth and establisheth us, together with you

21

21 Now he which establisheth us with you

^e In him yea, and in him amen] Nothing can really render the promises of God more certain than they are; but God's giving them to us through Christ, assures us, that they are indeed his promises, as in Christ there is such a real evidence of his conversing with men; and as the wonders which God hath actually wrought in the incarnation, life, resurrection, and ascension of his Son, (facts in themselves much stronger than any of the glorious consequences to follow,) tend greatly to confirm our faith, and make it easier for us to believe such illustrious promises as those which are given us; the very greatness of which might otherwise have been an impediment to our faith, and have created a suspicion, not whether God would have performed what he had promised, but whether such promises were really given us.

^d Establisheth us.] To explain this of furnishing St. Paul with such arguments as enabled him more and more to confirm the

SECT.
ii.2 Cor.
I. 21.

you, in the faith and love of Christ, and he that hath anointed us, as a kind of first-fruits of his creatures, with that Spirit, which gives us a capacity for all the services to which we are called out, and furnishes us with all our credentials in it, [is] the blessed God himself: 22 Who hath also sealed us^e, to mark and secure^f us for his peculiar property, and, in further confirmation of his regard for us, given us the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts, those sacred communications both of gifts and graces which lead us into enjoyments that we look upon as the anticipation of heaven, and not only as a pledge, but a foretaste of it. This is the happy state into which we are now brought, for which I desire ever to glorify and adore the Divine goodness, and to behave, as one that is favoured with such invaluable blessings, and with such glorious prospects as these.

23 But with respect to that change in my purpose of coming to you, which some would represent as an instance of a contrary conduct, I call God for a record on my soul, and declare to you, even as I hope he will have mercy upon it^g, that it was, not because I slighted my friends, or feared mine enemies, but out of a real tenderness, and with a desire to spare you that uneasiness which I thought I must in that case have been obliged to give you, that I came not as yet to Corinth, as I had once intended, 24 and given you some reason to expect. I mention this, not because we pretend to have any absolute dominion over your faith, so as of my own authority to dictate what you should believe you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God.

22 Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.

23 Moreover, I call God for a record upon my soul, that to spare you I came not as yet into Corinth.

24 Not for that we have dominion over your

the Corinthians in the Christian faith, and himself in the character of a faithful minister, is, I think, giving but a small part of the genuine and sublime sense of this excellent passage.

[Who hath anointed us—sealed us.] Mons. Saurin thinks, that the difference between the unction, the seal, and the earnest, of the Spirit is this, that the unction chiefly refers to those extraordinary endowments by which the apostles were set apart to their work, as priests and kings were consecrated to theirs, by being anointed; the seal, to the sacraments, which marked them out as the peculiar property of God; and the earnest he explains, of those joys of the Holy Ghost, which were the anticipation of celestial happiness. See Saur. Ser. Vol. X. p. 80—85.

[Mark and secure us.] That sealing refers to both these, is well shown by Dr. Whitby's note on this text. Some understand this verse as insinuating how unreasonable it would be to suspect him of levity, who was sealed by such extraordinary gifts of the Spirit. Compare John vi. 27. But that argument would be something precarious; and as he speaks of the earnest of the Spirit in the hearts of believers, I thought the interpretation here given much preferable.

[Have mercy on it.] Nothing but the great importance of St. Paul's vindicating his character to such a church, would have justified the solemnity of such an oath.

your faith, but are helpers of your joy:
for by faith ye stand.

lieve, or do; nor would we exert the power with which Christ has endowed us, to any tyrannical or overbearing purposes; but we, even I, and all the faithful ministers of our Lord Jesus Christ, are joint helpers of your joy: we labour to use all the furniture which God hath given us, to the advancement of your real comfort and happiness; which can only be secured by reducing you to your duty: but this very care will oblige us sometimes to take disagreeable steps with regard to those that act in such a manner, as might tend to subvert the faith of their brethren: for by faith ye have stood hitherto: I readily acknowledge you have in the general adhered to it; and it is by retaining the same principles pure and uncorrupted, with a realizing sense of them on our hearts, that we may still continue to stand in the midst of all the opposition we necessarily meet with, from men insensible of every bond of duty and gratitude.

SECT.
II.
2 Cor.
I. 24.

IMPROVEMENT.

ALL the promises of God are yea and amen in Christ: let us depend upon it, that they will be performed; and make it our great care, that we may be able to say, that we are interested through him in the blessings to which they relate. Let there be a proportionable steadiness and consistence in our obedience; and let not our engagements to God be yea and nay, since his to us are so invariably faithful.

Are we established in Christ? Are we sealed with the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts? Let us acknowledge that it is God who hath imparted it to us; and let Christians of the greatest steadiness and experience be proportionably humble, rather than by any means elated on account of their superiority to others.

We see the light in which ministers should always consider themselves, and in which they are to be considered by others; not as having dominion over the faith of their people, having a right to dictate by their own authority, what they should believe, or, on the same principles, what they should do; but as helpers of their joy, in consequence of being helpers of their piety and obedience. In this view, how amiable does the ministerial office appear! What a friendly aspect it wears upon the happiness of mankind! And how little true benevolence do they manifest who would expose it to ridicule and contempt!

SECT.
ii.

Let those who bear that office, be careful that they do not give it the most dangerous wound, and abet the evil works of Ver. 11. those who despise and deride it; which they will most effectually

- 17 do, if they appear to form their purposes according to the flesh. Let them with a single eye direct all their administrations to the glory of God and the edification of the church; that they may
- 13 be able to appeal to their hearers, as those that must acknowledge, and bear their testimony to their uprightness. In that case, they will be able to look on them as those in whom they hope to
- 14 re-joyce in the day of the Lord. And if, while they pursue these ends, they are censured as actuated by any mean and less worthy principle, let them not be much surprised or discouraged: they share in exercises from which the blessed apostle St. Paul was not exempted; and indeed there is no integrity, or caution, which can guard any man from the effects of that malice against Christ and his gospel, with which some hearts overflow, when they feel themselves condemned by it.

SECT. III.

The apostle expresses his great affection to the Corinthians, as manifested both in his sympathy with the offending member of their church, who, having been under censure, was now penitent; (in which view he advises his re-admission :) and also in his solicitude for tidings concerning them from Titus, whom not finding at Troas, he went to meet in Macedonia. 2 Cor. II. 1—13.

SECT.
iii.

2 CORINTHIANS II. 1.

2 Cor. II. 1.

2 Cor.
II. 1.

I NOW plainly and faithfully tell you the true reason of that delay of my journey, which has so much surprised most of you, and at which some appear to be scandalized. It was not that I forgot you, or failed in any friendly regards to you; but I determined this with myself, on hearing how things stood among you, that I would not, if it could by any means be prevented, come to you again in grief^a; in circumstances which must have grieved both myself and you; but

BUT I determined this with myself, that I would not come again to you with heaviness.

^a I would not come to you in grief.] It may be objected, why then did he speak of coming in his former epistle, (1 Cor. xvi. 5—7,) when the incestuous person being yet impenitent, and their obedience to his directions, with relation to that case, being as yet unapproved, the cause of sorrow, and the necessity of grieving them, seemed yet greater than now? But it is very likely, that after he had writ that epistle, and perhaps while these things were in suspense, he had received news of other disorders among them; and indeed it is evident, that he seems apprehensive, even on supposition that the incestuous person were happily restored, he might yet be under a necessity of exercising an unwilling severity among them. Chap. xii. 20, 21; and chap. xiii. 1—6. 10.

2 For if I make you sorry, who is he then that maketh me glad, but the same which is made sorry by me?

3 For I wrote this same unto you, lest when I came, I should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice: having confidence in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all.

4 For out of much affliction and anguish of heart, I wrote unto you with many tears; not that you should be grieved, but that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you.

5 But if any have caused grief, he hath not grieved me, but in part:

b Unless it be he who is grieved by me. It cannot reasonably be objected, that the sound part of the church would rejoice him; for even they would be grieved by the necessity of such securities; they would sympathize with the afflicted and corrected persons; and on the other hand, the recovery of offenders would give him more sensible joy than any thing else; which considerations taken together will abundantly justify this expression.

c My joy is the joy of you all. Mr. Locke argues from hence, that a distinction is to be made between the Corinthians, to whom this epistle was written, and the false teachers who were Jews, and who crept in among them, and whom he does not comprehend in the number of those concerning whom he speaks with such tenderness and hope. And thus he would reconcile this passage, and chap.

but that I would wait for these fruits which I had reason to hope from my endeavour in my former epistle, to regulate what had been amiss. For if I should be obliged to grieve you, who should then rejoice me, unless it be he who is now grieved by me? My affection to you as a church is indeed so great, that I could enjoy very little comfort myself, if you were in sorrow, especially in consequence of any act of mine, however necessary it were: And therefore I have written thus to you, in order to the farther promoting of that reformation which is necessary to my own comfort, as well as to your honour and peace; that I may not, when I come again, have grief on account of these for whom I ought to rejoice, having this confident persuasion concerning you all in general, that my joy is [the joy] of you all, and that you do in the main bear the same affection towards me, as I feel in my heart towards you. For some time ago, with much affliction, and over-bearing anguish of heart, I wrote an epistle to you, which was attended with many tears, and I designed by it, not, as you may be sure, that ye might be grieved, but that ye might know by one of the most genuine tokens which it was possible for me to give, that overflowing love which I bear to you, of the degree and tenderness of which I was never myself so sensible as I have been since this sad occasion of discovering it happened. And if any one of you hath been so unhappy, as to have occasioned grief, he hath only grieved me in part,

SECT.
iii.
2 Cor.
II. 2.

vii. 15—15, with chap. xi. 13—15; chap. x. 6—11. Compare chap. xi. 22, where it is intimated some of them were Hebrews. But as we are sure some of the Corinthians had been seduced and alienated from St. Paul by them, I think it most reasonable to understand this as spoken of what he might conclude to be their general character; and it was both generous and prudent in the apostle to set it in this point of view.

d Over-bearing anguish] This seems the import of συναχνη; which nearly resembles συναχνη, (compare chap. v. 14;) which I render bears away.

e Wrote an epistle, &c.] Probably he here refers to such passages as those in the first epistle, which speak of scandalous persons among them, and direct to the methods to be taken to reduce them to order.

SECT.
iii.2 Cor.
II: 5.

I am but one of a much greater number, who have felt this affectionate concern. And this I say, that I may not overburden you all, nor fix any unjust charge upon the whole body of the Corinthian church, as if it had taken part with such an offender in afflicting me : far from that I rather believe it has sympathized with me in 6 my grief. And sufficient to such an a oneⁱ, who hath here been the aggressor, [is] this rebuke and censure, [that he hath] already [suffered] by many, and indeed by the whole body of your society ; which has shown so wise and pious a readiness to pursue the directions I gave, for animadverting upon him, and bringing him
 7 to repentance. So that, on the whole, I am well satisfied in what the church has done ; and instead of urging you to pursue farther severities against him, who now, by the blessing of God on the discipline you have used, is become a penitent. I on the contrary, declare it to you as my judgment, that you should rather forgive and comfort [him ;] lest such a one, if kept under continual rebuke, should be swallowed up with an excess of sorrow, and rendered incapable of those duties of the Christian life, to the performance of which, I would cheerfully hope that he is
 8 now inclined. Therefore I beseech you to confirm [the assurances] and demonstrations [of your] love to him, in the most tender and endearing manner that you can : which may convince him that your seeming severity proceeded from cordial affection. For indeed it was partly to 9 this purpose that I have written, that I might have experience of you, whether ye would be obedient in all things to my apostolical instructions and decisions ; and it gives me unspeakable plea-
 10 sure to find that ye have been so. And truly I have such confidence in you as a society, that I may say, not only in this instance, but in any other that may happen, that to whom you forgive any thing which hath been esteemed an offence, so as to be willing to restore the offender to your communion, I also shall be ready to [forgive it ;] and if I forgive any thing, to whomsoever it may be, [it is] not out of regard
 to

part : that I may not overcharge you all.

6 Sufficient to such a man is this punishment, which was inflicted of many.

7 So that contrariwise, ye ought rather to forgive him, and comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow.

8 Wherefore I beseech you, that ye would confirm your love towards him.

9 For to this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things.

10 To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive also : for if I forgive any thing, to whom I forgive it, for your sakes forgive
 I

ⁱ To such an one] Mr. Locke very well observes the great tenderness which the apostle uses to this offender ; he never once mentions his name, nor does he her-so much a mention his crime ; but speaks of him in the most indefinite manner that was consistent with giving such directions in his case as love required.

It, in the person of Christ?

11 Lest Satan should get an advantage of us; for we are not ignorant of his devices.

12 Furthermore, when I came to Troas to preach Christ's gospel, and a door was opened unto me of the Lord, 13 I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother but taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia.

to the offender alone, but in a great measure for your sakes, that as in the person of Christ, and by the high authority with which he hath been pleased to invest me, I join in taking off the censure. For I know the prosperity of the church in general is concerned in conducting these affairs aright, and am sollicitous, lest if they be carried to any excess of rigour, Satan should get an advantage over us, and turn that severity into an occasion of mischief to the offender, to his brethren, and to others. For we are not ignorant of his devices, and of the great variety 12 of stratagems which he is continually making use of to injure us, and to turn even discipline itself, to the reproach of the church, and the destruction of souls. These are the sentiments which prevail in my heart towards you; and my conduct, since the date of my last epistle, hath been a genuine demonstration of this my affectionate concern. For when I came unto Troas 13 in the service of the gospel of Christ, and found things there so situated, that there was a large door opened to me in the Lord, many circumstances seeming to invite my stay, and to give a prospect of success in my ministry; Yet I had no rest in my spirit, because I did not find my brother Titus there; whom I had sent to inquire into your affairs, and from whom I expected tidings of you. I would not therefore make any abode at Troas, though so many considerations concurred to invite me to it; but taking my leave of them, I went out of Asia into Macedonia; where I thought he might be, and where I had the happiness quickly to meet him, and to receive that news of you which has given me so much pleasure, and in consequence of which I have found occasion to write to you in a more comfortable manner, as I here do. And I bless God, that the purposes of my Christian ministry have not upon the whole been frustrated by this journey, but that the Divine blessing hath

SECT.
iii.

2 Cor.
II. 11.

13

[I came unto Troas.] Mr. Owen, (of Ordo, Part I. p. 124,) thinks this happened in St. Paul's journey from Corinth to Macedonia; and mentions it as a fact omitted by St. Luke, to be collected from the apostle. Many such facts there undoubtedly are, and this seems one of them though not just in that circumstance. It seems to have happened in that passage from Asia to Macedonia, of which so very short an account is given, Acts xx. 1, 2. He afterwards ordered some Christian friends who were attending him to Asia after he had spent three months in Macedonia, to wait for him at Troas, (ib. verses 4, 5,) probably for this reason among others, that they might have an opportunity of preaching the gospel to a people who seemed so ready to receive it.

SECT.
III.
bath attended my labours here, as well as in the places which I left, that I might come hither.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET ministers learn from hence, after the example of this wise and benevolent apostle, to be very tender of the ease and comfort of those committed to their care; doing nothing to grieve or 1, 2 distress them, unless, as in the case before us, love requires it, in order to their safety and happiness. Let them learn this candid and endearing method of putting the best interpretation upon every thing, and of believing, where there is any reason to hope
 3 it, that their joy is the joy of their people also. When professing Christians offend, and cannot be reclaimed by gentler methods, let them, not out of resentment, but affection, have recourse to the discipline which Christ hath instituted in his church; and when that discipline hath answered its end, and the offender is recovered to a sense of his evil, let them with the greatest pleasure concur in re-admitting him to the communion of the church from 6, 7 which he has been excluded; with a tender concern, lest he should be swallowed up of over-much sorrow; always considering, how watchful the enemy of souls is to get an advantage over us; and remembering, that it will be the peculiar wisdom of ministers, to 8 acquaint themselves with these artful and malicious devices of Satan, by which he is incessantly endeavouring to distress and ruin the church, and to lay snares for its members in their hopes and their fears, their joys, and their sorrows, so as to take occasion from every incident, and from every interest, to weaken and to wound them.

The great source of a right conduct on all these occasions, is 4 unfeigned love: that let us labour to establish in our hearts towards each other: praying that God, by his Spirit, would establish it. And though the consequence of this will be, that our spirits, like the apostle's, will be accessible to many sorrows which we should not otherwise feel; and though it is possible, that we, like St. Paul in the instance before us, may sometimes be interrupted in active 12 services of life, which we might otherwise have been more ready to pursue; yet we may hope, that while we are faithfully influenced by love, under the direction of that Christian prudence, which ought ever to attend it, views of usefulness may be opened, where we least expect them, may be opened one way, while they are obstructed another; yea, upon the whole, what has for a-while interrupted our success, may in its remoter consequences greatly advance it.

SECT. IV.

The apostle expresses, in the most affectionate terms, his thankfulness to God for having intrusted him with the ministry of the gospel, for the success attending his services therein; and declares his joyful confidence in all events of the Divine acceptance; and speaks of the Corinthians, as his credentials written by the finger of God. 2 Cor. II. 14, to the end. Chap. III. 1—6.

2 COR. II. 14.

NOW thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of his knowledge by us in every place.

2 CORINTHIANS II. 14.

I HAVE informed you, that I left a fair opportunity of preaching the gospel at Troas, in consequence of that great desire I had to hear from you: for which purpose I went into Macedonia. But I desire thankfully to own the Divine goodness, in attending my ministry with very comfortable success there. And indeed I have great reason to break out into a transport of praise in the reflection: Yes, my brethren, thanks, everlasting thanks [be rendered] by you and me, to the God, of all power and grace, who always causeth us to triumph in Christ^a, carrying us on from one spiritual victory to another, and manifesteth by us in every place, the fragrant and powerful, odour of his saving knowledge.

SECT. IV.

2 Cor. II. 14.

15 For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish.

Well may I rejoice upon this account; for we 15 the apostles, and other ministers of his gospel are to God a sweet and acceptable odour of Christ, he is as it were pleased and delighted with the incense of his name and gospel as diffused by us, both with respect to them who believe and are saved, and to them who in consequence of their unbelief, perish in their sins. To the latter indeed 16 [we are] an odour of death; the fragrancy, so rich in itself, instead of reviving, destroys them, and is efficacious to bring on death in its most dreadful forms. But to the other [we are]

16 To the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other, the savour of life unto

^a Causeth us to triumph.] Witsius would render ὑπερβύσσειν, who triumphs over us, (Compare Col. ii. 15,) and supposes it expresses the joy with which St. Paul reflected on that powerful and sovereign grace which had led him in triumph, who was once so insolent an enemy to the gospel. I rather think the ὑπερβύσσειν represents himself as triumphing through the Divine power. And as in triumphal processions, especially in the east, fragrant odours and incense were burnt near the conquerors; so he seems beautifully to allude to that circumstance, in what he says of the οσμήν, the odour of the gospel, in the following verses. And he seems farther to allude to the different effects of strong perfumes, to cheer some, and to throw others into violent disorders, according to the different dispositions they are in to receive them; and Ælian observes, that some kind of animals are killed by them, Hist. Anim. iii. 7.

SECT.
iv.2 Cor.
II. 16.

are] an odour of life: the gospel revives their souls, and is effectual to their eternal life and salvation. And when we consider all these awful consequences, which one way or other attend our ministry, we may truly say, who [is] sufficient for these things? Who is worthy to bear such an important charge? Who should undertake it without trembling? Nevertheless, though we must acknowledge ourselves unworthy of such a charge, God is pleased to succeed us in the execution of it, as he knows our sincerity in his sight and presence. For we are not as many, who adulterate the word of God^b by their own base mixtures, and retail it, when formed according to the corrupt taste of their hearers; but as of unmingled sincerity, but as by the express command of God, in the presence of God we speak in the name of Christ; delivering every part of our message, as those that know how awful our account is; and how impossible it is to conceal so much as a single thought from that all-penetrating Being to whom we are shortly to give it up.

2 Cor.
III. 1.

And when I say this, do we again, as some presume to insinuate, begin to recommend ourselves, and one another, [to you?] Or do we need as I perceive some [do], recommendatory letters to you from other churches, or recommendatory [letters] from you to others? Truly I may well say, you are yourselves our epistle, the best recommendation from God himself, his testimonial, as it were, written upon your hearts^c in the glorious change by our means produced there; and the effects of it are so apparent in your lives, that I may say, ye are known and read by all men, who know what you once were, and you now are; and they who consider these things, must acknowledge, that such success granted by the co-operation of Divine grace, is as evident a proof of God's gracious presence with us as can well be imagined. [I'e] whose b Adulterate the word.] Καπηλιωδεις; is a very expressive phrase, and alludes to the practice of those who deal in liquors, which they debase for their own greater gain; and it insinuates in strong terms the base temper and conduct of their false teachers. Bos has finely illustrated the force of this expression in his learned and elegant note on this text, Exer. p. 154, 155.

c Upon your hearts.] Some copies read our hearts, that is, always remembered and unto life. And who is sufficient for these things?

17 For we are not as many, which corrupt the word of God: but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ.

2 Cor. III. 1. Do we begin again to commend ourselves? or need we, as some others epistles of commendation to you, or letters of commendation from you?

2 Ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men:

3 Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ, ministered by us, thought of. But I apprehend, the apostle means, that the change produced not only in their external conduct, but in their inward temper, was so great, that all who could judge of it by intimate knowledge, (and it is certain that some judgment may be formed,) must own it a great attestation of his ministry. The great enormities in which they were once plunged, (see 1 Cor. vi. 11, &c.) would much illustrate this argument.

d To

us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in the fleshy tables of the heart.

whose characters were some of them once so enormous, (1 Cor. vi. 11,) but [are] now so amiable and excellent, are indeed manifest and apparent, as the epistle of Christ which is ministered by us; and by you Christ doth, as it were, declare, that he hath been faithfully preached among you by us; an epistle written not, as epistles generally are, with ink, but by traces drawn by the Spirit of the one living and true God, moving on your hearts, and producing that variety of graces which render many of you so conspicuous and lovely. And the inscription is not, (as that boasted monument, which did so great an honour to the mission and authority of Moses,) written in tables of stone, but in the fleshy tables of the heart; to which no hand, but that by which the heart was made could find access, in such a manner as to inscribe these sacred characters there. Such confidence have we towards God by Jesus Christ, that our ministry shall be effectual in other places, and that the world shall by your means be persuaded of our apostleship.

4 And such trust have we through Christ to God-ward:

5 Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves: but our sufficiency is of God.

We say this, not as insinuating, that we are sufficient of ourselves to reckon upon any thing as from ourselves^d; we would not insinuate this, or encourage any others to do it; for we are upon all occasions ready most thankfully to acknowledge, that all our sufficiency [is] from God; whatever furniture of any kind we have for our work, we humbly ascribe it to him, and from him arise all our expectations of success with this furniture, whatever it be: From that great and adorable Author of all good, who also hath made us his apostles, and others whom he hath sent into the work, able ministers of the new covenant, sufficiently qualified to discharge that important trust of proposing this gracious covenant of God, established in Christ, to our fellow-creatures. For we are indeed ministers not of the letter, but of the Spirit^e; for we are enabled to enter into the sense and spirit of the law

6 Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter, but of the Spirit: for the letter

^d To reckon upon any thing as of ourselves.] This seems the most exact rendering of λογισαμεθα. π. ω; ιξ αυτων. Dr. Whitby renders it to reason, as if the apostle had said, We are unable by any reasoning of our own to bring men to conversion: which gives a fine and just sense, but I think only a part of what the apostle intended. Compare Acts xix. 27; Rom. iv. 5, 6, 11; chap. viii. 18, 36; 1 Cor. iv. 1; in all which the word λογισαμεθα has the signification we here assign it, and signifies to reckon, or account.

^e Not of the letter, but of the Spirit.] To understand this of an allegorical, rather than literal explication of the Old Testament, is very arbitrary and unwarrantable; and I wish no Christian commentators had given encouragement to the Deists to abuse this text in the manner it is well known they have done.

sect.
iv.
g. cor.
III. 3.

SECT. iv. law, and other sacred writings; whereas that Divine volume is to the Jews, but as a heap of letters and characters, which they know not how to read and understand, and yet pride themselves so much in them, that in that sense it may be said, they receive mischief, rather than benefit, from their own oracle. Thus the letter killeth; the unbelieving Jews are undone by their obstinate adherence to it, and more prejudiced against the gospel, than those that never heard of any Divine revelation at all. But when taught by the Spirit of God, speaking in us, they enter into the spiritual sense and design of the law, then it giveth life; it establisheth our faith, quickens our obedience, and becomes a source of happiness in this world and in the next.

2 Cor. III. 6. ter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life.

IMPROVEMENT.

Chap. ii. MAY the infinite importance of the gospel message be deeply 15, 16 impressed on all who preach, and all who hear it. Life, or death, is in question; eternal life, or everlasting death: and while it is from day to day reviving its thousands, is it not to be feared, that in some places it is, by the righteous judgment of God on hard and impenitent hearts, aggravating the guilt and misery of its ten thousands? How awful is the work of dispensing this gospel! Who can pretend to be sufficient for such things as these: Who, that considers the nature and importance of the ministerial work, can undertake, or pursue it, but with fear and trembling!

Chap. iii. 5. Yet, insufficient as they ought humbly to acknowledge themselves to be, to reckon upon any thing, as from themselves, there is a sufficiency in God, imparted to faithful ministers; in consequence of which they are often made to triumph in Christ, and borne on, in a holy superiority to all the difficulties of their work, and see their labour not to be in vain in the Lord. Well may that support them, under the discouragements, which, in other instances they feel, when the fruit of their labours does not immediately appear, yea, when the present state of many under their care is directly contrary to what they could desire; for their work is still with the Lord, and they are a sweet savour to God in them that perish, as well as in them that are saved. Let them therefore gird up the loins of their mind, and exert themselves with the utmost vigour, rejoicing in this, that God will on the whole be glorified, and they shall on the whole be accepted, and through his abundant grace be amply rewarded. Yea, God will consider, in that day of final recompense, the anguish which they have felt for the souls they have seen perishing under their ministrations, as well as the faithful pains they have bestowed to reclaim them. SECT. IV.
15 consider,

But as they desire to secure this acceptance; yea, to secure their own salvation, let them never allow themselves, by any foreign mixtures, to adulterate the word of God; but let them speak it in its uncorrupted sincerity, as in the sight and presence of God, and as those who know it is not their business to devise a message out of their own hearts, but to deliver what they have received of the Lord. So may they hope there shall not be wanting those, who, according to the views which the apostle gives us of these Corinthians, shall appear as epistles written by the hand of Christ himself, in attestation of their commission from him. 17
Chap. iii. 2.

That ministers may more cheerfully hope for, and expect such an honour, let us all pray, that the spirit of God may lead them into the true sense and meaning of scripture: that they may not unprofitably amuse themselves and their hearers with vain and cold criticisms on the letter of it, so as to neglect and forget what is most spiritual in the design and meaning; but that they may under Divine illumination, attain to the mind of the Spirit, and be enabled to make greater proficiency in unfolding and illustrating the important mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, and may be to multitudes a savour of life unto life. 6
Chap. ii. 16.

SECT. V.

The Apostle, farther to recommend the ministry of which he had been speaking, falls into a very pertinent and useful digression concerning the comparative obscurity of the Mosaic law, and the superior glory and permanence of the gospel. 2 Cor. III. 7, to the end.

2 Cor. III. 7.

BUT if the ministration of death written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses, for the glory of

2 CORINTHIANS III. 7.

I HAVE just been observing, that the letter of the law, in that sense in which it is maintained by the Jews, killeth in itself; it binds down transgressors under a sentence of death, and by the perverseness of their interpretation, is the occasion of ruin; while the Spirit quickeneth. And let me now direct your thoughts to the argument arising from hence, to prove the greatly superior excellence of the gospel: for if the Mosaic law, which was indeed the ministration of death, which was [contained] in visible letters, [and] the most excellent part of which

SECT.

v.

2 Cor.

III. 7.

SECT.

V.

2 Cor.

III. 7.

which was engraven in the two tables of stone, hewn indeed and prepared by God himself, which Moses brought down from mount Sinai in his hands, was attended with a signal and undeniable glory; so that the children of Israel could not look directly upon the face of Moses, because of the glory of his countenance which was so soon to be abolished in death: How much more shall that, which may with so much propriety be called the ministration of his Spirit be glorious? Since the work of the Spirit of God on the heart of a rational being, is so much more important, than any dead characters which could be engraven on insensib'le stones.

9 This may be farther apparent, when we consider what I hinted before, concerning the impossibility of obtaining life and salvation by the Mosaic law. For if that, which was, in its effects, only the ministration of condemnation, pronouncing a sentence of death, in many cases without mercy, and which at last certainly ended in leaving persons under condemnation, as it was incapable of taking away the moral guilt of any one offence; [was attended with] so bright a glory^a; how much more shall the gospel, which may well be called the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory? as it puts us into so certain a way to obtain justification and life everlasting.

10 For even that which was made glorious at its first dispensation, that is the law of Moses, hath no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth it by unutterable degrees; so that as the sun swalloweth up the light of the moon and the stars, in like manner is the lustre of former dispensations swallowed up in that of the gospel. For if that which was to be so soon abolished, was nevertheless attended, as we have seen, with some considerable degrees of glory, to illustrate its Divine original and authority, how much more glorious [must] that [be]

^a Attended with glory.] Dr. Whitby has taken a great deal of pains to prove, that there is an intended opposition between the glory, that is, the visible lustre on the countenance of Moses, (compare Exod. xxxiv. 29, 30, where the Seventy use the word δόξα, doxa;) with the glory which descended on the apostles; (Acts ii. 3, 4;) and considers each as an emblem of the

of his countenance, which glory was to be done away:

8 How shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious?

9 For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory

10 For even that which was made glorious, had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth.

11 For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which dispensation to be introduced, but with incomparable advantage on the side of the gospel. But laboured as this interpretation is, I cannot acquiesce in what is singular in it; and it had been obvious to have objected to verse 11, that the cloven tongues of fire left no such lasting lustre on the face of the apostles as on that of Moses.

which remaineth is glorious.

[be] which remaineth immutable through the remotest ages^b!

12 Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech.

This is the glorious ministry in which we are engaged; and it brings along with it the sublimest sentiments and the noblest views.

Having therefore this hope and confidence, it is no wonder that we use great liberty of address, when we are speaking to you; And [are] not 13 And not as Moses, which put a veil over his face; that the children of Israel could not stedfastly look to the end of that which is abolished.

herein concealed, as Moses, [who] put a veil upon his face, (compare Exod. xxxiv. 33^c) wherein he was a kind of type and figure of his own dispensation; so that he might seem thereby to intimate, that the children of Israel could not directly look to the end of that law which he brought, and which was, as I observed before, to be abolished^d; But on the contrary, their understandings are evidently blinded, for until this day the same veil continues upon the law, or rather upon their own hearts, and is still unremoved during the reading of the Old Testament; which contains such distinct prophecies of Christ, and such lively descriptions of him, that one would imagine it impossible that he should not be immediately acknowledged and adored by all that profess to believe its Divine authority; which [veil] is taken away in those that receive

Christ, who have in him the true substance of those shadows, and the great end of its most important prophecies. But as to the unbelieving Jews, as I said before, the veil which they wear in their synagogues, too aptly represents that which is upon their heart when

Moses is read, even to this day in their hearing; in consequence of which they can no more see the mind of Moses, than their fathers could see his face. But it shall not always be so; the house of Israel is intitled to a variety of most excellent promises, relating to the blessings of the Messiah's kingdom; and as when Moses went in

to

15 But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart.

16 Nevertheless, when it shall turn to the ^b If that which was to be, &c.] Mr. Hallet would render it, "if that which was done away, was done away by glory, how much more doth that which remaineth, remain in glory." But I think this must appear harsh to every one that examines the original; ἡ αἰσῆς, is literally by glory, and so may signify, introduced by it, or attended with it, or confirmed by it; and in either of these senses may well be applied to the shining of the face of Moses.

^c And are not, &c.] All that follows from hence to the beginning of the 18th verse may be included in a parenthesis.

^d Which was to be abolished.] Such an oblique manner of speaking on this subject, makes the argument from these words peculiarly striking. It is taken for granted, as a thing certainly known, and quite indisputable, that the Mosaic dispensation was to be abolished.

SECT.
V.
2 Cor.
III. 16.

to the Lord, he laid aside his vail, so when it, that is, the people of Israel, shall turn unto the Lord, when the blessed period appointed for their general conversion shall come, the vail shall be taken away, and the genuine sense of the sacred oracles shall break in upon their minds

- 17 with an irresistible light. Now the Lord Jesus Christ is that Spirit of the law of which I spake before; to whom the letter of it was intended to lead the Jews; and it is the office of the Spirit of God, as the great Agent in his kingdom, to direct the minds of men to it. And let him be universally sought in this view; for where the Spirit of the Lord [is,] there [is] liberty; a more liberal and filial disposition, to which under the influence and operation of the Spirit, the gospel brings those who were subject to bondage, under the imperfect dispensation of
- 18 Moses. And in consequence of the liberty, enjoyed by virtue of the gracious œconomy, we all, who have been so happy as suitably to welcome it, with unvailed face, attentively beholding as by a glass^e or mirror, the glory of the Lord^f reflected from his word, are transformed into something of the same resplendent image of the blessed Redeemer, whose shining face we there see; and the more stedfastly we behold this illustrious and amiable form, the more we do partake of it; proceeding gradually from glory to glory. And all this is as proceeding from the Lord the Spirit^g; for as the Lord Jesus Christ is the Spirit of the law, so the Divine Spirit, under his direction and influences, is the cause of this noble and Divine effect.

the Lord, the vail shall be taken away.

17 Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord, is, there is liberty.

18 But we all with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

IMPROVE-

^e Beholding as by a glass.] Some would render καθὰ ὡς ἐν ἑσπέρῳ reflecting us from a glass. But Elsner and Bos, have abundantly proved, what indeed is evident to all versed in the language, that it has the signification here assigned; and indeed the other interpretation would obscure and perplex the sense.

^f Beholding—the glory of the Lord.] Here is one of the most beautiful contrasts that can be imagined. Moses saw the Shechinah, and it rendered his face resplendent, so that he covered it with a vail, the Jews not being able to bear the reflected light: we behold Christ, as in the glass of his word, and, (as the reflection of a very luminous object from a mirror, gilds the face on which the reverberated rays fall, (our faces shine too; and we vail them not, but diffuse the lustre, which, as we discover more and more of his glories in the gospel, is continually increasing.

^g By the Lord the Spirit.] As the order of the Greek words is unusual, not πνεύματος τῆς κυρίου, but κυρίου πνεύματος. Dr. Whitby would render it by the Lord of the Spirit, that is, by Christ, in whom the Spirit dwells, and by whom it is communicated according to his sovereign will. But the paraphrase unites the two senses, each I think more natural, though which of the two was chiefly intended, I cannot absolutely determine.

IMPROVEMENT.

STILL doth this glorious glass of the gospel stand full in our view, SECT. V. from which the lustre of the Redeemer's countenance is reflected. Ver. Let us daily behold his image there, and contemplate it with an attentive eye, as those who are solicitous, that we may wear some of those rays; yea, that we may wear them with still increasing lustre; that we may be transformed from glory to glory, and reflecting those rays, shine as lights in the world. 18

Let us endeavour to raise our minds to this laudable temper, by frequently reflecting on the excellence of the Christian dispensation as a dispensation of the Spirit and of life; whereas the law was the ministration of death; and while, from the glory attending the law, we infer, with the apostle, the super-eminent glory of the gospel, let us learn also the superior obligation it brings us under, to regard and obey it, and the proportionably greater danger of despising it. The law of Moses was soon to be abolished; the gospel still remains, and shall remain to the end of time. Let us pray for its prosperity, and do our utmost to promote it. And let us earnestly plead with God, that, whereas there is now a vail upon the face of the Jews even unto this day, when the sacred records are read among them, they may turn unto the Lord, and find the vail taken away; that so by the conversion of Israel, as a nation, there may be a glorious accession of evidence to Christianity; and that the Jews themselves may be happy in the blessing of him whom their fathers crucified, and whom they continue contemptuously to reject. 7, 8, 11, 14, 16

Let the ministers of the gospel, while defending so divine a cause, and enforcing so important a message, use all becoming plainness of speech; and may all Christians know more of that liberty which the Spirit of the Lord gives, that God may in all things be glorified, through Jesus Christ. Amen. 12, 17

SECT. VI.

The apostle declares his courage, and disclaims all sinister views and all distrust of success, in pursuing the glorious ministry he had described: being persuaded, that such a gospel could not be rejected, but in consequence of the most fatal prejudices. 2 Cor. IV. 1—6.

2 Cor. IV. 1.
THEREFORE, seeing we have this ministry,

2 CORINTHIANS IV. I.
SUCH are the distinguished glories of the gospel-dispensation, and its effects on the hearts of

SECT. VI.
2 Cor. IV. 1.

of those who sincerely embrace it. And therefore having been entrusted with such a ministration, as we have obtained mercy [of God] to be thus honoured, we faint not under any of those difficulties we are called out to encounter; nor in any degree desist from our glorious enterprise^a. But we have renounced, and set at defiance, the hidden things of shame^b; in which the priests of Paganism deal so much, in order to impose on the people over whom they preside, practising in their mysteries so many impure, and so many foolish rites. We need not any of their artifices; not walking in craftiness, as some would insinuate that we do, nor deceitfully corrupting and disguising the word of God; but by the manifestation of the genuine and unsophisticated truth, recommending ourselves to every man's conscience, we steadily and constantly act, as in the all penetrating sight of God; and therefore are willing, that all the world should know what the arts and mysteries of our ministry are.

3 But if our gospel, after such open and generous conduct on our side, be still under a veil too^c, as the law is with respect to so many; it is veiled to those that are perishing; they must be very bad men, and in a very dangerous state, who hearing it preached as it is by us, cannot enter into the main design and spirit of it, and are not inwardly engaged to reverence it.

4 Among whom undoubtedly, that is, in the number of such unhappy wretches [are] all [they] whose unbelieving minds Satan, who herein acts as the god of this world^d, whose subjects the ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not :

2 But have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

3 But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost :

4 In whom the God of this world hath blinded

^a Desist from our glorious enterprise.] Επιπαύω naturally expresses the drawing back from some strenuous undertaking, in what we often call a dastardly manner, on account of some difficulties attending it.

^b Renounced the hidden things of shame.] Dr. Whitby understands this of lewd practices; but the opposition between this clause and the following seems much more to favour the panophrase; though to be sure the pinase may extend to all dishonest artifices of false teachers. The word ἀνομιαι, which we render renounce, does not imply they ever had any thing to do with these things; but the words, "set them at defiance" seem still more literally to express the original.

^c If our gospel be under a veil too.] Εἰ δὲ καὶ ἐστὶ κρυπτόμενον τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἡμῶν, is most literally rendered thus; and it has so evidently a reference to what was said above, of the veil, on the faces of the Jews, that it seems by all means expedient to translate it thus, rather than hid. — This lost is justly urged by Dr. Scott, (Christian Eye, Vol. V. 220,) as a proof of the prophecy of the apostle's writings in all matters of importance to our salvation.

^d The God of this world.] That several ancient Christian writers should interpret this of God the Father, is one of the most amazing things I have met with. See Dr. Whitby in loc. and Dr. Edwards, Exercit. p. 221. I doubt not but Satan is intended and blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God should shine unto them.

5 For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake.

6 For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ.

children of this world are, hath blinded by its dazzling vanities and allurements, lest the lustre of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of the invisible God in all his perfectious and glories, should beam forth upon them, and should pain, or rather awaken, those weak minds, darkened by so many gross and unhappy prejudices, and slumbering to their everlasting destruction. But such as I have before described, is our conduct, however perversely it may be mistaken, or misrepresented. For we preach not ourselves; we aim not at exalting our own authority, at extending our reputation, or securing to ourselves any secular advantage; but, renouncing all such views, and claims, and desires, we preach Christ Jesus, as the supreme Lord of his church; and, instead of setting ourselves up for your masters, we declare ourselves to be your servants for the sake of Jesus; and are willing, out of regard to you, and above all out of duty to him, to stoop to the humblest offices of love, by which we may be serviceable to you in your most important interests. And it is no wonder, that ⁶ we are thus disposed, concerning the view of things which God hath given us by his grace; for God, who by his powerful word, in the first creation of this world, commanded the light instantaneously to shine out of that darkness which covered the whole face of the deep, (Gen. i. 5,) hath also shined into our once prejudiced and benighted hearts, and particularly into mine, by the internal operation of his blessed spirit, [to impart] the lustre of the knowledge of God's glory[†], discovered, as we before observed, in the face of our Lord Jesus Christ[‡], from thence reflected scpt.

11.
20 r.
14. 4.

and could it be proved, as has been intimated, that this malignant spirit was so early called by the Jews כְּמָלָא, the God who blinds, I should think it a beautiful illustration.

^e Preach not ourselves.] Grotius explains it thus, "we do not preach that we are lords, but that Christ is so;" and this is certainly comprehended. But I think the phrase may well be taken in the larger extent, expressed in the paraphrase. To preach themselves, may signify their making themselves, in any view, the end of their preaching; as preaching Jesus, a phrase often used, may signify preaching, so as to direct men's eyes to him.

^f To impart the lustre of the knowledge of God's glory.] Γνωσκ; τῆς δόξης; τοῦ Θεοῦ may very well signify the glorious knowledge of God; but the following words determined me to the more literal translation, as it is more proper to speak of the glory, than of the knowledge of God, as in, or upon the face of Christ. Some would render πρὸς φανερῶν according, or in proportion to, that lustre.

^g In the face of Jesus Christ.] Some would render προσώπου person; but it so evidently signifies face in the context, (chap. iii. 13, 18,) that it seemed much better to render it face; though the glory here said to be reflected from his face, is undoubtedly that which is manifested in his person, in the union of Deity with humanity, and all the wonderful things he has done and suffered in consequence of it.

SECT.
vi.
flected upon us, and from us to you, for the important purposes of your sanctification and salvation.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. LET all who are honoured with the ministry of the gospel, learn 1 from the apostle, courage and fidelity; remembering they are continually in the sight and presence of God. Let them therefore renounce with abhorrence, that craft which so many who have called themselves Christian priests, have studied; and labour to 2 govern their whole conduct by such apparent principles of integrity and honour, that they may commend themselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

5 This end will be much promoted, if they learn to lay aside all sinister views of interest and ambition, of human applause, or a dominion over men's consciences; and putting on that humble character so amiably illustrated in the apostle Paul's writings, every where, with all loyal affection preach Christ, as the great Lord and Head of the church; and declare, and approve themselves the willing servants of souls for his sake. So humbling themselves, they will be exalted in the eyes of God and man; and will reap those heart-felt pleasures now, and those honours, emoluments, and delights hereafter, which will infinitely more than indemnify them for all they may resign; and exceed not only the low apprehensions of the servants of mammon in Christ's livery, but their own most elevated conceptions.

Let every reader seriously examine himself as to the knowledge he has of this gospel, and the degree in which he has felt a sense of its glory and excellence upon his heart; solemnly considering,
 3 that if the lustre and efficacy of the gospel be hidden from him, it is a sad sign, that he is himself a lost creature, and is like to be
 4 lost to God and happiness for ever; he is the captive of Satan blinded by him as the God of this world, and in the probable way to be led on to unseen, but irretrievable destruction. Dreadful situation! which might indeed occasion absolute despair, were it not for the views which the gospel gives us, of that God, who 6 in the beginning of the creation commanded the light to shine out of darkness: who can yet say, Let there be light, and there shall be light in the most benighted soul, and the lustre of the glorious knowledge of God in the person of Christ shall beam forth. Let this Divine interposition be earnestly implored; and O, that it may be imparted, before the blinded captives be consigned to eternal ruin, to blackness of darkness for ever!

SECT. VII.

The apostle freely acknowledges his own infirmities ; but glories in the strength communicated to him from God, as an effectual support under the extremest trials ; over which he triumphs in the language of the strongest faith. 2 Cor. IV. 7—15.

2 Cor. IV. 7.

BUT we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us.

2 CORINTHIANS IV. 7.

I HAVE spoken to you of the excellence of the gospel, representing it as a most invaluable treasure; and indeed it is so rich a blessing, that the highest angel in heaven might think it an honour to be employed in dispensing it. But such is the conduct of Providence in this respect, that we have this invaluable treasure in earthen vessels; feeble creatures, who dwell in mortal bodies, and are surrounded with numberless infirmities, are employed in dispensing it to us; that so the excellency of the power, by which its great and important ends are answered, may appear to be of God, and not of us: who are so far from being able to add efficacy to our own labours, that it is wonderful how we are enabled even to sustain them. [We] are indeed 3 in every respect^a greatly afflicted^b; but through the Divine care over us, we are not utterly over-pressed^c with the weight and variety of our trials: we are often brought into dubious circumstances; but, blessed be God, we are not in despair; [We are] continually persecuted by 9 men, but we are not forsaken of God; we are thrown down by our enemies, yet we are not entirely destroyed by them; but animated from on high, we spring up again, and renew the combat with increasing vigour. We are always bearing 10 about with us in the body, the dying of the Lord

SECT. VII.

2 Cor. IV. 7.

8 We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed ; we are perplexed, but not in despair ;

9 Persecuted, but not forsaken ; cast down, but not destroyed ;

10 Always bearing about a In every respect we are afflicted, &c.] This section may seem a digression; but nothing could be more pertinent to the apostle's grand purpose. He aimed at recovering the affections of these Corinthians which were much alienated from him; for this purpose he freely opens his heart towards them, and tenderly represents the many and grievous pressures and hardships to which love to souls, and to themselves, among the rest exposed him. This I take to be the true key to this beautiful and pathetic passage.

b We are afflicted.] I apprehend the apostle here to speak with some peculiar regard to his own case; yet not so as to exclude that of his brethren, which undoubtedly did very much resemble it. Compare I Cor. iv. 9.

c Not utterly over-pressed.] The word $\sigmaυνηχθῆναι$ properly signifies, crushed in a strait passage.

d I have

SECT.
VII.2 Cor.
IV. 10.

- Lord Jesus Christ; so that the cruelties which were exercised in putting him to death, seem to be acted over again upon us, by the rage of the enemy; yet all this is in effect, not that an immediate period should be put to our life and ministry, as they desire, but that the life also of Jesus, now triumphant above all hostile power, may be more evidently manifested in the preservation of this our feeble body, which enemies, so many and mighty, are continually endeavouring to destroy. For we who live, those of us, the apostles and ministers of Christ, who still survive, are continually delivered over to death for the sake of the Lord Jesus, and as it were, every day led out to a new martyrdom in his cause; but so many new and unexpected deliverances arise, that it seems as if these dangers were permitted on purpose, that, as I said before, the life also and power of the blessed Jesus, our Divine Saviour, may be manifested and demonstrated, in supporting our mortal and feeble flesh in the midst of all these assaults, and perpetuating our lives from year to year through so many successive dangers, which await us wherever we come. So that on the whole I may say, that death worketh continually to glorify his name in us, but life in you: while you are called to live for his honour, we may be said to serve our Redeemer by bearing for his sake repeated deaths.
- 13 But we endure it all with resolution and cheerfulness, having the same spirit of faith, by which good men of old were animated, in their most active labours, and most painful sufferings; according to what is written, (Psal. cxvi. 10.) I have believed, and therefore have I spoken^d; we also cordially believe the certain truth of what we teach, and therefore go on to speak our important about in the body, the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body.

11 For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh.

12 So then death worketh in us, but life in you.

13 We having the same spirit of faith, according as it is written, I believed, and therefore have I spoken: we also believe, and therefore speak;

^d I have believed and therefore have I spoken.] As for the quotation here, some think there is an allusion to the confidence which David expresses in the preceding words, of walking before the Lord in the land of the living; as if the apostle had intended to say, we also shall in a nobler sense do it. Mr. Pierce supposes the Spirit of faith, here spoken of, is the Spirit of Jesus, which enabled him through faith in God to preach that doctrine which he knew would provoke the rage of a wicked world, so as to end in his death; and he undertakes to prove in his third Dissertation, that the cxvith Psalm, in its original sense, is to be understood as spoken by the Psalmist in the person of the Messiah. But I see no necessity for urging this. The simpler sense of the passage, as it stands in the psalm, is, "Though I have been in very great affliction, and sometimes almost depressed, yet faith in God hath supported me, and put this song of praise into my mouth." In this sense of the words nothing could be more natural, than for St. Paul to adopt them.

14 Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus, shall raise us up also by Jesus, and shall present us with you.

15 For all things are for your sakes, that the abundant grace might, through the thanksgiving of many, redound to the glory of God.

portant message, whatever may be the consequence, supported by this inward consciousness of our integrity, and animated by a powerful sense of duty towards God, and the hope of the most glorious reward from his bountiful grace. Those hopes rise to complete and everlasting happiness; which we continually pursue, as knowing, that if we persevere in that service with which he hath honoured us, he who raised up the Lord Jesus Christ from the dead by his almighty power, will also raise us up by Jesus, whom he will send at the last day, commissioned to accomplish this great work; and that then he will present [us] with you, before the presence of his glory with exceeding great joy, in each other, and in him; and will introduce us to that heavenly kingdom, to the prospects of which he hath called us by that gospel which we have preached, and which you have believed. For all these great things [are] prepared not merely on our account, but for your sakes, that the overflowing grace being complete in all its diffusive extent, and exalted degrees, might abound by the thanksgiving of many, even of countless multitudes, who shall share for ever in it, to the glory of God, the great original and end of all.

SECT.
VII.

2 Cor.
IV. 13.

15

IMPROVEMENT.

LET us adore the wisdom and goodness of God in sending us the gospel treasure in earthen vessels, in employing our fellow-mortals, rather than angels, under the character of his messengers to us; by which means we are taught more to depend on God for that efficacy of power that renders them successful; to acknowledge his hand in animating and preserving them, and are kept in such an exercise of faith, as is in this present world most honourable to God, and most profitable to us. Let the mortality of ministers be suitably remembered, by themselves and others, and improved to the best purposes; and let us take care that we do not think the less honourably of the treasure on account of the weakness of these vessels in which its great Proprietor has thought fit to lodge it. Ver. 7.

Let it encourage them, who are struggling with the difficulties of that arduous and important work to think on those refreshments which the apostles experienced; in consequence of which, though afflicted, they were not depressed, and though persecuted, appeared

8, 9,

SECT. VII. appeared not to be forsaken; but could boast, that the support of their lives, amidst so many pressing dangers, was a demonstration of the life of Christ. We may indeed all say this, with respect to
 Ver. 11 the support of the spiritual life, in the midst of so many difficulties. Having obtained help from him, we continue until this day; and it is because he lives, that we live also. Confiding therefore in him, let us exert ourselves vigorously in this holy warfare to which we are called; and strenuously endeavour to maintain our ground against all the enemies who press hard to overbear and destroy us.

And that we may be thus animated, let us labour to engrave on our hearts a more lively and assured belief of the great and important things of which we speak, and hear; and that not only in the general, but in particular instances. Let us labour to 13 feel at once their evidence, and their energy; having the same spirit of faith which wrought in the apostles and prophets, and engaged them to discharge their office with such distinguished fidelity, fervor and zeal. Especially let us maintain such believing apprehensions of this great and comprehensive truth, that God hath raised up Christ Jesus from the dead, and that he will by the same power also raise up his faithful ministers and servants, who firmly retain that glorious gospel: and, as those discoveries are made for their sakes, that they may obtain salvation by him, 15 and that God may be glorified in their united and everlasting praises let us daily set before our eyes this risen and triumphant Redeemer, and look forward to that glorious appearance of his, when he shall come to be admired in his saints, and to be farther extolled and glorified, in all them who believe. Amen.

SECT. VII.

The apostle describes the glorious hopes, which he had beyond the grave, as his great support and ground of triumph, under all those trials which he had been mentioning before; and endeavours to animate others to fidelity and zeal by that description.
 2 Cor. IV. 16, to the end. Chap. V. 1—10.

2 CORINTHIANS IV. 16.

2 COR. IV. 16.

SECT. VIII.

2 Cor. IV. 16.

WE have been speaking of the great design of God, in causing his gospel to be revealed to the children of men, that the thanksgivings of many may redound to his own glory; and on this account we faint not under any of the present pressures, nor suffer ourselves to be borne down by the assaults of our enemies; but on the contrary, if our outer man perishes, yet the inner man

FOR which cause we faint not, but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day.

man

17 For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;

man is daily renewed: the soul gathers new strength, as the body grows weaker and weaker, and we feel our dissolution approaching: which may well be the case. For we have the firmest assurance, that this momentary lightness of our affliction, which passes off so fast, and leaves so little impression, that it may justly be spoken of as levity itself, is working out for us a far more exceeding [and] eternal weight of glory^a, the most solid, substantial, and lasting felicity, the exalted degrees of which, none of the boldest figures of speech can paint, nor any stretch of human thought distinctly conceive. And we may assuredly promise ourselves, that this shall be the blessed end of all, while we are conscious that we are not aiming^b at the things which are visible; are not endeavouring to secure to ourselves any secular advantages of one kind or another; but at those which are invisible. And however vain and visionary such views may seem to the world about us, and we may be despised for attending to them, we have full satisfaction in our own minds, that we are acting the wisest part, in such a choice and preference; for the things which are visible, and in that respect may seem to have the advantage of others, [are] temporary and transient; but those which are invisible, [are] eternal, and therefore suitable to the duration of that immortal soul which God has given us, and in the felicity of which our true happiness must consist. Nor is this an uncertain, or very distant hope; for we know assuredly, that if our earthly house of [this] tabernacle were dissolved, if this mortal body, constituted of dust, were mouldered back to dust again; or if our zeal for the service of the gospel should bring on martyrdom, which should destroy it before its time; we have, and should immediately enter on, a building of which God

Heb. viii.

2 Cor. IV. 17.

18

2 Cor. V. 1.

18 While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen, are eternal.

2 Cor. V. 1. For we know, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house

^a A far more exceeding, &c.] This sentence is one of the most emphatical in all St. Paul's writings; in which (as Dr. Grosvenor well expresses it) he speaks as much like an orator as an apostle. The lightness of the trial is expressed by τὸ εὐχρηστὸν τῆς θλίψεως; the lightness of our affliction; as if he had said, it is even levity itself in such a comparison. On the other hand, the μέγιστον ἐπιτελεσθέν ἔργον; ὑπερβολικόν, is (says Mr. Blackwall) infinitely emphatical, and cannot be expressed by any translation. It signifies, that all hyperboles fall short of describing that weighty eternal glory, so solid and lasting, that you may pass from one hyperbole to another, and yet when you have gained the last, are infinitely below it. Blackwall, Sac. Clas. Vol. I. p. 352.

^b Are not aiming, &c.] This σκοπεῖν exactly signifies; and our English word scope, or mark aimed at, is derived from the same Greek theme.

SECT.
viii.2
Cor.
V. 1.

God is the great Architect and Donor : an house not made with mortal hands^c, nor to be compared with the most magnificent structure they ever raised; exceeding them all in its lustre, as much as its duration; though that duration be eternal in the regions of the heavens, far above either violence or decay. And in this view, we groan through that intenseness of soul with which we are earnestly and perpetually desiring to be clothed upon with our house, which is from heaven; Since being so clothed upon, we shall not be found naked and exposed to any evil and inconvenience, how entirely soever we may be stripped of every thing we can call our own, here below. And moreover, we who are yet in [this] tabernacle do groan, not only with those longings after a blessed immortality, but also being burdened with the present weight of many infirmities, and many calamities : for which cause nevertheless we would not be unclothed, or stripped of the body; for that is what we cannot consider, as in itself desirable; but rather, if it might be referred to our own choice, clothed upon immediately, with a glory like that which shall invest the saints after the resurrection; that so what is mortal, corruptible, and obnoxious to these disorders, burthens, and sorrows, may all be so absorbed and swallowed up by life, as if it were annihilated by that Divine vigour and energy which shall then exert itself in and upon us^d.

5 Now he who hath wrought us to this very thing, to these noble views and sublime desires, [is] God^e; who hath also given us the earnest of his Spirit house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens,

2 For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven :

3 If so be that being clothed, we shall not be found naked.

4 For we that are in in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened : not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

5 Now he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing, is God, who also hath given us the earnest of the Spirit

^c Not made with hands, &c.] Whether we consider this Divine building, as particularly signifying the body after the resurrection, in which sense Dr. Whitby takes it; or any vehicle in which the soul may be clothed during the intermediate state, considerable difficulties will arise. I am therefore inclinable, rather to take it in a more general view, as referring to the whole provision God has made for the future happiness of his people, and which Christ represents as his Father's house, in which there are many mansions. To be clothed upon with an house, is a very strong figure; which yet it is evident the apostle uses in the next verse; having in his thoughts the glory which each should wear, instead of being clothed, as now, with that mortal flesh which he calls a tabernacle, as it is so mean, inconvenient, and precarious an abode.

^d That mortality may be, &c.] The expression in these and the following verses, is not perfectly distinct; but the meaning seems to be this : "that though it appeared most desirable of all to pass to glory without dying, yet a state in which mortality should be swallowed up by life, was at all events desirable; and an absence from the body to be, not only submitted to, but wished, in a view of being so present with the Lord, as even in the intermediate state they expected to be."

^e He who hath wrought us to this very thing, is God.] Mr. Howe observes, that this is a most emphatical manner of speaking; not only asserting that God is the author of it, but ascribing Deity to the author; unto us the earnest of the Spirit.

6 Therefore, we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord;

7 (For we walk by faith, not by sight:)

8 We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord.

9 Wherefore we labour, that whether present or absent we may be accepted of him.

10 For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.

Spirit, as the pledge of better, even of eternal blessings. Therefore, under the influences of this Divine Spirit, [we are] always courageous in the midst of surrounding danger; and whatever natural aversion we have to death, are ready to brave its terrors, in the views of that immediate happiness which lieth before us: knowing, that while we are sojourning in the body^h, we are, as it were, in a state of exile from the Lord Jesus Christ, in the enjoyment of whom our chief happiness consists: For we now walk and 7 conduct ourselves in the whole course of life, by the faith of objects, as yet unseen; and not by the sight of those glories, or by a regard to those things which we can see. We are coura- 8 geous therefore [I say] in these delightful views, and think with complacency, of being rather absent from the body, and banished from all its pleasures and enjoyments, on condition of being, as we know we shall be present with the Lordz, and dwelling as those who are at home with him. Therefore we make it the height of 9 our ambition^h, that whether present in the body, or absent from it, we may be well-pleasing to him, and receive the tokens of his acceptance and favour.

This is our concern, and it ought to be the 10 concern of all; for we must all, without any exception, whatever our station in life may have been, be manifest before the tribunal of Christ; our inmost soul must there be displayed, and all the most secret springs of our actions laid open, that every one may then receive, in that final distribution of happiness and misery, according to what he hath done in the body, whether good or evil; in full proportion to his actions, and the principles from which the Searcher of hearts knows them to have arisen.

IMPROVE-

thor; as if he had said, "none but God could have raised us to such a temper." Howe's Works, Vol. 1. p. 680.

^c Are sojourning in the body.] So ἐνημερεύω; here properly signifies; and it is, as Dr Clark observes, wrong to render it, while at home in the body; since it is the apostle's design to intimate, that this is not our home.

^d Present with the Lord] From this text Mr. Boyc argues, not only against the sleep of the soul during the intermediate state; but that saints, when departed from our world, go into the highest heaven; where they dwell with Christ, and are not as some have supposed, in a place where they have only a transient sight of him on some extraordinary occasions. Boyc's four last Things, p. 592.

^h We make it the height of our ambition.] This ἐπιθυμία plainly imports; and it is flat to translate it, we love.

IMPROVEMENT.

SECT.
viii.

BEHOLD the great lesson which as Christians we have to learn, and which is of such efficacy, that if we thoroughly master it, all the other parts of our duty will become easy and delightful—

Ver. to look at the things which are unseen, rather than at those which are 18 seen! And what can be so reasonable, as that eternal objects should employ the thoughts of immortal beings, rather than those which they must soon survive? Let all our souls be directed to them. Let us contemplate the feeble structure of this earthly tabernacle, which gives us so many tokens of its nearly approaching dissolution: this tabernacle, in which we groan under such a variety of burthens; and let us comfort ourselves with the prospect

Chap.
V. 1.

4 of speedy deliverance; that so while the outer man perisheth, the inner may be renewed day by day. What though we have death before us in a certain prospect, and know we must soon be absent from the body? If we are true Christians, we have the most

Chap.
IV. 16.Chap.
v. 8.

1 express assurance, not only that the time will come, when we shall inhabit a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens; but that we shall immediately be present
6 with the Lord, with that blessed Redeemer, whom having not seen we love. How much more shall we love him, how much more shall we rejoice in him, when we are blessed with his presence, and behold his glory!

While we have this consciousness, let us be always confident and courageous, and rejoice in afflictions and mortality; since this light and momentary affliction hath so happy an influence upon a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; and death will be the consummation of our wishes. Let this then be our constant care, to walk by faith and not by sight; having this ever for the glorious object of our ambition, that whether present or absent, we may be accepted of the Lord. May God work us up to

Chap.
iv. 17.
Chap.
v. 7.

9 this self same thing; and may the operation of his grace upon our
5 souls for that purpose, be always acknowledged with the humblest
10 gratitude, and its farther communications sought with the most earnest importunity. Then shall we not dread the tribunal of Christ, before which we are so certainly to appear, and be made manifest; knowing, that our integrity will be approved, and that those works of faith and labours of love, which shall then be commemorated, will meet with gracious acceptance, and most munificent rewards.

SECT. IX.

Touching again upon the zeal with which he prosecuted the gospel-ministry, the Apostle makes a kind of apology for it, by pleading the irresistible engagements of a Redeemer's love, and the infinite importance of that message of reconciliation, with which he was charged; and which, while he recounts, he prosecutes in a pathetic address to the Corinthians. 2 Cor. V. 11 to the end. Chap. VI. 1, 2.

2 Cor. V. 11.

KNOWING therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men: but we are made manifest unto God, and I trust also are made manifest in your consciences.

2 CORINTHIANS V. 11.

IHAVE now touched upon a consideration, which animates us to that zeal in our ministrations, with which many are so much surprised, and some not a little displeased. We often reflect how near the solemn time is advancing, when we, and our hearers, shall appear before the tribunal of Christ; and knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, the strict judgment which must then pass on all impenitent sinners, we, for their sakes, and for our own, labour to our utmost, to persuade men to take all necessary methods for escaping it. But as we are made manifest to God, and think of it with unutterable pleasure that he knows the integrity of our hearts, in prosecuting the work he hath assigned us, I hope also we are manifest to your consciences, and that I have already given, and shall continue to give, such proofs of the simplicity of my views, and uprightness of my conduct, that you will not be able to harbour any suspicion concerning it.

SECT.
ix.

2 Cor.
V. 11.

¹² For we commend not ourselves again unto you, but give you occasion to glory on our

I say these things freely; for we do not, after the modesty and humility with which we have behaved hitherto, now begin to applaud ourselves, or *recommend ourselves again unto you*¹²; as some have very unjustly charged us with doing in some former instances; but we are giving you occasion of rejoicing, and boasting on our account, as you have indeed cause to do; and are suggesting

^a We do not recommend ourselves again unto you.] It appears from hence, and from the beginning of the third chapter, that the Corinthians were ready to misrepresent the case. St. Paul took to vindicate himself, as pride and vain-glory. On the other hand, they would have interpreted his silence as the effect of guilt and confusion. He therefore plainly, and very properly tells them, that he said this only in his own necessary defence, and to furnish his friends with an answer to those whose consciences condemned them, while they endeavoured to asperse him.

^b Transported

SECT.
IX.2 Cor.
v. 12.

suggesting what may be sufficient, that ye may have something to [answer] those who glory in appearance, and not in heart; for that, I am persuaded, is the case with some of your opposing teachers, whose consciences must surely recoil upon them, and condemn them, while they pretend to vie with us in the discharge of the Christian ministry, and would challenge your regards in preference to us.

13 For if, as some injuriously insinuate, we be transported beyond ourselves^b, and the due exercise of sober reason, [it is] to God; a zeal for his glory that animates us; or if we be sober, as we hope you cannot but acknowledge us to be, [it is] for your sakes, that we take so much serious pains in the prosecution of a work in which your highest interest is concerned. On the whole, love to God, and benevolence to man, are the grand principles by which we are actuated; and we cannot be cold and unaffected, while we have such grand and noble subjects before us as those which we handle among you,

14 to awaken our piety and our charity. For the love of Christ, so illustriously displayed in that redemption he hath wrought, constraineth us; it bears us away^c like a strong and resistless torrent; while we thus judge, and in our calmest and most rational moments, draw it as a certain consequence, from the important principles, which we assuredly know to be true, that if one, even Christ, died for the redemption and salvation of all who should sincerely believe in him, and obey him, then were all dead; for had not all, even the very best of men, been in a state of condemnation and death, there would have been no

15 need of his dying for them. And now we know, that he died for all, that they who live only in consequence of his dying love, should not henceforth, from this remarkable period and

ααα

behalf, that you may have somewhat to answer them which glory in appearance, and not in heart.

13 For whether we be besides ourselves it is to God; or whether we be sober, it is for your cause.

14 For the love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead:

15 And that he died for all, that they which live, should not henceforth live unto themselves

^b Transported beyond ourselves.] Mr. Locke thinks, from comparing chap. xi. 1, 16, 21; chap. xii. 6, 11; that the Corinthians censured St. Paul as a fool or a mad-man, for what he said in commendation of himself; and then the meaning is, "you say, I am distracted for my present conduct; but this is between God and myself. I am sure you Corinthians ought not to say it; for all my soberer thoughts and most painful labours are for you." But I apprehend on the whole, that the vided clauses are to be taken in such an united view, as to give the sense with which the paraphrase concludes; that it was piety to God, and, charity to them, which wrought up the apostle's mind to that transport which some were so ready to censure; and that a lively view of the love of Christ produced such warm impressions of both.

^c Bears us away.] This is the beautiful import of αὐχαι, which suggests a noble simile, which few translations observe. See the note on Phil. i. 23.

selves; but unto him which died for them, and rose again.

16 Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh; yet now henceforth know we him no more.

17 Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are past away; behold, all things are become new.

18 And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation.

19 To wit, that God was æra of their lives (whatever they have formerly done) live to themselves, so as to make their own will their rule, or to seek any interest of their own, distinct from his: but that they should all agree, that they will live to the honour, glory, and interest, of him who died for them; and when he rose again from the dead, retained the same affection for them, and is continually improving his recovered life for their security and happiness. So that on the whole, we from this time forward know not any man after the flesh; we have no longer any partial regard for any; on account of their being Jews by birth, or religion, or as to the aspect which their friendship for us may have on our secular interest; and if we have known Christ after the flesh, and governed ourselves by any carnal expectations from the Messiah, as a temporal Prince, who should render our nation the terror of the whole world, and raise us to universal monarchy; henceforth we know [him] in these views no more, but entertain quite different sentiments concerning him. And thus it will be with others, who enter truly into the genius of the gospel; so that if any man [be] really in Christ Jesus; if he have a vital and prevailing faith in him, [there is] a new creation in the heart of that man; so entirely are his principles, apprehensions, and pursuits changed; old things are passed away, and with respect to him, behold, all things are become new; he is brought as it were into another world, and is himself quite a different creature from what he before was. And as it is the work of God to create, so here it may properly be said, that all things [are] of God, who hath in his infinite condescension conquered our prejudices, and reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ; having by his grace in him, laid a proper and honourable foundation for the exercise of his mercy towards us, and for the subduing of our hearts to love and obedience. And in pursuance of this great and condescending design, he hath committed to us his ministers, and especially to his apostles; the ministry of reconciliation: entrusting us with this important message, to proclaim it to the world, and so far as in us lies, to transmit it to the remotest ages. And this is an abstract and epitome of it all; namely, that God was in Christ united to him, and manifesting himself by him, thereby

SECT.
IX.
1 Cor.
V. 15.

16

17

18

19

SECT.
ix.2 Cor.
V. 19.

thereby reconciling the world both of Jews and Gentiles unto himself; and in consequence of that, not imputing to them, and charging to their account, with righteous inexorable severity, their various and aggravated offences: but setting forth an act of grace, and unlimited pardon, to all those who should believe in him. This is that great Divine truth on which our salvation depends; and God hath committed unto us, as a trust of the highest importance, the gracious word, or message of reconciliation. Therefore we are to be considered by you, as sustaining the office and dignity of ambassadors for Christ^d, on his account, and in his stead; so that God is, as it were, intreating [you] by us, and we beseech [you] in Christ's stead^e, with the greatest importunity and tenderness of address, that, when so much is done on God's part to make up the breach, which must otherwise have been fatal to his offending creatures, ye would not, by your own obstinacy, reject the benefit of all these condescending overtures; but would be cordially and truly reconciled to God, and thankfully accept of that friendship and protection which he vouchsafes to offer you. And that your hearts may, if possible, be melted, we urge you by the most affecting of all arguments, even the blood and death of his incarnate Son: for we tell you, that he, that is, God, hath made him who knew no sin, but was perfectly innocent and perfectly holy, [a] sin [offering] for us; that by the sacrifice of himself, he might expiate the guilt of our transgressions, and that so we might be made accepted in him, and furnished with a plea, as prevalent for our justification and admission into the Divine favour, as if we had retained our innocence untainted, and in every respect conformed ourselves to the righteousness which the law of God^f required and demanded.

^d Ambassadors for Christ.] The apostles were so in a peculiar sense; but if it be the will of Christ, that ministers in all ages should press men to accept the treaty of reconciliation established in him, then it is evident, they may be called his ambassadors, even though such a phrase had never been used in scripture.

^e In Christ's stead.] So $\epsilon\nu\pi\sigma\ \chi\rho\iota\sigma\tau\upsilon$ plainly signifies here. When Christ was in the world, he pressed this treaty of reconciliation; and we rise up in his stead to urge it still farther.

^f Made the righteousness of God.] That is, divinely righteous. It is a very strong phrase to signify our being accepted of God, as perfectly righteous, when considered as by faith united to him who was perfectly so. There is an evident and beautiful contrast, between Christ being made sin, and our being made righteousness, that is, treated as perfectly righteous

^g Addressing

20 Now then we are Ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us:

we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

21 For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

• COR. VI. 1. We then as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain :

2 (For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time: behold, now is the day of salvation.)

demand. We then [us] the joint labourers, [of God] in this important work, compare 1 Cor. iii. 9. note ' beseech [you] with the most earnest importunity, that you receive not the surprising grace of God in vain ; that you do not so slight this merciful proclamation of pardon, righteousness, and life, through the blood of his Son, as to lose the benefit of it. Again, let 2 me urge immediate compliance with it on all who have not as yet secured its invaluable blessings : for he says, when represented as addressing himself to the Messiah', in one of Isaiah's prophecies, (Isa. xlix. 8.) I have heard thee in an acceptable time, and in a day of salvation have I helped and sustained thee. God there, as you see, speaks of a limited time, in which the Messiah's petition in favour of his people was welcome to him, and in which he was ready to grant salvation ; and behold now [is] the accepted time ; behold now [is] the day of salvation: this is the precious season, when, by the wonderful favour and goodness of God, complete forgiveness, and eternal felicity is freely offered. O, that you may all be so wise as to accept it !

SECT. IX.

2 Cor. VI. 1.

IMPROVEMENT.

How adorable is the Divine condescension, that such an embassy of peace should ever be sent to any of the children of the fallen Adam ! How wonderful the Divine patience, that the accepted time, and the day of salvation, should, after so many slights, be so long protracted ! O, let us not receive such grace in vain, lest affronted mercy should forsake its seat, and give way to inexorable justice !

Chap. vi. 2

Surely if there be a sentiment, that may justly excite the heart to the greatest fervour of affection, and that will vindicate the most ardent transports of zeal to spread it in the world, it must be that of the love of Christ ; which may well bear us away, while we seriously consider, in how miserable a state he found us, dead in sin, and under a sentence of death by the Divine law : especially,

Chap. v. 1

2 Addressing himself to the Messiah.] I think it evident, that as these words stand in Isaiah, they are a promise made to Christ ; in which God engages to give him the Gentiles as an accession to his church, and reward of his mediatorial undertaking. And in this connection, it is as if the apostle had said, ' since such a promise is made, see to it that you seek it, and you will find it an acceptable time.' You will come as it were in a good hour, as Christ is represented to have done.

SECT.
XI.Ver.
14, 15

when we farther reflect, at how expensive a rate he redeemed us, even with the price of his own life. Who then, that has any remains of judgment at all, must not judge and determine in his own mind, that it is most fit, that our ransomed lives should be sacred to him that redeemed them; that our breasts should be on fire, with the most earnest desires to promote his cause and kingdom; that henceforth, from the time we come to the knowledge of this important truth, we should not live to ourselves but to him who died for us, and rose again, resuming, with his renewed life, the same tender concern for our happiness, which engaged him continually to exert it in the most generous efforts for our recovery and salvation.

Let all secular views, therefore, be given up; and let us labour 17 to improve in that renovation of soul which is the essential character of the true Christian; and as ever we desire to have any satisfactory evidence, that we are in Christ, let us see to it that we are new creatures; and if we are indeed so, let us daily acknowledge our obligations to his transforming grace. From him are 18 the first proposals of peace and reconciliation to offending creatures; from him, the disposition of soul, humbly to submit ourselves to the terms so kindly proposed, and to sue out our pardon agreeably to the purposes of this grand act of indemnity. How amazing the condescension that grants it: and appoints ambassadors to urge us, to have compassion on our own souls, and not reject this counsel of God against ourselves! May the ministers of the gospel often consider themselves in this view, as ambassadors and agents for Christ, by whom God beseecheth sinners to be reconciled; and let them prosecute this embassy, with all holy importunity and earnest address. O, that the success of it might be more apparent; that so that friendship might be established between earth and heaven, which may bring down daily anticipations of heaven to earth! Amen.

19, 20

SECT. X.

The apostle enlarges, with great freedom, on the temper with which, in the midst of all their afflictions and persecutions, he and his brethren prosecuted that important embassy of which he had been speaking in the former section. 2 Cor. VI. 3—10.

2 CORINTHIANS VI. 3.

SECT.
8.2 Cor.
VI. 3.

THIS is the affair we negotiate, this is the message we deliver; and while we are thus employed, it is our constant care, that we may behave in such a manner as may add the greatest efficacy

2 Cor. VI. 3.
GIVING no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed:

efficacy to our address, and give no offence^a to any, by any part of our [conduct;] that the ministry of reconciliation be not blamed, and the success of the gospel thereby obstructed. But on the contrary, we would be, and I hope we are, in every respect, approving ourselves to all that see and know us, such as they ought to be, who have the honour of being the ministers and ambassadors of God; in this view we govern the inmost emotions of our souls, endeavouring to possess them in much patience, in the midst of all the afflictions which his providence calls us to bear, in all the necessities we are compelled to endure, in all the straits to which we are at any time reduced, and all the anguish of heart we may unavoidably feel in them^b. This steady patience we endeavour to maintain, in stripes when we are scourged in synagogues and cities as if we were the most notorious offenders against God and men, and the vilest pests of society; in imprisonments, though we not only endure so many hardships in our confinement but are cut off by it from those public labours for the glory of God and the edification of the church, which are dearer to us than our lives; in tumults^c, which are raised against us by Jews and Gentiles, and by which our enemies are often endeavouring to tear us in pieces: in labours, which we incessantly pursue, either in our ministerial work, or in those secular callings by which we are often obliged to earn our daily bread; in watchings, when in prosecution of these various employments, the hours of the night are added to those of the day, and

SECRET.
X.
2 Cor.
VI. 4.

4 But in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses,

5 In stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings,

^a Give no offence, &c.] This clause is so connected with the foregoing, that it would have been highly expedient to have continued the preceding section, at least to the end of this; but the length would be inconvenient. And there are some other instances, in which we have been forced to yield to necessity on such occasions; but the common division, which separates the last verse of the 5th chapter from the first of the 6th, seems yet more improper. To render the beginning of the section less apparently abrupt, I render that, we give no offence, which had more literally been translated by the participle, giving, &c. as in the following clauses: but such little variations, as they affect not the sense, will I hope be excused, as what on my plan I knew not how to avoid.

^b Afflictions—necessities—straits.] Dr. Whitby thinks, the first word, ἄδικε, signifies affliction in general—the second, ἀσχημα, more grievous and unavoidable troubles—and the third, ἐπιχειρήματα, such pressures as reduce us to the greatest straits: the compound sense therefore on the whole is, we are, as it were hemmed in with inevitable, and humanly speaking, inextricable calamities, on every side. Compare sect. vii, note c.

^c In tumults: ἀνάταραχος.] Beza interprets this, (and I think no man seems better to have understood the peculiar propriety of Greek words,) of such attacks as a man cannot stand against, but which bear him hither and thither by violence; he would render it in Latin, Exagitationibus.

SECT.

X.

2 Cor.

VI. 5.

and we have hardly time for our necessary repose; in fastings, to which, besides those which devotion chooses, we are often obliged to submit, for want of proper supplies of food:

6 Yet still, in the midst of all these difficulties, conducting ourselves, in unspotted purity, labouring to improve daily in the knowledge^d of those Divine truths which it is our great business to teach others, and by the exercise of a constant command over our passions, to grow in long suffering and in gentleness, and every other amiable disposition which we cultivate in humble dependence on the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit: who dwells in our hearts, as a continued principle of that undissembled love which we exercise without limitation, not only to friends and benefactors, but

7 enemies and persecutors. Still we are faithful in asserting, and zealous in propagating, the sacred gospel, that word of uncorrupted and infallible truth; and we persist in it, supported by the almighty power of that God by whom it is revealed, and by whom we know it shall be rendered finally victorious; and in the mean time, while our enemies assault us on every side, it is our care still to be clothed and girded about with the armour of righteousness, both on the right-hand, and on the left^e; well knowing that armour to be impenetrable. And in this consciousness we pass unhurt, and in a great measure unmoved, through honour and dishonour, through evil report and good report, neither elated with the one, nor depressed and dejected with the other. We are treated by many, as if we were a set of artful deceivers, that scruple no fraud and falsehood, by which we might carry our cause; and yet we know in our own conscience

6 By pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned,

^e By the word of truth, and the power of God, and the armour of righteousness on the right-hand and on the left,

8 By honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report: as deceivers, and yet true;

^d By knowledge.] Interpreters give many different senses of this word. Dr. Scott says it signifies prudence, which is a Christian virtue, whereas the mere understanding of Divine things was a gift. Mr. Pyle thinks it signifies their improving the knowledge of Divine mysteries. Mr. Cradock refers it to an acquaintance with the true sense of scripture; which brings it to much the same with what has been called the word of knowledge. I conclude it implies not only a solicitude to grow in the knowledge of the gospel, but to improve that knowledge to the edification of others; which accordingly is expressed in the parabola.

^e Armour of righteousness, on the right-hand, and on the left.] Some unnaturally think this alludes to the soldiers who were taught to wield their swords with the left-hand, as well as the right; and others, that it refers to the Christians being armed against the temptations of prosperity and adversity. That may well be included; but the armour spoken of, seems of the defensive kind, on the arms; or breast, or both.

9 As unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold we live; as chastened, and not killed;

10 As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things.

science, and God can witness for us, that we are true and faithful, and would not deviate from the strictest rules of integrity, to carry any point, how important soever it might seem to ourselves, or the religion we propagate. We are treated by men, as inconsiderable creatures, in the lowest rank of life, obscure and unknown, as undeserving any public notice and regard; and [yet] we are really well known to multitudes, by the happiest tokens, as the men by whom they have not only received that bodily healing, which they could never have expected from natural means, but by the yet more valuable memorials of having enlightened their eyes with Divine knowledge, and brought back their wandering souls to God. We are regarded by others, as dying men, and seem ourselves to be in daily danger of being sacrificed to the rage of our enemies; and yet behold hitherto, through the guardian and astonishing care of that Redeemer whom we preach, we continue in life, and live to the most important purposes. Our afflictions are many, and we consider ourselves under them, as chastened by our heavenly father; yet, blessed be his name, we are not killed; and far from intending our destruction, we know that he will over-rule these chastisements to the advancement of our salvation. If our external circumstances alone be regarded, we must indeed appear as sorrowful, and the world will naturally conclude, that we have cause for continual lamentation; and yet when the inward dispositions of our minds are known, and the views with which we are secretly supported, it will be found that we are always rejoicing, in the present assurances of the Divine favour, and the certain expectation of complete felicity and eternal glory. We appear as poor in this world, and indeed we are so; having neither silver nor gold, nor estate; and yet we are continually enriching many, with treasures, which they would not part with for all the revenues of princes and kings; as having nothing that we can call our own; and yet, indeed possessing all things; which we know to be ours, so far as our heavenly Father shall see fit; and therefore are

SECT.
X.

2 Cor.
VI. 8.

SECT.
X.

as easy and as happy as if we were actually the proprietors of the whole world †.

IMPROVEMENT.

WHOSE soul can remain untouched, while he reads this eloquent period in which the apostle's mouth is (as he afterwards expresses it) thus opened, in consequence of his heart's being enlarged! In how lively, yet unaffected a manner, does this sacred writer paint his own character and circumstances: and how much profound and important sense is there in those paradoxes which he so naturally introduces on this occasion! Let the ministers of the gospel herein behold, at once, their model and their support.

Ver. 3 Let them cultivate this inoffensive behaviour, not only out of regard to themselves, but that their office may not be censured; and still approve themselves the servants of God, by patience amidst all their tribulations, their necessities, and their pressures;

4 and, so far as their circumstances require it, by labours, by watchings, and fastings; especially when by an indulgent providence they are not called to do it in stripes, in imprisonments, and in tumults.

5 Still let them cultivate purity and knowledge, long suffering and gentleness, with unfeigned love in the Holy Ghost.

6 Aided by him, let them arm themselves with the word of truth, and in the strength of God, gird on the armour of righteousness

8 on the right hand and on the left. Thus fortified, they may boldly break their way through honour and infamy, though praise and reproach; as we plainly see that infamy and reproach may be the portion of the best of men, and the most useful members of society. Who are we, that we should refuse a cup, of which the apostles and our Lord drank so deep? But let us be superior to

8 human censures. If any call us deceivers, let us show that we are invariably true to the interests of God and of goodness. If they

9 affect to overlook us, as unknown, and beneath their notice, let us endeavour to render ourselves well known, by the benefits which, by Divine grace, we are the instruments of conferring on 10 men's souls. So shall we be always rejoicing in the midst of those sorrows of which nature cannot be entirely insensible; whilst amidst our poverty we are enriching many, yea then, though we have nothing that we can call our own, we shall possess all things; shall appear in the eyes of God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ, the richest and the happiest of mankind, even though we were in other respects, of all men the most miserable.

While

† Possessing all things] This is certainly one of the sublimest passages that was ever writ. Compare Phil. iv. 12.

1 Tim. vi. 17. Eph. i. 3. Rev. xxi 7. 1 Cor. iii. 21—23.

While we consider this as the character of the first preachers of Christianity, which, with so noble a plainness and simplicity they profess, let us adore the Divine grace by which such a spirit was raised in the world, and by which it hath in some measure been maintained, even to this day. And let it encourage our most earnest and affectionate prayers, that God would raise up in every age (and especially in our own, in which they seem so ready to fail) a generation of evangelical ministers : who, fired with such generous principles of action, and emulating so noble a character, may commend themselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God, and roll away that reproach which unworthy men have brought on the most excellent of all offices. Thus armed, may they extend their happy conquests ; thus animated, may they see of the travail of their soul, to their abundant, their everlasting satisfaction and delight.

SECT.
X.
Ver.
10

SECT. XI.

The Apostle urges the Corinthians to avoid those alliances with idolaters, which might tend to ensnare them : and pleads the gracious promises God had made to his people, as an engagement to them to be upon their guard in this respect ; and in general, to aim at the sublimest attainments in religion. 2 Cor. VI. 11, to the end. Chap. VII. 1.

2 Cor. VI. 11.

O YE Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged.

12 Ye are not straitened in us, but ye are straitened in your own bowels.

13 Now for a recompence in the same, (I speak

2 CORINTHIANS VI. 11.

YOU see, O ye Corinthians, my dear brethren, my beloved children, with how much freedom of address our mouth is opened to you ; but words flow freely on an occasion, on which our hearts is so much enlarged, in a tenderness, which neither words nor tears can sufficiently express. Sure I am, that ye are not straitened in us ; all that we can do for your comfort and happiness, you may securely promise yourselves : but I fear, ye are straitened in your own bowels, and have not all of you, that affection for us, nor readiness to receive our communications, which the relation between us might challenge, and my tenderness for you ought to excite. And therefore, for that very recompence, which we most of all desire, which is so just and reasonable, and which indeed, in its consequences, would be yet more beneficial to you, than delightful to us, I speak to you as to [my] own children, with all the genuine overflowings of paternal love ; be ye also

SECT.
XI.
2 Cor.
VI. 11.

12

13

SECT.
xi.2 Cor.
v. 13.

also thus enlarged^a towards me, and let this confidence with which I am pouring forth, as it were, all my heart into your bosom, strike strongly on your minds, to raise some correspondent emotion.

14 And how shall that love be expressed? Truly by no method can it more effectually be manifested, than by taking all the care you possibly can, for your own security and happiness. In which view, I must particularly urge it, that ye be not unequally yoked either in marriage, or any other intimate friendship, with unbelievers; for what participation hath that strict righteousness, to the practice of which the gospel calls you, its sincere votaries, with that unrighteousness, in which they are so generally plunged? Or what communion hath the light, into which you by the Divine mercy are brought, with that deplorable darkness of ignorance and vice in which they continue to be lost? Or what concord [is there,] or can there be, between Christ, to whom ye are united, and Belial, who reigneth in the children of disobedience? Or what part hath a believer with an infidel: or an infidel, with a believer? The union is surely, at the first view of it, too unnatural to be either easy, safe or

16 lasting? And indeed I may say, what consistence has the temple of God^b with those detestable idols, which would by this means be, as it were, erected in it: or at least placed so near, that it must be polluted by them? It is a proper question, and a just view in which to state the point; for ye are the temple of the living God, as God himself hath said; I will in the most intimate manner, dwell in them^c, and walk among [them], and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. (Lev. xxvi. 12.) Now though this immediately refers to God's extraordinary presence 13 speak as unto my children,) be ye also enlarged.

14 Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?

15 And what concord hath Christ with Belial; or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?

16 And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God: as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

^a Be ye also enlarged.] Perhaps the apostle's meaning may be this, 'Give me that pleasure which my paternal tenderness towards you will find, in having it in my power to do you abundance of good, through your readiness to receive what we are so ready to impart, and fall in with my attempts of usefulness among you.'

^b Temple of God.] There seems a peculiar strength in this interrogative. If God would not endure idols in any part of the land in which he dwelt, how much less would he endure them under his own roof?

^c In the most intimate manner dwell in them.] No words I knew in our language, can equal the force of the original, νομωσω εν ωσιν, I will take up my dwelling in them. This was a promise made to the Jews on their being converted; and consequently refers to their privileges, as members of the Christian church; which shews the propriety of the application, Jer. xxxi. 33, chap. xxvii. 37, 38.

17 Wherefore, come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you.

18 And will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters saith the Lord Almighty.

2 Cor. VII. 1. Having, therefore, these promises (dearly beloved,) let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

sence among the Jews, yet, when we consider the constitution of the Christian church, we cannot possibly imagine, that God is less favourably present with it, than he was with the Jewish. We may therefore consider the exhortation so naturally grounded on such a promise, and may, as it were, hear God calling to us, and saying, as to Israel, with respect to idolaters of old, (Isa. lii. 11.) Come out from among them, and be ye separate^d, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and, if ye behave in a manner thus worthy your professed relation to me, I will then receive you, which, till then, I cannot do; And will be a father unto you^e, and ye shall be to me for sons and for daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. Now surely if the Almighty God will say thus unto us, we ought to be much affected with it, and neglect nothing that is necessary to insure so great and invaluable a privilege. Having therefore, my beloved brethren, such gracious promises of God's abode among us, his dwelling in us, and his adopting us into the number of his children, let us act worthy so high a relation; and as God is perfectly holy, let us labour to the utmost to purify ourselves from all pollution, both of the flesh and of the spirit, from every impurity of life, and from every sensual affection, which might defile our hearts, and render them displeasing to him. Nor let us rest merely in this negative view of religion; but let us endeavour to be perfecting holiness, and lay the foundation of it in the fear of God, in whose presence we always are, and by whom all our actions are examined, and to whom our hearts are open; well knowing, that we cannot secure to ourselves these blessings, without such a care; and that it is what gratitude most powerfully dictates, where we have the highest hopes that we are interested in them.

SECT. XI.
2 Cor. VI. 17.

17

18

2 Cor. VII. 1.

IMPROVE-

d Be ye separate.] As God's promise of dwelling in a peculiar manner among the Jews, obliged them to separate themselves from the converse of their heathen neighbours, that they might not be ensnared with their superstitions; much more are Christians obliged by that peculiar gracious presence of God which they enjoy, to separate themselves from all impure and idolatrous worship. Exod. xxix. 45, 46. Lev. xxxvi. 11, 12.

e I will be a father, &c.] It is queried where God says this? Some answer, Jer. xxxi. 1. But that does not sufficiently express the paternal relation. Others refer to 2 Sam. vii. 8, 14, which may be applied to Christ, and in him, to believers. Compare Heb. i. 4, 5. Some think, it is not expressly to be found any where, and that it refers to all the scriptures where God calls his people by the title of children.

IMPROVEMENT.

SECT.
xi.

Ver. Thus may cordial love open the mouth of Christian ministers, when addressing their people ; and thus may the love of Christians to each other in every station of life express itself, and produce for 11 a recompence a mutual enlargement. This is one of the sweetest

12 pleasures, and richest blessings of friendship, when wisely and happily contracted. Let us therefore cultivate such friendships, and be very careful, that we do not form others, which may properly be 14—16 called, being unequally yoked. We profess to be pursuing righteousness, to be light in the Lord, to be united to Christ, to be consecrated to God: let us not then have an intimate converse with the slaves of unrighteousness, the children of darkness, the sons of Belial, the votaries of idols. Far from subjecting ourselves to such dangerous snares, let us rather be earnestly seeking every advantage for making the noblest improvements in religion. Let us examine our lives and our hearts, that we may be cleansed from all pollutions of the spirit, as well as of the flesh. Let us labour after sublime ideas of the perfection of holiness, and after a temper of mind correspondent to those ideas. In order to attain which, let us often be surveying our high and glorious privileges, and those exceeding rich and precious promises, which God by his gospel is making to us; separating ourselves from all evil, that he may receive us, that he may dwell with us, and walk among us, that he may consecrate us as a holy temple to himself; yea, that the Lord Almighty may become a Father to us, and own us for his sons and his daughters. To us is the word of this promise sent, this is the hope of our calling: let us make it sure, let us daily survey it, that it may produce and cherish a correspondent sanctity and zeal. Amen.

Chap.
vii. 1.

Chap.
vi.

17—18

SECT. XII.

The Apostle farther expresses his affections to the Corinthians, as illustrated by the pleasure with which he received good tidings from them by Titus, and by the part he took in the sorrows which his necessary reproofs had occasioned, and his present joy in that these sorrows had issued in their reformation. 2 Cor. VII. 2, to the end.

SECT.
xii.

2 CORINTHIANS VII. 2.

2 Cor.
VII. 2.

BUT to return from this digression, to the attempt I was making to remove some prejudices,

2 Cor. VII. 2.
RECEIVE us: we have wronged no man man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man.

judices, which, much to your own detriment, I know that some of you have imbibed against my person and ministry. Give me leave, my brethren, to intreat you, that ye receive us with that affection which is due to the faithful servants of Christ, and to those who have been instruments in your conversion and edification : for, whatever may have been insinuated by ill-designing persons to the contrary, we have injured no man in his person, we have corrupted no man in his morals, we have defrauded no man^a in his property, by any of those artifices which covetousness sometimes practises under very solemn forms. *I speak not [this] to condemn [you]*³ of ingratitude, or infidelity, though I have been obliged to find some fault with you ; for I have told you before, that ye are in our hearts, with such tenderness, that if it were the will of God, we could be glad both to live and to die with [you ;] to spend the remainder of our lives at Corinth, or to end them there, did not the purposes of our master's glory call to other, and many of them less grateful and agreeable scenes.

5 COR.
XII.
2 Cor.
VII. 2.

3 I speak not this to condemn you : for I have said before, that you are in our hearts to die and live with you.

4 Great is my boldness of speech toward you, great is my glorying of you : I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation.

Great, as you see, [is] my freedom of speech to you, upon this subject; and great is also my boasting concerning you, as to the assurance which I have of your regards for me; and, on this account, I am filled with consolation at the remembrance of you; I do exceedingly abound^b in joy, in the midst of all our affliction, when I think how well you behave, and how happy an alteration is prevailing among you.

5 For when we were come into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but we were troubled on every side; without were fightings, within were fears.

An instance of this affectionate regard I have lately had an opportunity deeply to feel, and very naturally to manifest : for when we came into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but we were afflicted in every [place,] and circumstance, through the rage and malice of our enemies; yet these alarms could not cause us to forget you; but while without there [were] continual fightings, with the most furious and cruel opposition, within there were fears and anxieties on your account. But the blessed God, who is pleased⁶ to wear it among his other titles, that he is the Comforter of those who are brought low by affliction

6 Nevertheless, God that comforteth those that

^a Defrauded no man.] The word $\pi\lambda\omicron\nu\kappa\eta\sigma\eta\sigma\alpha\mu\epsilon\upsilon$, signifies to indulge a covetous temper, and make a prey of others by it; and perhaps intimates, that the false teachers, of whom he had so much reason to complain, had done it.

^b Exceedingly abound.] The word $\epsilon\pi\epsilon\pi\lambda\upsilon\theta\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\mu\epsilon\upsilon$, has an inexpressible energy; and is, if I mistake not, a word of the apostle's own making.

^c However

SECT.
XII.2 Cor.
VII. 6.

tion and distress, and owns it as his prerogative, to bear up the human heart, comforted us by the coming of Titus ; who arrived so seasonably at Macedonia, at a time when both our circumstances and frame of spirit needed all the assistance that so pious and delightful a friend could give. And indeed it was not merely by his coming, that I was thus comforted ; but with the consolation with which he was comforted by you, when he told us particularly of your earnest desire to rectify whatever was amiss, and of your grief for what had been matter of offence to God, and sorrow to me, and of your affectionate zeal for me, so that I rejoiced much more than in other 8 circumstances I could have done. Because now I can take the liberty to say, that if I grieved you in the epistle which I formerly wrote, in which indeed I was obliged to treat some subjects with greater severity than I could have wished, I do not repent of it, however anxious I might before have been^c ; for the regret I at first felt on that account, is now swallowed up in that superior pleasure with which I see the happy effects of it ; for I now have the satisfaction to find, that this epistle, however for a little while it might have grieved you, hath by the blessing of God, been productive of great good. 9 And now I rejoice, not that ye were grieved, for that will always give me concern when I reflect upon it ; but that ye grieved to such happy purpose, and were by that means brought to true repentance, to a change of mind ; for this was indeed the case, as ye have grieved with a penitential and humble regard to the honour of the blessed God, which is so immediately and peculiarly affected by the irregularities of those that profess themselves his people. So that on the whole, ye were not in any degree endangered by us ; but on the contrary received, as we intended, great benefit by the severity we 10 were compelled to use. For this is indeed the natural effect of a sorrow like yours ; that grief, which that are cast down, comforted us by the coming of Titus :

7 And not by his coming only, but by the consolation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; so that I rejoiced the more.

8 For though I made you sorry with a letter, I do not repent, though I did repent: for I perceive that the same epistle made you sorry, though it were but for a season.

9 Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing.

10 For godly sorrow worketh

^c However anxious I might before have been: $\epsilon\ \kappa\alpha\ \mu\epsilon\tau\epsilon\mu\epsilon\lambda\omicron\lambda\omicron\gamma\epsilon\tau\omicron\iota$.] So I chose to render the word, as $\mu\epsilon\lambda\alpha\mu\epsilon\lambda\omicron\upsilon\sigma\alpha$ strictly expresses an after care and anxiety for any thing that has been done? whereas the word repent always signifies a wish it had not been done. Now as what St. Paul did, in writing the former epistle, was proper, and done under the direction of the Divine Spirit, it does not seem reasonable to suppose that he really repented of it. It may also signify a kind of misgiving of heart, natural, when the reproof, however necessary, is given to a person one tenderly loves, where the event is dubious, as in this instance it might be.

d Ye

worketh repentance to salvation, not to be repented of; but the sorrow of the world worketh death.

which regards the honour of God, and takes its rise from such tender and grateful views of him, as we before hinted, worketh a repentance, which leads to salvation, and assures in it; and therefore is never afterwards to be repented of; whereas the sorrow that arises merely from a regard to the things of the world, is often a foolish excess, productive of fatal consequences, and sometimes worketh death; either breaking the heart, arming men against their own lives, or otherwise producing that rebellion against God, by which the soul is finally destroyed. But it is pleasant to trace the happy effects of that better principle which hath influenced you; for behold this same thing, that is, your being grieved for your sins out of a pious respect to God, and the dishonour it brought upon him, what diligence it wrought in you to reform what had been amiss; yea, [what] a solicitous care, to make the best apology you could for what you had done; and of the sounder part, to make their innocence appear, yea, [what] indignation did it prodnce against those who had given the offence; yea, [what] fear, lest any thing of that sort should be encouraged and repeated; yea, [what] earnest desire of seeing me again, and confirming our friendship in surer bonds; yea, [what] zeal in every method that could be subservient to these views; yea, indeed, if I may so express myself, [what] revenge^d, against yourselves for those things, which, all circumstances considered, you could not but condemn; against sin, as your great enemy; so that upon the whole, considering you as a society, you have approved yourselves to be pure in this matter, and there is no farther stain remaining on the church, where I was so much afraid of lasting infamy and reproach. Let it not therefore be the cause of any farther distress; but assure yourselves, that if I have written [any thing] to you, different from what I could wish to write, and you to receive, [it was] not so much with any personal views, on his account, who had done, or his who had received the injury,^e but for the sake

SECT.
XII.
2 Cor.
VII. 10.

11 For behold, this self-same thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you; yea, what clearing of yourselves; yea, what indignation; yea, what fear; yea, what vehement desire; yea, what zeal; yea, what revenge! in all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter.

12 Wherefore though I wrote unto you, I did it not for his cause that had done the wrong, nor for his cause that suffered wrong, but that our care for you in the sight of d Yea [what revenge.] Mr. Gataker has very well observed here, that Calvin and Reynolds, and some other divines of note, have been misled, by taking it for granted, that these verses contain seven distinct marks of true repentance, to be found in every sincere penitent; whereas indeed these are not characters of the temper of each, but of different persons in different circumstances, according to the part they respectively acted in the affair in question.

e Received the injury.] Hence some infer, and it seems reasonable, that the pa-

1107

SECT.
xii.2 Cor.
VII. 13.

- sake of manifesting our diligence and care for you which through the Divine goodness hath now been made apparent, though by so severe and painful a trial, before God [and] unto you. Therefore we were greatly comforted in your consolation, and we rejoiced more exceedingly in the joy of good Titus, which gave me a pleasure yet greater than he himself could derive from it; because we find your temper and state so
- 14 good, that his spirit was refreshed by you all. So that on the whole, if I had boasted any thing of you to him, that I was confident my Corinthian friends would approve themselves worthy of the figure they had formerly made in religion, I was not ashamed of that boasting; but as we have always spoken in the exactest regard to truth, when addressing ourselves to you, so also our boasting [concerning you] to Titus, that all would be well again at Corinth, has been verified, greatly to our satisfaction: So that his tenderest affections are now engaged towards you exceedingly, which he expresses in the most genuine manner whenever he mentions, or recollects the obedience of you all in general to those apostolical injunctions which I sent you by him: [and] how you received him as my messenger, and the minister of Christ, with fear and trembling; expressing always the most solicitous concern, that he might see nothing which it might grieve him to observe, or me to hear reported by him. I rejoice therefore, that in every respect I have confidence in you', and am encouraged to renew that honourable testimony which it has always been my pleasure to bear to your character, and which, I assure myself, you will continue more and more to deserve.

of God might appear unto you.

13 Therefore we were comforted in your comfort; yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit was refreshed by you all.

14 For if I have boasted any thing to him of you, I am not ashamed; but as we speak all things to you in truth, even so our boasting which I made before Titus, is found a truth.

15 And his inward affection is more abundant toward you, whilst he remembereth the obedience of you all, how with fear and trembling you received him.

16 I rejoice therefore that I have confidence in you in all things.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. 5 How great is the boldness of a good conscience! and how much does it promote that freedom, that authority, with which the ministers of Christ address themselves to their hearers, when they can thus appeal to them as to the uprightness, integrity ther of the incestuous person was still living; which must be a great aggravation of his crime.

f Confidence in you.] The address of all this part of the epistle is wonderful. This in particular, finely introduces what he had to say in the following chapter, and is strongly illustrated by chap. ix. 2—4.

tegrity, and disinterestedness of their conduct! Frequently do we, in some degree, share the trials of the apostle; and while we may be surrounded with fightings without, are exercised with fears within; but we have a God, who assumeth it to himself as one of his titles, that he comforteth those that are cast down, and brought low. May every sincere lover of Christ, and of souls, be filled with consolation from him, and amidst all his tribulations, whatever they are, be made to rejoice exceedingly in the joy of his Christian friends and converts! May he trace in them the marks of that true repentance which is never to be repented of, and which is represented in such genuine language, as no heart could have dictated, but one that had felt what is here described. And since there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not; and consequently none who needeth not repentance, may we all know by experience, that diligence, that indignation, that fear, that zeal, that desire, that revenge, which the apostle saw in his Corinthian brethren, and which he rejoiced so much to see! There is not a surer office of friendship, than to endeavour to promote this godly sorrow. And O, how blessed, how divine a principle is religion, whose most painful operation is productive of so much inward and substantial happiness! whereas the sorrow of this world, to which they who fondly love the world, and eagerly pursue it, are most exposed, is attended with such fatal consequences, as even to work death.

Let us observe with pleasure the address of St. Paul, to make the Corinthians what they ought to be, by representing to them that pleasing confidence he reposed in them, the manner in which he had even boasted of them, and the satisfaction he found in all their first tendencies towards a reformation of remaining defects. And let us earnestly pray for the Spirit of wisdom, that our hearts may be happily attuned to such due mixtures of faithful inspection, resolute sincerity, and endearing tenderness, with respect to all who are committed to our care, whether in offices of a public or private nature, as may most effectually promote their advancement in the Divine life, and our own abundant joy.

SECT. XIII.

The Apostle enters on the subject of the contribution he was setting forward for the relief of the poor Christians of Judea, recommends to the Corinthians the example of the Macedonians, reminds them of the great grace of our blessed Redeemer, and gives some advice as to the manner of collecting and transmitting their bounty.
2 Cor. VIII. 1--15.

2 CORINTHIANS VIII. 1.

SECT.
xiii.2 Cor.
VIII. 1.

NOW we think it proper, brethren, to inform you of the happy and honourable effects of that abundant communication of the grace of God^a which has been mercifully bestowed upon the churches planted here in Macedonia, at Philippi, Thessalonica, Berea, and other places in this province: which has engaged them to exert themselves in a most liberal and generous contribution for the relief of the poor saints in Judea. And here it would be a pleasure to me more particularly to tell you, how in a great and extraordinary trial of affliction, which they met with from their persecuting enemies, who were always so ready to harass and plunder them (compare Acts xvi. chap. xvii.) their overflowing joy for receiving the Christian religion, and with it, if I may so speak, the depth of their poverty amidst these distresses of their own, hath so abounded and furnished such supplies, to the riches of their liberality, that indigent as they are, they have done wonders for the relief of their yet poorer brethren. So that, I can testify for them, and I do attest it with pleasure, that to the utmost extent of [their power; yea, and beyond what could have been expected, or on the usual principles of computation, judged to have been in [their] power

2 Cor. VIII. 1.

MOREOVER, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia:

2 How that in a great trial of affliction the abundance of their joy, and their deep poverty, abounded unto the riches of their liberality.

3 For to their power (I bear record) yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themselves:

^a Grace of God.] As χάρις sometimes signifies a gift, and things excellent and extraordinary in their kind are in Hebrew often said to be things of God, or Divine; as trees of God, are great and flourishing trees; cities of God, great cities. (compare Psalm. lxxx. 10. Acts vii. 20.) some have explained, χάρις τε οὐρα, as if it signified the great or liberal gift, which has been given in, or by the Macedonian churches; and Dr. Whitby very sufficiently proves, that χάρις sometimes is put for gift. But considering what is the general sense of the word in St. Paul's writings, and what his sentiments evidently are, as to the doctrine of Divine influences on the heart, I chose to follow the plainest and most obvious and common interpretation, which indeed I generally think the best, and take this verse to be in sense much equivalent to that pious acknowledgement of David, 1 Chron. xxix. 14, who are we, that we should be able to offer so willingly, &c.

4 Praying us with much intreaty, that we would receive the gift, and take upon us, the fellowship of the ministering to the saints.

5 And this they did, not as we hoped, but first gave their own-selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God :

6 Inasmuch that we desired Titus, that as he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace also.

7 Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us ; see that ye abound in this grace also.

8 I speak not by commandment, but by occasion of the forwardness of others, and to prove the sincerity of your love.

9 For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus power^b [they have been] willing of themselves, without my solicitation, to do the most generous things for the public service: At the same time intreating us with much importunity, that we would receive the gift which their bounty had prepared, and [take a part of the ministration of the saints, as one of the r commissioners to convey it to Jerusalem. And [this they did,] ⁵ not merely as we expected and hoped, but even beyond all we could have imagined; for they first gave themselves, and all they had, entirely to the honour and service of the Lord, and having thus surrendered all they were, and all they possessed, to Christ and his cause, they in effect resigned themselves to us by the will of God, putting themselves in this respect under my direction, to do what I should in conscience think most adviseable in present circumstances.

Inasmuch that, unable to withstand their pressing solicitation, we desired Titus, that as he had begun to do in other places, so he would also complete this instance of grace and liberality among you^c, and finish what yet remains to be done, as to collecting the intended contribution.

Therefore, my brethren, as ye abound in every other [gift] (1 Cor. i. 4—7. chap. xii. 8—10,) and particularly in faith, which rises to the fullest persuasion of the truth of the gospel, and in all utterance and ability to instruct others, and in the clearest knowledge of Divine things, and in all active diligence, and in your affectionate love to us ; so [we exhort] and entreat [you,] that ye would take this opportunity of shewing, that ye abound also in this grace of Christian liberality. And here, you will observe that I ⁸ speak not by way of command, so as to take upon me to determine how much, or in what proportion, ye shall give ; but that I may prove, by what I have just been saying of the diligence of others, that is the Macedonians, the genuine sincerity of your love in its most substantial effects.

And I may well expect, that you should exert ⁹ yourselves on such an occasion, in consequence of b To their power, yea, and beyond that.] This is a noble hyperbole, like that of Demosthenes, "I have performed all, even with an industry beyond my power."

c Complete this grace among you.] I doubt not, that χάρις here signifies gift, or present or liberality ; but I thought, that retaining the word grace here, might make the English reader more sensible of the ambiguity and emphasis of the word usually rendered grace.

d To

SECT.
xiii.2 Cor.
viii. 9.

of your acquaintance with the great and most fundamental principles of the gospel, in which you have been so faithfully instructed. For you know in some measure, though it is impossible for you fully to know, and distinctly to conceive in its utmost extent, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich in the glories of the heavenly world, and in supreme dominion and authority there, yet for your sakes he became poor, that you through this his voluntary poverty, might not only be discharged from that dreadful debt you had contracted to the Divine justice, by which you were become obnoxious to everlasting ruin and condemnation; but that you might also become rich in the favour of God, and in the graces of the Holy Spirit now, and at length for ever rich in the treasures and glories of the heavenly world: And as I cannot but desire, that the servants of so excellent a Master may herein imitate his example, and take the most effectual methods to advance his honour and interest in the world, I give, [my] advice to you in general, to dispatch this affair vigorously; for this is evidently expedient for you, and consistent with what you have already in a manner bound yourselves to, as you have begun, not only to do something, but also to exert yourselves^d resolutely and determinately, a year ago. I now therefore intreat you not to be offended, if I urge you to complete your undertaking, that according to the readiness which you expressed to determine, and resolve upon this good scheme, there may also be the accomplishment, of that determination, in proportion to what you have. The smallest contribution from such a principle will be pleasing to God, and most assuredly draw its reward after it; for if there be first a readiness of mind, according to what a man hath, [he is] accepted of God, [and] not according to what he hath not: a little in proportion to his abilities, is pleasing to God; yea, more pleasing, than it would be, if this proportion were less prudently observed. I say [this] not by any means, that [there should be] a rest to others, and affliction to you, that they should be eased, and you overburdened; But that of an

sus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich.

10 And herein I give my advice: for this is expedient for you, who, have begun before, not only to do, but also to be forward a year ago.

11 Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which you have.

12 For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

13 For I mean not that other men be eased, and you burdened:

14 But by an equality

^d To exert yourselves.] It is evident that, to exert, is an advance upon, exertio. So that it must signify a resolute and vigorous determination. Compare 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

lity, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want, that there may be equality, 15 As it is written, He that had gathered much, had nothing over; and he that had gathered little, had no lack.

an equality, on just and equitable principles, your abundance [may be] at this time, wisely and happily employed, as [a supply] to their want: that at some other time, if Providence give the occasion and opportunity, their abundance also may be [so] to your want; that there may be such an equality in the distribution of the good things of this life, as our mutual relation to each other may require. For the boun- 15 tiful Providence of God hath furnished them out in such an abundance, and given to some of you such a superfluity that there is room for a liberal distribution, without injuring the original possessor; and if such a distribution be made, we shall find that, as it is written concerning the manna, (Exod. xvi. 18.) He that [had] much did not abound, when all came to be divided, and he that [had] little did not lack; so he that has the greatest abundance of this world, may find necessitous objects enough, and he that is most destitute, will be competently supplied, if his richer brethren do their duty in this respect.

ECT.
xiii.
2 Cor.
VIII. 14.

IMPROVEMENT.

How peculiarly amiable does the Christian liberality of these Macedonians appear, when considered as abounding in a great trial of affliction, and in the depth of their poverty; yet a poverty, mingled with an abundance of joy, on account of that rich and happy state into which the gospel had brought them, and the first-fruits of that glorious inheritance to which they were entitled by the tenor of it. They were willing of themselves to contribute, even beyond their power, as persons of common generosity would have estimated it. Nor did they on their dying beds repent such a use of their property, or wish that it had been spent in gratifying their appetites, or hoarded for those they were to leave behind them. Nor do they now regret these liberalities, or complain that their expected harvest is perished.

Let

e That their abundance, &c.] It might seem obvious to object, that the Corinthians were rich and prosperous, the Jews poor and oppressed; so that there was no room to expect that this should happen. But it might be replied, all human affairs are uncertain; Corinth itself, from great prosperity, had been utterly undone in the Roman war by Memmius, some time before: or particular persons might be distressed or the whole body of Christians there reduced by persecutions, though their city continued to flourish."

f He that had much, &c.] Perhaps nothing could more illustrate the powerful agency of the Divine Providence, in events which seem most contingent, than this, that though such different quantities of manna were gathered by different persons, yet on an average there should be an over for each.

Ver.
1, 2

3

SECT.
xiii.

Let us remember their example for imitation; nor let any, who have a mite to spare, be wholly deficient, how low soever their circumstances may be; remembering that gracious complacency, with which, where there is a willing mind, the smallest tribute to the treasury of God is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not. To animate us to the most generous efforts of overflowing benevolence, may we ever bear in our mind that grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, of which we all know something, but which it is impossible we should ever fully know; because it passeth knowledge: that grace which engaged him, when rich, for our sakes to become poor, that we might be enriched by his poverty. What have we that deserves to be called a possession, which we do not hold by an act of Divine bounty and grace?

Let us consider ourselves as under indispensable engagements in consequence of it, to consecrate our all to him, conscious that our all is but a low return for the infinite obligations under which he has laid us. He hath contrived and determined, that the poor in some form or another we should have with us always, that we may do them good, as a token of our gratitude to him. Let us faithfully aim to supply their need, and he who hath most, will have no superfluities to throw away upon the lusts or vanities of life; and he who hath least, will have no unsupplied lack: but the poor will rejoice in the relief of their necessities; and the rich, in the happiest and most delightful use of their abundance.

SECT. XIV.

The apostle expresses his joy for the readiness of Titus to assist in finishing the collection; and speaks of the honourable character of other Christian brethren, whom he had joined with him in the same commission. 2. Cor. VIII. 16, to the end.

SECT.
xiv.

2 CORINTHIANS VIII. 16.
BUT while I speak of this collection, which I am desirous of promoting, [I] would [return] my humble thanks to God, who gave that same diligent care for you in the heart of Titus, and formed him to these generous and Christian sentiments. For indeed he not only cheerfully accepted, and complied with the exhortation I gave him; but being more forward than I thought to have found him, he went to you freely of his own accord, though he must see that some pressing and peculiar difficulties would attend the undertaking.

2 Cor. VIII. 16.

BUT thanks be to God, which put the same earnest care into the heart of Titus for you.

17 For indeed he accepted the exhortation; but being more forward, of his own accord he went unto you.

And

18 And we have sent with him the brother, whose praise is in the gospel, throughout all the churches :

19 (And not that only, but was also chosen of the churches to travel with us with this grace, which is administered by us to the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind :)

20 Avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us ;

21 Providing for honest things, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men.

22 And we have sent

And we have also sent together with him, that excellent Christian brother^a and friend, Luke, whose praise in the gospel [is] in all the churches, on account of the various and eminent services that he has done for the interests of Christianity, wherever his influence has extended, both by his writing and exhortations. And not only is he so^b much esteemed on these accounts, but he was also ordained and appointed by the stretching forth of the hand, in token of the common consent of the churches, whom we consulted on this occasion, particularly in Macedonia, to be our fellow traveller, with this grace which is now administered and undertaken by us, purely for the glory of the same Lord, and for [the declaration of] your ready mind, in which I was desirous to let you know how heartily I concur.

And we now send him to you, and I have determined to join a man of his excellent character with me ; carefully avoiding this, that any one should blame, or throw any reflection upon us, for the part we may take in the management of this abundance of your bounty, which is administered by us ; lest any should be so unjust and cruel as to insinuate, that I have appropriated any part of it to my own use, or to any purpose whatsoever, different from that for which it was originally given : Therein providing things decent, honest and honourable, not only before the Lord, to whom it is our first, and chief care to approve ourselves, but also before men ; that we may guard as much as possible, against any suspicion of our character, which might hinder our usefulness. And we have sent with them, that

* That brother, &c.] Some suppose this anonymous, though excellent person, to have been Mark, or Silas, or Barnabas ; but I rather, with most commentators, suppose it to have been Luke, who certainly attended St. Paul in his journey to Jerusalem. Some object, that the brother here spoken of was sent by St. Paul to Corinth, in company with Titus ; whereas Luke went with St. Paul to Troas, and from thence to Corinth. Acts xx. 4, 5. But Dr. Whitty replies, I think with some considerable weight, that it is possible St. Paul might go from Philippi to Corinth, and from thence to Troas, and so persons sent before to prepare his way, might come and bring word to St. Paul that the collection was ready, and go back with him to receive it. See Whitty on chap. ii. 12. Many ancient Christians thought that expression, whose praise in the gospel is in all the churches, refers to the universal applause with which St. Luke's gospel was every where received ; and I have paraphrased it so as to include that, though I think the apostle's meaning more extensive. See Gurdon at Boyle's Lect. p. 462.

[And not only so.] This 19th verse is to be included in a parenthesis, and the continued sense of verses 18 and 20 will be, we have sent that brother—to avoid blame, &c.

that is, with Luke and Titus our other friend, and well-beloved brother, Apollos, whom we have often proved in many other affairs, to be in a very extraordinary degree diligent; but who will now, I doubt not, approve himself much more diligent, and exert himself to the utmost in carrying on this collection, on account of the great confidence [I have] in you, as to your goodness and liberality: on which consideration he has changed his resolution against making you a visit; which, while he had any apprehension you might make him an occasion of quarrelling and contending, he would by no means be persuaded to do.

- 23 And if [there be any question] concerning Titus, [he is] my partner and my fellow-labourer with respect to you; one, who sincerely shares my care for you, and is always ready to act in concert with me, in any attempt to correct what is amiss among you, and to promote your improvement in real Christianity. Or if the question be [concerning] any other of our brethren, whom I have mentioned above, [they are] the messengers of the churches, whom several christian societies have chosen to send about this business; and they are persons of so valuable a character, [and] do so great a credit to their profession, that I may not improperly call them the glory of Christ in the world. Shew therefore to them, I intreat you, even in the sight of all the churches, to which they are related, and to whom they will undoubtedly make their report concerning you, the demonstration of your love, and the reasonableness of our boasting over you; that it may appear to be as well founded as I assuredly believe that it is.

sent with them our brother, whom we have oftentimes proved diligent in many things, but now much more diligent, upon the great confidence which I have in you.

23 Whether any do inquire of Titus, he is my partner, and fellow-helper concerning you: or our brethren be inquired of, they are the messengers of the churches, and the glory of Christ.

24 Wherefore shew ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love, and of our boasting on your behalf.

IMPROVE-

c [The messengers of the churches.] I can think of nothing more unreasonable, than to translate this word, apostles; as the English word apostles, is now by long use appropriated to what is only part of the signification of the original. As an apostle of Jesus Christ is one sent forth by him, so an apostle of any church must surely signify, one sent forth by that society. And if I believed that there was so early as at this time a minister in every church, superior to a common pastor, which the most able advocates for Diocesan episcopacy seem not generally to think, I could not imagine it consistent with the dignity and importance of their office, that they should be parted with on such an errand, which any common deacon might with sufficient propriety have performed. It is indeed true, that St. Paul was charged with this trust; but then it seems to have been after he had determined on this journey to Jerusalem, and not to have been the occasion of that journey.

IMPROVEMENT.

THE tenderness of ministers, in all points, where the comfort and edification of the church is concerned, is indeed matter of the highest moment; and where it is remarkable in its degree, it affords just cause of thanksgivings to God: for it is he who puts into their hearts that earnest care, who excites and maintains every sentiment of benevolence, when they offer themselves willingly to any generous and charitable service. It is grace that has communicated whatever good is done; and it ought to be ascribed to the glory of the same Lord from whom it comes; and it loses much of its value, if it be not directed to this ultimate, this supreme end.

When the Corinthians desired to deposit their alms in the hands of St. Paul, they certainly acted a very wise part; as no man living could have rendered them more secure, as to the fidelity or the discretion of the distribution. Yet we see, that high as the Apostle's character stood, and though he had so often given, and was daily renewing such striking demonstrations both of his wisdom and integrity; yet he would not undertake the trust alone, but used all proper methods to approve his exactness in the management thereof, even to strangers; providing things honest and laudable, not only in the sight of God, but of all men.

May ministers be often thus employed, as the almoners of persons richer than themselves, (as their readiness to help the poor in their temporal affairs, may greatly promote their usefulness in spirituals;) and may they be found to manage their trust with the like conscious and delicate honour. May they shew a disposition, like that of St. Paul, to assist in establishing and advancing the character of their younger brethren, and introducing them into esteem and confidence. Thus will they indeed most effectually strengthen their own hands, and edify and comfort the churches; will prove the glory of Christ themselves in the present age, and be the means of raising up others, who may eminently deserve that illustrious title, in succeeding generations.

SECT.
xiv.

Ver.

16

17

20

21

23

SECT. XV.

The Apostle goes on, with admirable address, farther to urge their liberal contribution; and in the full expectation of it, affectionately recommends them to the Divine blessing. 2 Cor. IX. 1, throughout.

2 CORINTHIANS IX. 1.

SECT.
XV.2 Cor.
IX. 1.

NOW concerning the ministrations intended to relieve the necessities of the saints, or believing brethren in Judea, it is superfluous that I should write largely to you, in order to persuade you to the thing itself: it is sufficient, that I give you a transient hint concerning the time and manner of doing what is necessary or proper on this occasion. For I have known in former instances, and have now again learnt from Titus, your extraordinary readiness on this head; which I indeed boast concerning you to the Macedonians, that all the region of Achaia, and particularly your church in its capital city, has been prepared a year ago; and your zeal in this respect hath quickened many others to imitate your example, and do more generously than perhaps they might otherwise have done. Nevertheless, I have sent unto you the brethren I mentioned before; lest our boasting of you on this head, that, as I said, ye were prepared before, having made up your sum, should, by any accident which might have prevented your accomplishing the whole of your design, in any degree be made vain, and appear ill-grounded; Lest if any of the Macedonians happen to come with me, and after all, find you unprepared, the money which has been subscribed not being actually collected, we may be ashamed, not to say you also, in this confident boasting we have used concerning you, and which may recoil in a very unhappy manner, if it be not answered. Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren I have mentioned, that they should come to you some time before my arrival, and should first complete your bounty which has been spoken of before^a so largely

2 Cor. IX. 1.

FOR as touching the ministering to the saints, it is superfluous for me to write to you:

2 For I know the forwardness of your mind, for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready a year ago; and your zeal hath provoked very many.

3 Yet have I sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this behalf: that, as I said, ye may be ready:

4 Lest haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we say not, you) should be ashamed in this same confident boasting.

5 Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up beforehand your bounty, whereof ye had notice before,

^a Your bounty which has been spoken of before.] We render προεπιτηρησασιν whereof ye had notice before. But I suppose it refers to St. Paul's having spoken of it to the Macedonian Christians, verse 2.—I think προεπιτηρησασιν here signifies a kind of extortion, by which money is, as it were, wrung from covetousness, by such abstin-

SECT.

XV.

2 Cor.

IX. 5.

before that the same might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness.

6 But this I say, He which soweth sparingly, shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully.

7 Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver.

8 And God is able to make all grace abound towards you; that ye always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work.

9 (As it is written, He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor; his righteousness remaineth for ever.

10 Now he that ministereth seed to the sower

as covetous people themselves use where their own gain is concerned: and thus it is opposed to ελεος, what is readily given, and comes, as it were, with a blessing.

b All grace to abound, &c.] Some, by χάρις, understand such liberal providenly to them; that on the whole, it may be entirely ready and may appear, as what I doubt not but it is, the effect of free and cheerful bounty, and not look like a sort of extortion, wrung from you by mere dint of importunity. And as to this, it is an important maxim, which I could wish that Christians might always keep in mind. That he who soweth sparingly, shall reap also sparingly; and he who soweth bountifully, shall reap also bountifully; God will bestow rewards, proportionable to what is given, and to the temper from which it proceeds. With this hint, I leave it to every one to judge for himself, what he shall give, and how much seed he shall throw into this grateful and fruitful soil.

Whatever it be more or less, let it be given with a good will, and a good grace; every man as he chooseth in his own heart, not as proceeding from grief or necessity, as if he were sorry to part with his money, and were laid under a kind of constraint to do it: for God loveth a cheerful giver; and nothing that is contributed, can possibly be acceptable to him without that truly liberal disposition.

And lest you should fear, that your charity should bring you to wants and straits, I intreat you to consider, that God [is] able to make all grace and bounty of every kind to abound towards you^b, so that all your liberality shall accrue to your advantage, and you shall be supplied with abundant matter for future charity; that having always all sufficiency in all things, ye may go on with new enlargement and vigour of generous resolution, to abound to every good work, without finding your circumstances straitened. As it is written of the truly liberal and charitable man, (Psal. cxii. 9.) He hath dispersed, he hath given to the poor, and in consequence of this, his righteousness endureth for ever; he shall always have something to bestow.

We observe in the course of Divine Providence, that God blesseth the increase of the earth so largely, as to suffice for the plentiful nourishment as should furnish out matter of future liberalities; but the more extensive sense I have given it, prevents that appearance of a tautology in the following clause, which might on that limited interpretation be apprehended.

SECT.
XV.2 Cor.
IX. 10.

- ment of men, with a remainder of seed sufficient to furnish the harvest of future years. And may he, who thus supplieth seed to the sower, and bread for food, supply and multiply your sowing^c and largely increase the productions of your righteousness: may he so prosper you in all your affairs, that you may have future capacity to exercise that liberal disposition which at present
- ¹¹ appears in this contribution. And I heartily wish, and pray, that you may go on in this laudable and exemplary course, being in every thing enriched in all future bounty to be distributed in the simplicity of your hearts, with a single eye to the glory of God and the good of your brethren: which, in the instance wherein it has already prevailed, worketh by our means thanksgivings towards God, both in us who are your almoners to distribute it, and in those indigent
- ¹² Christians who receive it. For the ministration and management of this service^d, which we have undertaken, and in which we do, as it were, officiate for you in the presentation of this acceptable offering, doth not only supply the necessities of the saints, but aboundeth through the thanksgivings of many which it occasions, to the
- ¹³ glory of God: Of many I say, Who by the experience of this ministration, this generous contribution, are glorifying God on account of that subjection to the gospel of Christ which you profess^e; and the simplicity, and liberality of your communication towards them, and towards all others, who are in necessity, and whom you
- ¹⁴ have an opportunity of relieving. And while they thus glorify God on your account, they are constant and fervent in their prayers for you who long after you^f, and wish earnestly to see and sower, both minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your righteousness;))

¹¹ Being enriched in every thing to all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God.

¹² For the administration of this service not only supplieth the wants of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God.

¹³ (While by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God for your professed subjection unto the gospel of Christ, and for your liberal distribution unto them and unto all men;

¹⁴ And by their prayer for you which long for you after the exceeding

^c He who supplieth—bread for food, supply and multiply, &c.] This translation is exactly literal, and gives an easier sense than our English version. There should be a comma, as Beza justly observes, after εις βρωσις, agreeably to the rendering of the Syriac and Arabic. See Beza in loc. and Wolf. who refers to Isa. lv. 10.

^d This service.] This use of the word κλῆρονομία intimates, that it was to be considered, not merely as an act of humanity, but of religion, most pleasing to God, and suitable to the nature of the gospel dispensation. Compare Heb. xiii. 16.

^e That subjection to the gospel of Christ which you profess.] Επι τη υπακοη τη;

ομολογησας υμων εις το ευαγγελιον, expresses not merely a professed subjection to the gospel, but a real subjection to the gospel which was professed; which sense I thought it necessary to preserve by a change in the version.

[And in their prayers, &c.] The construction of the original is something perplexed here; and indeed I hardly know any text in the Greek Testament which is more so. But on the whole, I am ready to prefer the reading of δεξινουτων, instead of δεξινουτες, (which Chrysostom followed;) and suppose both δεξινουτων, and επιπροσθενων to agree with πικραν, and then the sentence might be rendered this ministration produces exceeding grace of God in you.

15 Thanks be unto God for his unspeak-able gift.

and know you, on account of the exceeding grace of God which is in you, and which produces fruits so highly ornamental to Christianity.

SECT.
"v.

2 Cor.
IX. 15.

When I think of these things, I desire sincerely to bless God on your account, for all the grace he hath given you, and for all the usefulness with which he is pleased to honour you. But I would trace up all to what is indeed the fountain of all his other mercies to us, his having bestowed upon us his dear and only begotten Son. Thanks daily and everlasting thanks, [be] ascribed to our Father and our God, for that his unutterable gift, of the excellence, importance, and grace, of which neither men or angels can worthily speak, or conceive.

IMPROVEMENT.

HAPPY shall we be, if we learn this pious and evangelical turn of thought; if by all the other gifts of God we are thus led up to the first and greatest gifts of his love and mercy. From that surely we may encourage our hopes, of whatever else is necessary and desirable; for he that spared not his Son, but delivered him up for us all, how is it possible, that he should not be ready, with him, freely to give us all things that are truly good for us! Ver. 15

Let us observe with pleasure the happy address of the apostle; 2 a felicity, not the result of craft, but of that amiable temper that was so natural to him. He pleads the high opinion he had entertained of his Corinthian friends, the honourable things he had said of them; expressing his persuasion of their readiness to give 5 as matter of bounty, not of constraint. He leads them to the inexhaustible store of the Divine liberality, from which they had received their present all; from which he wishes they may receive more and more; and this, not that these supplies might be ignobly consumed in self-gratification, but employed in acts of the noblest produces an abundance of thanksgiving to God for many, who glorify him for your subjection to the gospel, &c. and in their prayer, that is, while they are praying, for you earnestly desire to see you, &c. But the paraphrase here, as in several other places, hath obliged me to break the sentence; which I the more readily did, as amidst this perplexity of grammar the design of the sentence is perfectly plain.

[g Unutterable gift.] If we understand this with Dr. Whitby, in the following sense, I adore God for this charitable temper in you, and other sincere Christians, by which God is glorified, the gospel adorned, the poor saints are refreshed, and you fitted for an exceeding great reward.—It will be as remarkable a text as most in the bible, to shew, that every good affection in the human heart is to be ascribed to a Divine influence. I have therefore included this in the paraphrase: but am ready to think the apostle's mind, to which the idea of the invaluable gift of Christ was so familiar, rather by a strong and natural transition, glanced on that.

SECT. XV. noblest beneficence. He represents to them the thanksgivings it had already occasioned to God, the refreshment it administered to

Ver. the saints, the honour it did to their character and profession, and 7,8 the esteem and friendship for them which it excited in the minds 9—12 of those, who, though unacquainted with them, were affected 13 towards their happiness, in consequence of this honourable specimen of their character. Who could withstand the force of such oratory? No doubt it was effectual to cultivate the temper it applauded, and to add a rich abundance to the fruits of their righteousness.

7 Let us apply the thoughts suggested for our own instruction, to excite us to abound in acts of liberality, and to present them to God with that cheerfulness which he loves. To him let us continually look, to make all grace abound unto us; and seek a sufficiency in all things relating to the present life, chiefly that we may be ready to every good work; that our liberality may still endure, and that the multiplication of our seed sown may increase the fruits of our righteousness. To God be the praise of all ascribed! 10 He ministers seed to the sower; he supplies bread for food, he calls up the blessings of harvest; he insures the advantages of commerce. May we praise him ourselves; and by the ready communication of the good things which he hath given us, to those that want, not 11 only supply their necessities, but give them cause to abound in thanksgiving to God, as well as in prayer for us, while they see and acknowledge that exceeding grace, which is the spring of every generous motion in the human heart; and to which therefore be the glory of all.

SECT. XVI.

Some reflections having been thrown on the Apostle for the mildness of his conduct, as if it proceeded from fear, he here proceeds to assert his apostolical power and authority; cautioning his opponents, that they should not urge him to give too sensible demonstrations of it upon themselves. 2 Cor X. 1, throughout.

2 CORINTHIANS X. I.

SECT. XVI.

2 Cor. X. 1.

I HAVE just now been expressing my confidence and joy in your church in general, as well as my affection to it; but I am sensible there are some among you to whom I cannot speak in such a manner; and with regard to such I Paul myself, the very man whom they have so often spoken of with contempt and defiance, injured as I am, do yet condescend to intreat you by

2 COR. X. 1.
NOW I Paul myself beseech you, by
the

the meekness and gentleness of Christ, who in presence am base among you, but being absent am bold toward you.

2 But I beseech you, that I may not be bold when I am present, with that confidence wherewith I think to be bold against some which think of us as if we walked according to the flesh.

3 For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh:

4 (For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, our condescending and compassionate Saviour, that meekness and gentleness which I have learned from his example, and desire to exercise towards the most unreasonable of my enemies; even I, who [am] according to your representation, and with respect to my person, when present, humble among you^a, and despised for the meanness of my appearance, but being absent am bold towards you, and use so much freedom and authority in my letters; However I may be re-flected upon, and even insulted on this account; I beseech you, I say, as you love yourselves, and tender your own comfort and happiness, that I may not, when I am next present, be obliged by your continued irregularity to be bold, with that confidence on which truly I think to presume with respect to some, who account of us as persons walking in the flesh; and affect at least to talk, though they have so little excuse for doing it, as if we governed ourselves by low and mercenary views. For we are conscious to ourselves, that though we do indeed walk in the flesh, though we inhabit mortal bodies, and are obliged in some respects to stoop to the care of them, and to do many things for their subsistence, which take up the time we could much more agreeably spend another way; yet God knows, we do not manage that important war in which we are engaged, according to the flesh, by carnal methods, or with worldly and interested views^b. This you may easily perceive, by the manner in which we are armed; for the weapons of our warfare [are] not carnal: as we depend not on military force, so neither on beauty, stature, eloquence, or philosophy, or in a word, on any thing which might recommend us to human regard; but though destitute of these, we are furnished with others much more valuable, by that Divine power, which would never exert itself for the secular advantage of persons, professing

SECT.
XVI.

2 Cor.
X. 1.

^a When present, am humble among you.] Probably they had upbraided, and reflected upon him, in some such language as this; but there was a sense in which he was indeed lowly among them, his presence probably having nothing majestic.

^b Though we walk in the flesh, &c.] Mr. Cradock explains this something differently, "Though we are not free from a mixture of human infirmities, yet I do not exercise my apostolical power in a weak manner, as either fearing or flattering men; but use such spiritual weapons, as Christian fortitude, zeal, freedom in speaking the truth of God, and courage in administering the censures of the church, which through Divine concurrence are very effectual."

SECT.
xvi.2 Cor.
X . 4.

ing, as we do, to despise the world, and seek for something so much above it, if we were not sincere in our profession, and authorised by him to maintain it. Yes, my brethren, God hath armed us for our warfare, by the miraculous powers of his Holy Spirit; and they are mighty through God to the demolishing fortifications; prejudices, and difficulties, that like so many impregnable castles, lay in our way, and yet are battered down, and laid in ruins, by these our

5 spiritual weapons. And thus we go on in our conquest; for we are continually casting down the fallacious and sophistical reasonings by which vain men are endeavouring to expose our doctrine to contempt, and every high thing which exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, all the proud imaginations which men have entertained of themselves with regard to their natural or moral excellencies, in consequence of which they neglect the gospel, and are indeed ready to live without God in the world. And thus we are enabled to bring every thought, every proud haughty notion, which men have entertained, into a humble and willing captivity^c to the obedience of Christ, the great Captain of our salvation.

6 And as God is pleased thus to cause us to triumph in Christ, with regard to the opposition made by the professed enemies of the gospel, so let men regard us, as persons having it in readiness, by miraculous powers and penalties inflicted by them, to avenge all disobedience, to chastise and punish the obstinacy of those who under a christian profession pretend to oppose us; now your obedience is fulfilled, and the sounder part of your church recovered to its due order and subjection.

7 This is indeed the case, and I beseech you to consider it as it is. Do you look at the outward appearance of things? Do you judge of a man by his person, or address, or by any one particular of his life? Surely you ought not to do it. If any man be confident in himself, that he is Christ's, let him again bethink himself of this, which he will see evident reason to acknowledge, through God, to the pulling down of strong holds;)

if

5 Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ;

6 And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience when your obedience is fulfilled.

7 Do ye look at things after the outward appearance? If any man trust to himself, that he is Christ's, let him of himself think this again, that as he is

^c Every thought into captivity.] The soul, seeing its fortifications demolished, submits to the conqueror; and then every thought, every reasoning, takes law from him. Nothing is admitted that contradicts the gospel; Christ being acknowledged as absolute master. The former clause shews how ready men are to fortify themselves against it, and to raise, as it were, one barrier behind another, to obstruct his entrance into the soul. Compare Rom. xv. 18, 19.

is Christ's, even so are we Christ's.

8 For though I should boast somewhat more of our authority, (which the Lord hath given us for edification, and not for your destruction,) I should not be ashamed:

9 That I may not seem as if I would terrify you by letters.

10 For his letters (say they) are weighty and powerful, but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible.

11 Let such an one think this, that such as we are in word by letters when we are absent, such will we be also indeed when we are present.

12 For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that if he candidly and seriously examine, that as he ^{secr. xvi.} [is] Christ's, so we also [are] Christ's; nor can any one produce more convincing proofs of Christ's calling him to the ministry, and approving his discharge of it, than myself. For ^{2 Cor. X. 7.} if I should boast something yet more, abundantly more than I have ever yet done, concerning our apostolical authority, which I am sensible the Lord hath given us for the edification of the church, and not for your destruction, or the injury of any particular person, I should not have any reason to be ashamed, having already used it in a manner agreeable to its design.

And this I say, that I may not seem as if I ⁹ would by any means terrify you with my epistles, threatening more than I can perform; on the contrary, I might pretend to much more than I have done, and to execute, if need should require it, much greater severities in a way of miraculous punishment ^d. And the hint is necessary; for I know there are some among you that would represent matters quite in a different light. [His] epistles, say they, [are] indeed weighty and strong, but [his] bodily presence [is] weak, and [his] speech despicable ^e; for which indeed they have some excuse, as to my person, and the disadvantage attending my utterance. But let such an one, whoever he be, reckon upon ¹¹ this as a certain fact, that such as we are in word by our letters, when absent, such [shall we be] also when present, in action; our deeds will fully correspond to our words, and we shall do something to vindicate these pretences, if their speedy reformation do not prevent.

For we presume not to number, or to compare ¹² ourselves with some who recommend themselves in very high terms: but they thus measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves with themselves ^f, while they proudly overlook the d Miraculous punishment.] It is to be remembered it was before this time that the apostle, had smitten Elymas with blindness; and it is highly probable from this text, and others of the like nature, that some other miracles of this awful kind had been wrought by him, though they are not recorded in scripture.

e Speech despicable.] Chrysostom, Nicophorus, and Lucian, or rather the author of the Philopatris, relate of St. Paul, that his stature was low, his body crooked, and his head bald? which seem to be the infirmities here referred to. Some think he had also an impediment in his speech; but I do not recollect any ancient testimony to that; though it is not improbable. Compare chap. xii. 7, and the note there.

f Measuring themselves by themselves: or estimating seculis seipsum.] Dr. Whitby would render it, measuring themselves by one another; as if they compared themselves with their false apostles, and grew proud

SECT.
xvi.2 Cor.
X. 12.

the greatly superior characters and furniture of others, are not wise, nor do they indeed take the most effectual measures to raise their own character; but on the contrary, in consequence of this, fall into many absurdities of behaviour from which greater impartiality and modesty, and a better knowledge of men and things, would secure them. But we are always careful, that we glory not of a distinguished zeal for the gospel carrying us beyond [our] bounds, but only according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us under the character of Apostle of the Gentiles, a measure to come even unto you; and accordingly we have regularly and gradually advanced towards you, taking intermediate places in our way. For we do not extend ourselves excessively, as not regularly coming to you; like some who run abruptly from one church to another, leaving their work unfinished behind them, when they think they have discovered a place where they can meet with a more pleasant and agreeable reception. For as I observed before, we are, by a regular progress, come even unto you in the gospel of Christ, having faithfully preached in the other places that lay in our way: Not like those, whom I have had so much reason to complain of, boasting unmeasurably, or in things beyond my proper measure, not intruding into churches planted by the labours of others, where we have no natural and proper call; but having an agreeable hope, [that] when your faith is increased, as we must trust it will abundantly be, even by the experience of what has lately happened, we shall according to our rule, and the constant maxim we lay down to ourselves, be magnified by you so as to abound yet more, that is, shall by your countenance and assistance, be enabled to keep on our courses beyond your country into Arcadia, on the degree in which they resembled them in acuteness and eloquence, or other things on which those deceitful teachers valued themselves. But it is more natural to think, that the meaning is, "they looked continually on themselves, surveying their own great imaginary furniture, but not considering the vastly superior abilities of many others: and so formed a disproportionate opinion of themselves." And this is every-where one of the greatest sources of pride. Bos has taken great that commend themselves: but they, measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves amongst themselves, are not wise.

13 But we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you.

14 For we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure, as though we reached not unto you; for we are come as far as to you also, in preaching the gospel of Christ.

15 Not boasting of things without our measure, that is, of other men's labours: but having hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly.

pains to prove, that to measure oneself by oneself, is a phrase which expresses modesty, and making a right estimate of ourselves and others; and taking αυτομετρον not for a verb, but for the dative of a participle, would render it, we measure ourselves by ourselves, and compare ourselves with ourselves, not with the wise, that is, ironically, not with such wise men as these. But though this sense be ingeniously defended by the great critic, the other seems most natural.

16 To preach the gospel in the regions beyond you, and not to boast in another man's line, of things made ready to our hand.

17 But he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

18 For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth.

Arcadia, and Lacedæmon, or whithersoever else Providence may lead us. For this is greatly in our hearts, if God shall smile upon our purposes, to preach the gospel in the regions beyond you, [and] not to boast in another man's province^h; or rule in things made ready to our hand; as some who are very solicitous about their own ease affect to do, and then pride themselves in sowing the ground which others have cleared. But after all, he that boasteth, whether it be of planting or watering churches, let him boast not in himself, but in the power and assistance of the Lord alone, let every minister remember it is to Christ that he owes all his ability for his work, and all his success in it. For not he that commendeth himself with the greatest confidence, and in the most florid manner, is truly and justly approved; but he whom the Lord commendeth by the gifts of his Spirit, and by a blessing on his ministry. Let those therefore, who are so ready to applaud themselves and each other, think of this, and learn to be more solicitous than they are, about approving their fidelity to their great Master, whether they be more or less regarded by their fellow servants.

SPOT.

XVI.

2 Cor.

X. 16.

IMPROVEMENT.

MAY the meekness and gentleness of Christ ever be remembered Ver- by all his servants, and especially by his ministers, to whom 1 both under their public and private characters it will be of so great importance to imitate it. Their calling is indeed high and holy; let their behaviour in it be so much the more humble. And let it be their great care, that while they walk in the flesh, 3 they do not war after it. Still, though disarmed of that miraculous power with which the apostles were endowed, are the weapons of their warfare mighty. They have the scripture-magazine ever 4 at

[In the regions beyond you.] It would certainly have been a great pleasure to the apostle to have gone on to Arcadia, and Lacedæmon, and to have proselyted those to the gospel who had been so long celebrated, in the latter of these places, for their valour and magnanimity; and in the former, for their wit and poetry in these agreeable and rural retreats. But we do not read any thing in the New Testament, of planting Christian churches in these parts of the Peloponnesus.

^h Another man's province, &c.] The apostle did indeed go to places already converted, to confirm and establish his brethren in the faith; but this was chiefly where he had himself planted churches, though he might take some others in his way; which it would have been affectation and disrespect, rather than modesty to have avoided. But he did not boast in churches thus visited, as if he were the founder of them; as his opposers probably did, pouring contempt on St. Paul's labours; as if they were hardly to be called Christian churches, which he had left, as they pretended, in so unformed and unfinished a state.

SECT. XVI. at hand, from whence they may be furnished with them; and may Ver. humbly hope, that the Spirit of God will render them effectual to the pulling down strong holds, and abasing every proud imagination which exalteth itself against the obedience of God. May every thought of their own hearts be in the first place thus subdued, and brought into a sweet and willing captivity! So shall these their captives, thus conquered, prove as so many faithful soldiers to fight for him, against whom they once were foolishly rebelling And may they succeed in this holy war, till the empire of our Divine Master become universal, and the happiness of mankind universal with it!

To promote this, let us pray, that ministers may always remember, that whatever authority they have given them, is for 7-11 edification, and not for destruction; and may learn from that moderation with which the apostle used his miraculous powers, in how gentle and candid a manner they should behave themselves in their far inferior stations; never making their pre-eminence in the church the instrument of their own resentment, or of any other sinful or selfish passion: but ever solicitous to subserve the interest of our great Lord in all, and desirous to keep up their own character and influence, chiefly for his sake.

12-16 May they in no instance boast beyond their proper measure; and while they are ready, like St. Paul, to meet all the most laborious scenes of service, let them glory not in themselves, but in the Lord. This is a lesson we are all to learn. And whatever our stations in 17, 18 life are, let us resolutely and constantly guard against that self-flattery by which we may be ready to commend ourselves, in instances in which we may be least approved by him, whose favour alone is worthy of our ambition, and by whose judgment, in the day of final account, we must stand or fall.

SECT. XVII.

The Apostle farther vindicates himself, from the perverse insinuations of them that opposed him at Corinth; particularly on the head of his having declined to receive a contribution from this church, for his maintenance. 2 Cor. XI. 1-15.

SECT.
XVII.2 Cor.
XI. 1.

2 CORINTHIANS XI. 1.

I WOULD advise every man, as I have hinted, to be sparing in his own commendation, and to study above all to approve himself to Christ; and yet in present circumstances, I wish you would bear with a little of [my] folly, that you would permit a little of that boasting which I know

2 Cor. XI. 1.
 WOULD to God you could bear with me a little in my folly, and

and in laed bear with me.

2 For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.

3 But I fear lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.

a That I may present you, &c.] This is much illustrated by recollecting, that there was an officer among the Greeks, whose business it was to educate and form young women, especially those of rank and figure, designed for marriage, and then to present them to those who were to be their husbands, and if this officer permitted them, through negligence, to be corrupted, between the espousals and consummation of the marriage, great blame would naturally fall upon him.

b For I have espoused you.] This clause, ἡμεσποσάμενοι ὑμᾶς ἑαυτοῖς, may be considered as a parenthesis; and therefore in the paraphrase, I have transposed it, that the construction may appear; ἵνα ὑμᾶς παρῆσθημι, I am jealous, &c.—that I may present you, &c.

c Lest us the serpent deceived Eve, &c.] From the instance to which this is applied, viz. that of the false apostles, whose subtilty did not consist so much in crafty arguments, as in false appearances, by which they put on the outward forms of the apostles of Christ; Mr. Rymer infers (especially comparing verse 14.) that the subtilty of Satan, when he deceived Eve, consisted in putting on the appearance of an angel of light, or pretending to be one of the seraphims that attended on the Shechinah (Rymer on Lev. p. 79.) But I think that if it had been ever so expressly said by Moses, that the deception lay, as it very probably might, in pretending to have received the Faculty of reason and speech, though a brute, by eating the fruit he proposed to her, it might be said in the general, that the false apostles deceived their followers as Satan deceived Eve, that is, by false pretences and insinuations.

And I am the more solicitous about this, as I know what insinuating enemies are endeavouring to corrupt you: for I fear lest by any means, as in the first seduction and ruin of mankind, the serpent deceived Eve^c, our common mother, by his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from that simplicity which should always be in us towards Christ^d, and which the adulterous mixtures which some are endeavouring to introduce among you, would greatly injure.

For

d Simplicity towards Christ: ἀπλότης πρὸς Χριστὸν] This implies an entire undivided devotedness to Christ, as the great Husband Christians should desire to please, and from whom they are to receive law; and is with peculiar propriety opposed to that mixture of Judaism which some were endeavouring to bring in among the Corinthians.

SECT.
xvii.2 Cor.
XI. 4.

For if he that cometh among you with such extraordinary pretences, preach another Jesus, as a Saviour, whom we have not preached; if he can point out another Christ who shall equally deserve your attention and regard; or [c] ye receive by his preaching another spirit, which ye have not yet received, which can bestow upon you gifts superior to those which we have imparted; or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, the tidings of which shall be equally happy, evident, and important, ye might well bear with [him,] and there would be some excuse for your conduct; but how far this is from being, or so much as seeming to be the case, I need not say at large. Nor will you, I am sure, maintain any such thing; for I reckon upon most certain knowledge, that I was so far from being inferior in my discourses, or miracles, to these your favourite teachers, that I did not in any respect fall short of the greatest of the apostles; but gave you as evident and convincing proofs of a Divine mission as any church has ever received from any one of them. For if [I am] unskilful in speech, using plain and unpolished language like that of a man of the most ordinary education^c; nevertheless [I am] not so in knowledge of the gospel of Christ, and the Divine dispensations which were introductory to it. But in every respect we have been manifest to you in all things, every one of you has had a proof of this, as you received the gospel from me, and therefore ought not to question my abilities, not to prefer another in opposition to me.

7 Nothing can be more ungenerous and unreasonable, than to insinuate, that I have renounced my claim to being an apostle, by declining that maintenance which my brethren generally think it reasonable to take from the people among whom

4 For if he that cometh, preacheth another Jesus whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit which ye have not received, or another gospel which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him.

5 For I suppose I was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles.

6 But though I be rude in speech, yet not in knowledge; but we have been thoroughly made manifest among you in all things.

7 Have I committed

an

c Unskilful in speech.] Id. ubi; properly signifies a private man, one that can speak no better than the generality of his neighbours, being unformed by the rules of eloquence. And this is consistent with that great natural pathos which we find in the apostle's writings; so that there is no need of recurring, as Dr. Whitby here does, to the supposed impediment in his speech, which allowing it ever so certain a fact, could not properly be expressed by this phrase. The good Archbishop of Cambray hath a very pertinent observation on this expression, in his excellent Dialogues of Eloquence, (p. 156,) viz. that this might well be the case, though St. Paul shared so largely in the gift of tongues; as when he was at Tarsus, he probably learnt a corrupt kind of Greek, spoken by the inhabitants of this place; for we have reason to believe, that as for any of the languages which the apostles had learnt in a natural way, the Spirit left them to speak as before.

^fChargeable

an offence in abasing myself, that ye might be exalted, because I have preached to you the gospel of God freely?

8 I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service.

9 And when I was present with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me, the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied; and in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself.

10 As the truth of Christ is in me, no man shall stop me of this boasting in the regions of Achaia.

11 Wherefore? because I love you not? God knoweth.

12 But what I do, that I will do, that I may cut off occasion from them which desire occasion; that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we.

whom they labour, and which while employed for them they may indeed reasonably expect.

Have I then committed an offence, in humbling myself to the daily cares and toils of a tent-maker, that you may more effectually be exalted to the dignity of those who know and believe in Christ? Is this, after all, the crime, that I have preached the gospel of God to you at free cost?

I may almost, in this sense, be said to have⁸ robbed other churches; so freely have I received from them, at least taking wages; as it were [of them], for waiting upon you; for indeed I received a kind of stipend from them, while I abode at Corinth, (Phil. iv. 15.) And when⁹ I was in want, while present with you, I was chargeable to no one man,^f of your society, when incapable of maintaining myself as before: for what was deficient to me, in this respect, the Christian brethren who came from Macedonia, supplied; (Phil. iv. 10.) and in all things I have kept, and so long as God shall enable me, I will keep myself from being burthensome to you. And this in some measure I value myself upon; so that as the truth of Christ is in me, this boast shall not be violated, nor this rule broke in upon with respect to me, at Corinth, or in all the regions of Achaia.

And why is it that I insist upon this? Is it because I love you not, and therefore am unwilling to be under any obligation to you? God knows the contrary, that you have a large share in my tenderest affections and cares; yea, that it was my desire of serving you more effectually, that subjected me to these mortifications and self-denials; for such they undoubtedly were. But¹² what I do in this respect, I will continue to do, that I may cut off occasion from them who greatly desire an occasion to reflect upon me, that in [the thing of] which they are so ready to boast, they may be found even as we. I would teach them by my example, instead of boasting, that they have such an influence over you, as procures

^f Chargeable to no man; οὐ κτηνησθησθε ἐξ ἑαυτῶν.] Beza would render it, I was not idle at any man's expence. The word κτηνησθησθε implies a benumbed inactive state, a kind of torpor, to which no man seems to be less obnoxious than St. Paul.

^g They might be found, &c.] The Jews had a maxim among them that it was better for their wise men to skin dead beasts for a living, than to ask a maintenance from the generosity of those whom they taught. But it plainly appears, that whatever the false apostles might boast upon this head, there was no foundation for it. Compare verse 20, and 1 Cor. ix. 12.

SECT.
xvii.

1 Cor. XI. 12. cures them a plentiful, and perhaps splendid maintenance, that they rather emulate my disinterested conduct, and subsist on their own labours. But I know they have no inward

13 principle to bear them through such hardships: For such whatever they pretend, [are] false apostles, destitute of that Divine mission which animates our spirits to do, or to bear, whatever we meet in the course of our duty: and indeed they are deceitful workers, whatever pains they may seem to take in their employment; transforming themselves artfully into the appearance of apostles of Christ, by counterfeit forms, which they may put on for a while, but which

14 they can with no consistency long support. And [it is] no wonder they assume them for a time; for Satan himself, in subordination to whom they act, can put on such deceitful appearances, and wear upon occasion such a mask of sanctity and religion in his attempts, that he is, as it were, transformed into an angel of light, and one would imagine his suggestions to be of a celestial and Divine original.

15 Therefore [it is] no great thing, if his ministers also, under his influence, be transformed as ministers of righteousness; whose end nevertheless shall be not according to their specious pretences, but according to their works; for they will find that God, upon whose judgment their final state depends, is not to be imposed upon by any of their artifices.

13 For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ.

14 And no marvel: for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light.

15 Therefore it is no great thing, if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. 2. How adorable is the condescension of the blessed Jesus, who amidst all the exalted glories of his heavenly kingdom, is so graciously uniting souls to himself; espousing them in bonds of everlasting love, that they may be for ever near him, and receive the most endearing communications of his favour. Much should we all be concerned, that we may have the honour and blessings of such an alliance: that being by profession solemnly espoused to him, we may in the day of the marriage of the Lamb, be presented chaste and spotless. How vigilant should they be who are intrusted by him to treat with souls about these espousals! How solicitous, that they may succeed, and may so present them to Christ!

3 Still is that crafty serpent, whose malignant breath so soon tainted our common mother, and all our happiness, by his subtilty labouring labouring to corrupt our minds from the simplicity of true Christianity. Let us be incessantly watchful against the artful deceiver ; remembering that his works and designs of darkness may sometimes be veiled as under the robes of an angel of light, and his Ver. ministers transformed as ministers of righteousness. Be therefore sober and vigilant, since your adversary the devil adds the wiliness of the old serpent, to the rage and cruelty of the roaring lion, and by both subserves his purposes of betraying, or devouring the souls of men. 11, 15

Let us therefore with a godly jealousy be jealous over each other 2 and especially over ourselves ; and after the example of the apostle, be peculiarly so, when we are compelled to say any thing to our own advantage. Let us endeavour to arm ourselves against every surrounding danger, by a growing regard to the writings of this excellent man, who, though rude in speech, was 6 so far from being in any degree deficient in Christian knowledge, that he was not behind the very chief of the apostles. 5 There are those that preach another gospel ; but can they point out another Jesus, another all-sufficient Saviour ? can they direct us to another Spirit ? Let us hold fast the doctrine we learn from 4 his faithful pen ; let us follow the exhortations we receive from his experienced heart ; and be ever ready to imitate him in that resolute self-denial which he exercised, and that glorious superiority to every other interest which he always shewed, where 9 the interests of Christ and of souls were concerned. So shall we cut off occasion from them that seek occasion against us, and secure a 12 far greater happiness, in the conscious reflections of our own minds, as well as the expectation of a future reward, than the greatest abundance of this world could have given us, or any present advantage to which we could have sacrificed the views of conscience and honour.

SECT. XVIII.

Farther to assert his right as an apostle, St. Paul commemorates his labours and sufferings in the cause of Christ ; yet in such a manner, as plainly to shew how disagreeable it was to him, so much as to seem to applaud himself, on the most necessary occasion. 2 Cor. XI. 16, to the end.

2 Cor. XI. 16.

I SAY again, Let no man think me a fool : if otherwise, yet as a fool receive me, that

2 CORINTHIANS XI. 16.

I HAVE said some things, which may seem more to the advantage of my character, than a man would wish any thing, which comes from his own lips, or pen, should appear. But again I must say, Let no man think me to be so foolish in this boasting, as to take any pleasure in

SECT. XVIII.

2 Cor. XI. 16.

SECT.
xviii.2 Cor.
XI. 16.

in commending myself. Let the provocation I have received be considered; let the necessity of the circumstance, and the importance of my character, be duly weighed; and you will surely excuse it. But if it must be otherwise censured, I will run the risk, and beseech you, if you think me foolish in it, as foolish however, to receive and bear with me, as well as others, that I may in my turn at least, boast some small matter.

17 What I speak on this head, I speak not after the Lord, not by any immediate direction or inspiration from Christ; nor is it so evidently in his Spirit as I could wish, or so apparently conformable to that example of modesty and humility which he hath set us; but I speak it, as it were, foolishly in this confidence of boasting^a; on which

18 sensible regret. Yet lest my silence should be attended with still worse consequences, I think myself obliged, though with strong reluctance, to say, seeing many boast according to the flesh, in circumcision and Jewish extraction, I also will boast as well as they; and truly were I disposed to do it on these topics, you well know that no man could say more than I.

19 And by the way, you may well bear with foolish people, since you [yourselves] are so wondrous wise, and in that abundant wisdom can cherish that arrogant temper in others, and second it

20 with your high applause. Nay, indeed you go farther than that, and not only endure to hear your admired teachers make very indecent encomiums upon themselves, but tamely submit to them, while they invade your property, and tyrannize over you in a most arbitrary and scandalous manner. For, by what I can learn of the temper of some among you in that respect, and of your fond infatuation in their favour, it seems that you bear it patiently, if a man enslave you, and even trample upon your liberty, if he devour [you] by his exorbitant demands, if he take and seize [on your possessions] if he exalt himself as if he were your supreme and absolute sovereign, that I may boast myself a little.

17 That which I speak, I speak it not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly in this confidence of boasting.

18 Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also.

19 For ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise;

20 For ye suffer if a man bring you into bondage, if a man devour you, if a man take of you, if a man exalt himself, if a man smite you on the face.

^a Foolishly in this confidence of boasting. It seems indeed not very just and natural to interpret this, as spoken by immediate suggestion; yet, it being in present circumstances very proper the apostle should speak thus, the Holy Spirit might by a general, though unperceived, influence, lead him in this tract of thought and expression; and though such apologies might seem beneath the dignity of an apostle's character, yet that very condescension is an excellent and most useful example of humility to all Christians, and especially to ministers.

sovereign, if his mad passion were to transport him even to blows, and he were to smite you on the face^b, your fondness for him would prevent your calling him to a just account, and you would find some way of excusing, or accommodating the affair, rather than come to a breach with him.

Do I speak this by way of dishonour, from an envious desire to derogate from my superiors, and so bring them down to my own level; as if we ourselves were weak in comparison with them, and therefore have not the courage to attempt such freedoms as they take? There can surely be no reason to suspect that; for be they ever so puffed up with their external privileges, I would have them to know, that in whatever any one else may be confident in these respects, though I speak it indeed in folly, I also am confident, and on their own terms could match, or even exceed them. Are they, for instance,²¹ Hebrews by language, capable of consulting the scriptures in the original, with all the advantage which a familiar acquaintance with that tongue from their childhood can give them? so [am] I: Are they Israelites by birth, not descended from Esau, or any other branch of the family, but that on which the blessing was entailed? so [am] I likewise. Are they of the seed of Abraham, both by the fathers and mothers side, not proselytes, or of mingled descent? so [am] I; and can trace up as fair and clear a genealogy, through the tribe of Benjamin, to the father of the faithful. Or if they would boast in a manner more²² peculiarly referring to the gospel; are they ministers of Christ? I may seem to speak foolishly in this boasting manner, which is so unnatural to me; I cannot forbear repeated apologies for it; but I will venture to say here, that I [am] more so than they: so far more than an ordinary minister, that I am a chosen apostle, dignified and distinguished from many of my brethren by more eminent services: more abundant in labours now for a long series of years: exceeding them in the frequent stripes I have received²³

21 I speak as concerning reproach, as though we had been weak: howbeit, where-insoever any is bold, (I speak foolishly) I am bold also.

22 Are they Hebrews? so am I: are they Israelites? so am I: are they the seed of Abraham? so am I.

23 Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more; in labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft.

^b Smite you on the face.] As one can hardly imagine, that the false apostles would run all these lengths, (though Dr. Whitby well observes, that the high conceit which the Jews had of their superiority over the Gentiles, might lead them to great insolence of behaviour) I chose to paraphrase the words in such a latitude as might waive the severity of the most literal interpretation.

e Thrice

SECT.
xviii.2 Cor.
XI. 23.

ceived on account of my singular zeal; more abundant in imprisonments, cheerfully resigning my liberty for the sake of Christ and his gospel: and often in deaths, which are continually surrounding me in the most horrible forms; but which, by Divine grace, I have learnt to meet and to vanquish in all their terrors, animated by love to my Divine Leader.

- 24 I certainly have endured more blows than any of them in his cause; for of the Jews I have five times received, in their synagogues and before their courts of judgment, forty [stripes] save one, according to the precautions which they use, that they may not transgress the precept of their law, which limits them to that number. (Deut. xxv. 3.) And thrice was I beaten with rods by the Roman lictors or beadles, at the command of their superior magistrates. I have reason to say, I have been in greater danger of death than any of them: for once, at Lystra, I was stoned, and left for dead in the place; nor had I been recovered but by miracle. (Acts xiv. 19.) Thrice I have been shipwrecked^c, and escaped with the utmost difficulty from the rage of the waves; at one of which times I was reduced to such extremity, that I passed a day and a night in the deep^d, floating on the remainder of the wreck, and just on the point of being washed away, and sunk,
- 26 every moment. On the whole, I have been in journies often, where I have not only been exposed to fatigues, but to great hazard from wild beasts, as well as from unreasonable and wicked men. I have also been in frequent dangers from the depths and rapidity of several rivers^e, which I have been obliged to pass; I have also been in danger from the assaults of robbers, who have lain in wait for me with a design

24 Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes, save one.

25 Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep.

26 In journeyings softened, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own coun-

^c Thrice have I been shipwrecked.] The wreck at Malta happened long after; and therefore must at least have been the fourth; and had the inhabitants known it to be so, they would have been confirmed in their suspicions of his being a very bad man; but this remarkably shews us that a series of what the world calls misfortunes from the hand of Providence, may befall the best and worthiest of mankind.

^d Passed a day and a night in the deep.] Νύκτα καὶ ἡμέραν, (rendered a day and a night) signifies a natural day, including the hours of light and darkness. Βόθρ., the word here used, and rendered, in the deep, was indeed the name of a deep dungeon, at Cyzicum, in the Propontis; and Dr. Hammond conjectures, that St. Paul was cast into it, as he passed from Troas to that city: but I think the other interpretation more easy and natural.

^e In dangers from rivers.] To render ποταμῶν, waters, as we do, is confounding these hazards with those he endured in the sea, in a very improper manner.

countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren.

design to plunder and murder me. I have often been in dangers from my own countrymen, the Jews ; who forgetting the mutualities of relation by blood, birth, and religion, have attempted my life with insatiable rage, cruelly hunting me from place to place, as if I had been some beast of prey ; in dangers from the heathen ; who have often been stirred up by the Jews, as well as offended by the testimony I have been obliged to bear against their idolatries. Every place through which I have passed has indeed been a scene of perils, and often of great extremities ; so that I have been in dangers in the city of Jerusalem, and other cities : in dangers in the wilderness, while laboriously traversing many dreary and inhospitable deserts in pursuit of my apostolical work : in dangers of the sea ; where I have encountered many a storm, besides those in which, as I observed before, I suffered shipwreck ; and where I have sometimes been beset by pirates : And though it be shameful to say it, yet it is most certainly true, that I have frequently been in very formidable dangers among false brethren^f, who, amidst all the most specious pretensions of love and affection, have been secretly watching for opportunities to expose, and, if possible, to destroy me ; or at least to ruin my usefulness, still dearer to me than my life.

I have been for a long series of years engaged ²⁷ in strenuous labour, and fatiguing toil^g, almost incessant : so that the end of one has presently been the beginning of another : I have been, in watchings, often obliged to add the fatigues of the night to those of the day, either in extraordinary devotion, which hath kept mine eyes waking, while others have slept ; or in preaching to those who have pressed in upon me to hear the gospel as privately as possible ; or by corresponding with Christian churches who needed my advice, by which I have lost the rest of many nights in my long journies ; or in other circumstances into which Providence hath called me. I have often known what hunger and thirst mean, have been in fastings often, not having ²⁷ In weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness.

^f False brethren.] Perhaps he mentions these last as apprehending peculiar danger from their efforts among the Corinthians.
^g In labour and toil.] The latter of the words here used $\mu\upsilon\chi\epsilon\sigma$, is more expressive than the former $\kappa\alpha\tau\alpha$. It signifies not only strenuous labour, but such as proceeds to a degree of fatigue.

SECT.
xviii.2 Cor.
XI. 27.

having had even the necessaries of life at hand. And at the same time, I have frequently been exposed to the severity of rigorous seasons, in cold and even nakedness too^h; not having convenient clothing to cover me, or comfortable habitation to repose myself in. All this, beside foreign affairs, that daily combination, that does, as it were, make up an assembly, the care of all the churches abroad, whose concerns are *rushing in upon me every day*ⁱ, with such impetuosity, that they sometimes are ready not only to confound, but to overbear me. Nor am I concerned only for whole communities, but for particular persons too, as soon as their circumstances are known to me; so that I may say, Who is weak, and I am not weak too? Like a tenderly-compassionate friend, I feel my own spirits ready to fail, when I see my brethren sink around me. Who is offended, so as to be led into sin by the rashness and uncharitableness of others, and I am not, as it were, fired with grief and indignation, to see such a dishonour brought upon religion, and with zeal, if possible to redress the grievance^k?

30 If it is necessary to boast, and I am heartily sorry that it is, I will however, boast of those things which relate to my infirmities; as I know this tenderness of temper, that so often weeps and trembles, and glows with such strong emotions, on what some may think trivial occasions, will be esteemed by them; yet of these only, and of those sufferings which show the weakness of human nature, and my need of support from Christ; of these alone have I hitherto presumed to speak: nor do I feign, or aggravate any thing.

Far

^h Cold and nakedness.] What an idea does this give us of the apostle's fidelity and zeal! It is to die warm in a good and noble cause. How hard was it for a man of a genteel and liberal education, as St. Paul was, to bear such rigours, and to wander about like a vagabond, hungry and almost naked, yet coming into the presence of persons in high life, and speaking in large and various assemblies on matters of the utmost importance.

ⁱ Rushing in upon me every day.] The original phrase is very emphatical, ἡ ἐπιερχομένη μου ἡ κλιθεῖσα ἐπί μου; properly signifies a tumult or crowd of people rising up against a man at once, and ready 28 Besides those things that are without that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches.

29 Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not?

30 If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities.

to bear him down. This, the version I have given hints at better than our own; which neither expresses number nor violence. But there is still an imperfection which I endeavoured as well as I could, to supply by the paraphrase. Mr. Saurin would render it, what besieges me daily. Saurin's Serm. vol. X. p. 163. Edit. 1749.

^k Who is offended, and I am not fired?] So πυρμαί properly signifies. It may perhaps, in this connection, allude to the sudden hurry of spirits into which a man is put by the dangerous fall of a person he tenderly loves, especially when occasioned by the carelessness and folly of another.

31 The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I be not.

Far from that, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, even he, the Eternal Majesty of heaven and earth, who is ever blessed, knoweth that I do not lie, or in any degree transgress the strictest boundaries of truth.

ser. VIII.
2 Cor. XI. 31.

32 In Damascus the governor under Aretas the King, kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me :

And I cannot forbear adding one circumstance more, to illustrate the early dangers to which I was exposed, as soon as I engaged in the Christian cause, and the remarkable interposition of Providence in my favour, which I would never forget. I mean, that when I was in *Dasmacus*¹, about three years after my conversion, the governor, or ethnarch, under King Aretas, set a guard at every gate of the city of the Damascenes, being determined, if possible, to seize me; in compliance with the solicitations of the Jews, who endeavoured by any means to make me odious to the government, and to crush my usefulness in the bud, if not immediately to destroy my life itself. And I was let down, through a window, in a basket, from a house which stood by the wall of the city, and happily escaped from his hands; and by the continued care of the same Providence remain unto this day, and see the many contrivances of my enemies for my destruction, turned into disappointment and shame.

33 And through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.

IMPROVEMENT.

SURELY we have reason to be thankful, in some degree, for that providential permission to which it was owing that this blessed apostle was brought under the unwilling necessity of boasting; to which his modesty submits with such genuine and becoming regret: we had otherwise lost some very valuable fragments of sacred history, which it becomes us to gather up with respect. We are indeed elsewhere informed, concerning several of his labours, stripes, and imprisonments; but how frequent, and above measure they were, we had never known, if he had not been urged thus to plead them with the Corinthians, and so to represent them to us. What a life was St. Paul's amidst so many injuries and hardships! Land and sea, every country, every city, almost every society of men, seemed to be in a combination against him, to make his

Ver. 16—18

23

1 In Damascus, &c.] This probably happened, not when he was first converted, but when he had preached about three years in Arabia. Compare Acts ix. 23,—26. with Gal. i. 16,—18.

SECT.
xviii.

his life wretched; and amidst all the vigours and severities of toils and watchings, hunger and thirst, cold and nakedness, he felt, and Ver. particularly complained of the treatment he received from false
 26 brethren. Yet thus surrounded, and as we should from the detail be ready to say, thus overwhelmed, with so many and so various miseries, he was yet happy in the favour of God, in the presence of Christ: unspeakably happy in the cheerful views of approaching glory, and in all that abundant usefulness with which a gracious God was pleased to honour him. Whilst his benevolent heart
 28 was pained, it was also comforted; and with the care of all the churches pressing upon him, and with all that he felt from particular persons, still was his voice in tune for praise; and he hardly ever begins an epistle, without such a burst of it in some of his first lines, as looks like one of the songs of heaven. O glorious effect of real christianity, which every inferior minister, yea, and every private Christian, to this day feels, in proportion to the degree in which his character resembles that of this holy champion of our Divine faith!

But O! how unlike his hath been the character of many who have borne themselves highest on their pretended claims to the most extraordinary powers, by a succession from him and his 21 brethren! What tyrannical insults! What exorbitant oppressions! What base methods to enslave the conscience, the properties, and the persons of men, whom they should have respected and loved as their brethren, whom they should have cherished even as their children! So that one would imagine they had taken the picture which St. Paul here draws of the false apostles, as a model of their own conduct; while they have perhaps denied the title of ministers
 23 of Christ to those who have much resembled the dispositions and circumstances of this his most faithful ambassador. O that this might only be the infamy of the Popish clergy, with whose cruel and usurping practices such censures may seem best to suit! Or rather, would to God it were no longer even theirs. May the 31 God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is blessed for evermore, pour out a better spirit upon all who profess themselves the servants of his Son! That they, whose business it is to call others to Christ, may themselves first come, and learn of him, who is meek and lowly of heart; whose yoke is so easy, and his burden so light, that it is astonishing, that any who have themselves felt it, should ever think of binding on others, burdens heavy and hard to be borne.

SECT. XIX.

The Apostle goes on, with great plainness and freedom, yet at the same time with great modesty, to give an account of some extraordinary revelations which he had received from God, and of those experiences which taught him to glory even in his infirmities. 2 Cor. XII. 1—10.

2 Cor. XII. 1.

IT is not expedient for me doubtless, to glory: I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord.

2 CORINTHIANS XII. 1.

SECT.
XIX.

I HAVE spoken with some freedom in the preceding discourse of my labours and sufferings in the Christian cause; and whatever they have been, I well know, that it is not expedient for me to boast; nor would I by any means indulge myself in such a practice; nevertheless, with the precautions I have already advanced, and with those good purposes continually in view, that have led me so far out of my common manner of speaking, I will now come to say something of those visions and revelations of the Lord with which his unworthy servant has, by his astonishing grace and condescension, been favoured. I hardly indeed know how to mention a name so undeserving as my own, in this connection; but I will venture in the general to say, that I well knew a certain man in Christ^b; one who esteems it his highest honour to belong to such a Master; who though he hath hitherto thought proper to conceal it, was remarkably indulged in this respect, above fourteen years ago. Whether he was then in the body, during that extraordinary ecstasy, I know not; or for a time taken out of the body, so that only the principle of animal

2 Cor.
XII. 1.

† I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell:

a Nevertheless.] The apostle's speaking of his visions and revelations, which indeed did him the highest honour, could not be a proof that he was determined not to boast. It is evident, therefore, that year cannot have its usual signification, and be rendered for. Our translators take it for a mere expletive, and therefore omit it. I have ventured to render it nevertheless, as it is certain it has often various significations, and must have this signification here, if it express any thing. The force of but in this connection would be the same with nevertheless.

b A certain man in Christ.] He must undoubtedly mean himself, or the whole article had been quite foreign to his purpose. It appears from hence, that the Apostle had concealed this extraordinary event fourteen years; and if this epistle was written about the year 58, as we suppose it was, this vision must have fallen out in the year 44, which was so long after his conversion, as to prove it quite different from the trance mentioned Acts ix. 9, with which some have confounded it. Dr. Benson thinks this glorious representation was made to him while he was praying in the temple, in that journey, Acts xi. 50. chap. xxii. 17, and intended to encourage him against the difficulties he was to encounter in preaching the gospel to the Gentiles. Bens. Prop. vol. II. p. 7. See vol. III. sect. 50, note a.

c Whether

SECT.
XIX.2 Cor.
XII. 2.

animal life remained in it, I know not ^c. God only knows how that was: nor is it of any importance too curiously to search into such a circumstance. He had at least no consciousness of any thing that passed about him at that time, and all his sensations were as entirely ceased, as if his union with the body had been broken. Such an one, I say, I did most intinately know, who was snatched up even into the third heaven, the seat of the Divine glory, and the place where Christ dwelleth at the Father's right hand, having all the celestial principalities and powers ³ in humble subjection to him. Yea, I say, I even knew such a man, whether in the body, or out of the body, I now say not, because I know not: God knoweth; and let him have the glory of supporting his life in so extraordinary a circumstance, which ever might be the case. And I know, that having been thus entertained with these visions of the third heavens, on which good men are to enter after the resurrection, lest he should be impatient under the delay of his part of the glory there, he was also caught up into paradise ^d, that garden of God which is the seat of happy spirits in the intermediate state, and during their separation from the body: where he had the pleasure of an interview with many of the pious dead, and heard among them unutterable words, expressive of their sublime ideas, which he was there taught to understand. But the language was such as it is not lawful or possible ^e for man to utter; we have no terms of speech fit to express such conceptions, nor would it be consistent with the schemes of Providence, God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven.

⁵ And I knew such a man (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth:)

⁴ How that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words which it is not lawful for a man to utter.

^c Whether in the body, &c.] As St. Paul must know his body was not actually dead, during this trance, but that the animal motion of his heart and lungs continued, it would lead one to imagine, that he really apprehended the principle of animal life to be something distinct from the rational soul, which he calls himself. It appears at least, that he lost all consciousness of any thing about him at that time, and what the presence of an immaterial soul in a body can be, distinct from the capacity of perceiving by it, and acting upon it, I am yet to learn.

^d Also caught up into paradise.] I have followed Bishop Bull's interpretation of these words, in the distinction he makes between the third heavens and paradise. See his Works, vol. 1. serm. 3, p. 89. To which Dr. Whitby agrees, who also supposes this not merely a vision, as I think it was, but a reality; which if St. Paul had thought it, he must surely have concluded that he was not then in the body.

^e Lawful or possible.] I think, with Witsius, that God may comprehend both.—Different divines have conjectured very differently concerning these things; of which I suppose they know nothing. But Mr. Fleming's conjecture, that he was instructed in the doctrine of the first resurrection; and Mr. Whiston's, that he was instructed in the grand secrets contained in the apostolical constitutions revealed to the eleven in the chamber on Sion, and not to be publicly disclosed till many ages after; may serve as specimens of the rest. Whist. Prim. Christianity, vol. III. p. 32.

5 Of such an one will I glory; yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities.

6 For though I desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth: but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me.

7 And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure.

Providence, which require that we should be conducted by faith, rather than by sight, to suffer such circumstances as these to be revealed to the inhabitants of mortal flesh. In such an one, therefore, whoever, he be I will venture to boast, so far as to say, that he received a peculiar honour from our great Lord, and for the time, was made, as it were, another man by it. But in myself, I will not boast, unless it be in my infirmities, in those things which carry the marks of weakness, which yet in a certain connection will appear honourable too. For if I should resolve to boast a little on the occasion I have mentioned, I shall not upon the whole be foolish; though it be generally so, considering the particular circumstances in which I am; for I speak nothing but the strictest truth, how strange soever it may seem. But I forbear to insist largely upon it, lest any one should esteem me above what he sees to be in me, or, having a fair opportunity of learning my true character, hears of me; for instead of arrogating to myself any undeserved regards, I would rather decline them, and should be secretly grieved and ashamed if they were paid to me,

I have indeed had my peculiar privileges; but 7 alas, I have my infirmities, and my temptations too. And lest I should be too much elevated with the abundance of those extraordinary revelations of which I have been speaking, there was given me, that is, it pleased God to appoint to me an affliction, which was so painful, that it was like a pointed thorn in the flesh^f continually piercing and wounding me; and this in such circumstances, that one would think it had been intended on purpose, that the messenger and apostle of Satan, the false teachers whom I have been

[A thorn in the flesh.] How much this thorn in St. Paul's flesh has perplexed and disquieted commentators, they who have conversed much with them, know but too well. Many have understood it of bodily pains; and Mr. Baxter, being himself subject to a nephritic disorder, supposes it might be the stone, or gravel. The conjectures of some of the ancients are much grosser. I rather acquiesce in that interpretation by Dr. Whitby (which the author of Miscel Sacra has adopted, and taken pains to illustrate, Essay iii. p. 22—24.) That the view he had of celestial glories, affected the system of his nerve in such a manner, as to occasion some paralytic symptoms, and particularly a stammering in his speech, and perhaps some ridiculous distortion in his countenance, referred to elsewhere in the phrase of the infirmity in his flesh. See Gal. iv. 13, 14. 1 Cor. ii. 5. Compare Dan. viii. 27. As this might threaten both his acceptance and usefulness, it is no wonder he was so importunate for its being removed; yet being the attendant and effect of so great a favour, he might with peculiar propriety speak of glorying in it.

SECT.
XIX.2 Cor.
XII. 7.

been describing, (chap. xi. 13—15.) under that character, might from thence take occasion to buffet and upbraid me; that I, being subject to such disorders, though naturally resulting from the manner in which my nerves were impressed by this ecstasy, might not be excessively exalted; but might bear away, like Jacob, when he had been successively wrestling with the angel, an infirmity in my animal frame, from which ungenerous and cruel enemies might profanely take an occasion to insult me. Gen. xxxii. 25.

8 This was indeed at first so very grievous and mortifying to me, and seemed to have so unhappy an aspect upon my acceptance and usefulness, as a preacher of the gospel, that I was very importunate in my petitions that it might be removed, and besought the Lord Jesus Christ thrice on the occasion, intreating him that, if it were his blessed will, it might totally depart from me, or at least be moderated in some considerable degree. And my prayer was not in vain; for though he did not entirely and fully indulge my request, he said to me, in great condescension, My grace is sufficient for thee, to support thee under these trials, though I permit them to continue, which I now choose; for my strength is made perfect, and illustrated so much the more, in the weakness of the instrument by which I work; and this general maxim will take place with respect to thee. With the greatest pleasure, therefore will I boast in my weaknesses, various as they are, that the strength of Christ may, as it were, pitch its tent upon me,^g and surround me on every side. And therefore I feel a secret complacency, rather than anxiety and terror, in these infirmities, in all the injuries I sustain, in all the necessities, I endure, in all the persecutions with which I am assaulted, and in all the straits which for Christ's sake press me on every part; for when I am weak, then am I strong; never do I feel larger inward communications of strength from him, than when I am most conscious of my own weakness. Nor do I esteem any thing a greater honour to me, than that Christ should take occasion to glorify himself by those things whereby I am humbled and abased.

8 For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me.

9 And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me.

10 Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong.

IMPROVE-

^g Pitch its tent, &c.] That seems the strong emphasis of the original word ἐπισημασθη.

IMPROVEMENT.

WELL might the apostle say, that when he was weak, then was he strong; for it is difficult to tell, when he expresses a greater strength of genius, or of grace, than while thus discoursing of his own infirmities. How glorious were those scars in his body which were the marks of his sufferings for Christ: and those tremblings and distortions of his nerves which were the results of those bright visions of the Lord which brought down heaven to earth, and had for the time equalled a mortal man with the spirits of just men made perfect; yea, almost with the angels of God!

5207.
xix.

Transported with the sacred impulse, he could scarcely tell whether he were in the body or out of it; but he testified, that the things which he saw and heard were unutterable. Let us not repine, that he recollected and recorded nothing more particular concerning what passed before the eye of his mind, when that of the body was closed. These celestial raptures were intended to confirm his faith, and consequently likewise to confirm ours; but not to amuse our curiosity. If the earth be full of the goodness of the Lord, how much more the third heavens, where he holds his highest court! Nor shall the intermediate state of souls want its proper enjoyments and blessings. Assuredly therefore believing these things, let us wait God's time for a more particular knowledge of them; and when called of him to go forth and receive this inheritance, like genuine children of Abraham, obey, though we know not particularly whither we go. (Heb. xi. 8.)

We see the danger of spiritual pride, from which even St. Paul himself was not secure. One would have imagined, that such a view of the celestial world should in itself have been sufficient to have humbled him, during all the remainder of the longest life; and yet it is evident, that God saw there was some danger, lest pride should be cherished by that which seemed so proper to destroy it; therefore was there given him a thorn in the flesh. And by how many thorns are the most distinguished Christians often pierced? Let them bless God, if thereby they are humbled too, even though the messengers and instruments of Satan should from thence take occasion to buffet them.

In all our exigencies, extremities, and complaints, let us apply to the throne of grace, and that blessed Redeemer, who intercedes before it, for proper assistance and relief. Nor let us be discouraged, though the first or second address, should seem to be disregarded; the third or fourth may be successful. And what, if we do not succeed to our wish in the immediate answer? Let it content us, that we may be assured by Christ of the sufficiency of his

SECT. XIX. his grace. In our weakness he can illustrate his strength. And in that view too may we glory in our infirmities. For surely the
 Ver. honour of our Divine Master, in our deepest humiliation, ought 9 to give us much more joy, than to see ourselves ever so much admired and extolled. “But, O blessed Jesus, how much of thy strength must be manifested in us, to teach our vain and selfish hearts a lesson, which at the very first proposal appears so reasonable, if considered in speculation alone? Lord increase our faith! Increase our humility! So shalt thou have the glory in all thou givest, and in all thou deniest us, and in all the struggles and 10 trials to which thou mayest appoint us; and in which, for thy sake, we will take pleasure.”

SECT. XX.

The Apostle vindicates the frankness, sincerity, and tenderness, of his conduct, and his visible superiority to all secular considerations, in all his dealings with the church at Corinth. 2 Cor. XII. 11, to the end.

SECT. XX.

2 CORINTHIANS XII. 11.

IT may be indeed, my brethren, that I am become foolish in boasting, as I have done above; but if it be so, you will consider where the blame lies. For, you, by the manner in which some of you, to whom I am now speaking, have behaved yourselves, may be said to have compelled me to do it, even against my will. In which you are peculiarly inexcusable; for I ought indeed to have been commended by you, rather than to have found any necessity of pleading with you, in the manner I have done; for I have in no respect whatsoever, failed to equal the most excellent of the apostles, though I am myself nothing in the account of some; nor indeed am I any thing in reality without the aids of Divine grace and assistance, nor would I assume to myself any glory from what that hath made me.
 12 Yet truly God has been pleased to communicate of his bounties to me in such a degree, that the signs of an apostle were produced among you in a variety of most convincing miracles; miracles, by which I was not puffed up, but which were wrought in all patience, in the midst of this unreasonable opposition I met with, notwithstanding these signs, and wonders, and powers, which awakened the amazement of all that beheld.

2 Cor. XII. 11. I AM become a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you: for in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing.

12 Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds.

Nor

13 For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, except it be that I myself was not burdensome to you; forgive me this wrong.

14 Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you; and I will not be burdensome to you; for I seek not yours, but you: for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children.

15 And I will very gladly spend and be spent for you; though the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved.

16 But be it so, I did not burden you: nevertheless, being crafty, I caught you with guile.

Nor did I exert these miraculous powers in chastising the irregular, but chose rather, if it were possible, to conquer by love and by benefits.

SECT.
XX.
2 Cor.
XII. 12.

And you know that I conferred many benefits: for in what one respect were ye inferior to the rest of the churches planted by the other apostles, unless [it were in this, that I myself was not burdensome to you, by taking any acknowledgment for my labours? No, not so much as a subsistence among you at your expense. Forgive me, I beseech you, this great injury: for I think, I hardly need to ask you forgiveness on any other account.

Behold, now, this is the third time I am ready to come to you, having been disappointed twice before. (1 Cor. xvi. 5; 2 Cor. i. 15, 16.) Nevertheless, I will not now be, in the sense I have mentioned, burdensome to you, for God knows, I seek not your possessions, but yourselves. If I can but be instrumental in promoting your salvation, and at the same time secure your filial love and affection, I shall think myself happy, though I reap not the least personal advantage from your property, where it is most abundant. For it is not fit, that the children should lay up treasure for the parents, but the parents for the children. I therefore, being your spiritual father, will communicate to you such treasures as I have, and will not desire to share yours. For I will with the greatest pleasure spend, and be spent for your souls; I will gladly exhaust my strength, and put myself to any expense too, in order to promote this; though the consequence of all should be, that the more abundantly I love you, the less I am loved by you. How unkind soever your returns may be, if you should treat me like those perverse creatures who take a pleasure in tormenting them that love them best, yet shall you still find me a sincere friend to your best interests. (Compare 2 Tim. ii. 10; 1 Thess. ii. 8.)

But I know, some will be ready to object to all this; as what will not envy and falsehood suggest, where there is any interest in fixing an odium? let it be so, I did not indeed myself burden you, nor demand subsistence among you as my right; but perhaps it will be insinuated, that being subtil I took you in by an artifice, making others the instruments of my mercenary prin-principles, while I appeared myself so disinterested. I answer, by appealing to plain fact. Did I make a prey of you, by any one whom I sent to you with any message from me, or who came to me about any business while I was resident among you: name the man, if you can, on whom there is reason to fix any such suspicion. I defy the boldest of mine enemies to allege, what must recoil on himself with so much infamy. I know, that I increased Titus to make you a visit, and with him, I sent a deacon, to keep him company on the journey. Did Titus then make a gain of you? Did we not walk in the same spirit, and in the same steps? Did not all his actions resemble mine, as formed upon the same principles of strict integrity, and generous friendship?

13 Again, do you think that we make any apology to you, and endeavour to amuse you with mere words, mentioning Titus' coming to excuse my own absence? In the sight of God we speak as those who know he is witness to every action and word: yea, that he knows the secret springs of affection which actuate our hearts; and we speak as those that are in Christ by a solemn profession of his religion, and should about any thing which might bring a reflection upon it, and all things that we say, when we are endeavouring to reconcile your minds to us, are not for our own sake, but [we speak] beloved, for your edification: that by removing your prejudices against us, we may be capable of being more serviceable to you in your most important
 20 interests. For I am really distressed on this account, and sadly fear, lest by any means when I come unto you with an heart full of Christian tenderness, and with all imaginable readiness to do my utmost to comfort and refresh your spirits, I should not find you such as I could wish; and that I should be found by you such as ye would not wish I should be. I fear I shall have some work before me of a very ungrateful kind, and which I would by all means desire, if possible, by this admonition to prevent. For I am very apprehensive, lest [there should be] contentions, arising from secret and very unbecoming emulations; and growing up to transports

17 Did I make a prey of you by any of them whom I sent unto you?

18 I desired Titus, and with him I sent a Brother. Did Titus make a gain of you? walked we not in the same spirit? walked we not in the same steps?

19 Again think you that we excuse ourselves unto you? we speak before God in Christ: but we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying.

20 For I fear, least when I come I shall not find you such as I would, and lest I shall be found unto you such as ye would not: lest there be debates

1 Contentions, emulations, &c.] All these were the natural consequences of those debates which had arisen among them, and therefore he in a very awful manner, gives this solemn warning with relation to them.

debates, envyings, wranglings, strifes, inabilities, whisperings, swornings, tumults lest my God will humble me among you, and that I should bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness, and fornication, and lasciviousness, which they have committed.

ports of wranglings, strifes, where there is a clashing either of opinions or secular interests: which will tend to produce open reproaches or secret whisperings, to the manifest prejudice of each other's character: the inward swelling of pride and ambition, or perhaps the open contusion of riots and tumults, by which your cause in general will be exposed to public contempt: lest, indeed on the whole, I am very apprehensive, lest my God should humble and mortify me. I come among you again, so that my spirit should be even dejected and broken, on account of the sad change which hath passed since I left Corinth: and lest I should find cause to mourn over many who have sinned already, and who, though several others have been wrought upon by my admonitions, have not repented of the uncleanness and fornication, and lasciviousness, which they have committed, against whom, therefore, I fear I shall find myself obliged, in virtue of my office, to pass such censures, as it pains and pierces my heart so much as to think of.

IMPROVEMENT.

How amiable was the goodness of the apostle, in adding all patience to those signs of his Divine mission, which were with so much splendor given among the Corinthians, when there were so many things to have excused, or rather to have vindicated his severity. Such meekness had he learned of Christ, such does he teach to succeeding ministers and private Christians. How disinterested was his behaviour in every part of it, not seeking their substance, but their souls: and indeed what is the greatest gain, which avarice, in its most artful and successful forms, can make of the ministry, when compared with winning souls to Christ, and bringing them into the way of salvation? Who, that deserves the name of a Minister, would not gladly sacrifice the views of worldly interest to this, and rejoice in an opportunity of spending and of being spent for this?

Yet we see, that even this cannot always command the returns of love; but the love, as well as the praise of men, is in comparison, a matter of small importance. It will surely engage the approbation of God: and all the slights and injuries ever which this benevolent disposition triumphs, will be remembered by him, with proportionable tokens of his gracious acceptance.

Happy was that prudence which made the proof of integrity so clear, and the appeal to the whole world so confident, as it here appears. So may we avoid every appearance of any thing which might beget a suspicion of sinister designs, that we may vindicate ourselves from every such insinuation, with the noble freedom of those who are approved to God, and the consciences of men. To preserve this, may we always speak and act as before God, in Christ, and do all things, not for the gratification of our own humour, or advancement of our secular interest, but for the edification of others.

SECT.
XX.

The ministers of the gospel cannot but be humbled, when any thing contrary to the rules and genius of it is to be found among the people of their care and charge; whether they be pollutions of the flesh, or of the spirit; and they may be in some instances as effectually mortified and distressed, by debates, envyings, 21 strifes, backbitings, and whisperings, as by uncleanness, fornication, and lasciviousness. But when any of these things occur, as it is to be feared that in most Christian societies, or at least in such as are considerable for their numbers, they sometimes will; let it be remembered that they happen by the permission of Providence. God hath his wise ends in suffering what is indeed so lamentable: thus humbling the shepherd, that the flock may be farther edified; that he may approve his fidelity in more vigorous efforts for reformation; and may not be excessively exalted by that better success, wherewith, in other instances, God may crown his endeavours.

SECT. XXI.

The Apostle concludes his epistle with assuring the Corinthians very tenderly, how much it would grieve him to be obliged to shew his apostolic power, by inflicting any miraculous punishment on those who continued to oppose him; subjoining at the end of all, proper salutations, and his solemn benediction. 2 Cor. XIII. 1, throughout.

2 CORINTHIANS XIII. 1.

SECT.
XXI.

2 Cor.
XIII. 1.

BUT I will return now from that digression which hath carried me away from what I was entering upon before. [It is] now, as I said (chap. xii. 14,) the third time, that I tell you, I am coming to you^a; and as several cases will come

2 Cor. XIII. 1.

THIS is the third time I am coming to you
In

^a The third time. I tell you I am coming: τρίτην παρο ερχομαι.] So the words may be taken, though I own them ambiguous. Perhaps this may intimate, that this was the third epistle he had wrote to them, in which he had mentioned his purpose of coming, but we cannot certainly infer it. He seems here to resume the sentence he had

In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established.

² I told you before, and foretel you as if I were present the second time, and being absent now I write to them which heretofore have sinned, and to all other, that if I come again, I will not spare:

³ Since ye seek a proof of Christ, speaking in me, which to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty in you.

⁴ For though he was crucified through weakness, yet he liveth by the power of God; for we also are weak come before me on which it will be necessary to give my judgment, I assure you, I shall think myself obliged to proceed on that reasonable maxim in the Jewish constitution, (Numb. xxxv. 30; Deut. xvii. 6; chap. xix. 15.) that every word, or thing, admitted for evidence in the decision, shall be established by the concurrence of what cometh from the mouth of two or three credible witnesses. And you will remember, ² that I have formerly foretold you, and do foretel it now again, as if I were present the second time in person; and being absent in body, but not in spirit, I now write to those that have sinned already in any scandalous and aggravated manner, and to all the rest that they may take notice of it, and be filled with a sacred awe, that if I come again, I will not spare [you^b,] as I have hitherto done; but I am determined, by the divine permission, to animadvert upon notorious offenders, by the exertion of that miraculous power with which God has endowed me. Since, after all the evidence you have already had, some of ³ you are so strangely unreasonable, as to seek a further proof of Christ speaking by his spirit in me, even of the authority of that glorious and almighty Saviour, who is not weak towards you, but powerful among you by what he has already wrought^c; you may at length have such demonstrations of it, as may perhaps cost some of you dear. For though he was once crucified as ⁴ through a state of weakness, submitting to those infirmities of mortal flesh, which put him into the hands of his enemies, and waving the exertion of that miraculous energy, by which he could so soon have rescued himself, and destroyed them; nevertheless, he now liveth by the power of God the Father, whereby he obtained a glorious resurrection, and is now ascended to a seat of

ST. P.
XXI.
2 Cor.
XIII. 1.

had begun, chap. xii. 14. Such interruptions are frequent in St. Paul, and in many other writers who have not a regard to an artificial dress, and do not stand to correct every little inaccuracy, but abound in quickness and variety of thought, as Mr. Locke justly observes.

^b I will not spare you.] It is (as Bishop Burnet very justly observes,) a great confirmation of the veracity of the apostles, that when factions were raised against them, they used none of the arts of flattery, however necessary they might seem, but depended on the force of a miraculous power to reduce offenders; which it would have been a most absurd thing to have pretended to, if they had not really been conscious to themselves that it was engaged in their favour. Burnet on the Art. p. 62. See 1 Cor. iv. 21, note f.

^c Already wrought.] This may, as Mr. Cradock and others observe, very probably refer to some miraculous punishment inflicted lately on the incestuous Corinthians.

ACT.
XXI.
2 Cor.
XIII. 4.

of uncontrouled and universal authority. And thus we his apostles, though we are also weak in him, and to them who regard only external appearances, may seem contemptible, nevertheless, shall live with him by the power of God, manifested to you in our favour, to give a kind of resurrection to that apostolical authority which may have seemed for a while dormant and dead.

- 5 You examine and try me; but let me admonish you to turn the search inward, and to examine and try yourselves, that ye may certainly know, whether ye are in the faith, whether ye be true Christians or not. For if you on a strict inquiry find that you are, you will therein find a proof of my being a true apostle; as it is by means of my extraordinary gift that you are become so. Prove yourselves^d, my brethren, whether you can, or cannot stand the test. Do you not know yourselves, when the subject of knowledge lies so near you, and is always before your eye? Are you not sensible that Jesus Christ is dwelling in you by the sanctifying and transforming influences of the Spirit; unless ye are mere nominal Christians, and such as, whatever your gifts be, will finally be disapproved^e and rejected, as reprobate silver, that will not stand the touchstone? But whatever be the case of any of you, I hope ye shall soon know that we are not disapproved, and have not lost^f our evidence of the Divine presence and approbation.
- 7 But I am far from desiring to produce such evidences of it as would be grievous to you; and can truly say, that I wish to God ye may do no evil in any respect, and not that we may be manifested [as] approved, by such awful methods as those to which I refer: but on the contrary, that ye may do what is good, beautiful, and amiable, that which will adorn your profession in the most effectual manner; though we should be as weak in him, but we shall live with him by the power of God toward you.
if

5 Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith: prove your own selves: know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?

6 But I trust that ye shall know that we are not reprobates.

7 Now I pray to God that ye do no evil: not that we should appear approved, but that ye should do that which is honest, though we be as reprobates.

^d Examine yourselves—prove yourselves.] Whether you be δοκιμοι, such as can stand the test; or ἀδοκιμοι, such as cannot, for that is the proper import of the word which we render reprobates. The difference between αἰσθάνομαι, and ἐκτιμάω, seems to be gradual: examine and thoroughly prove.

^e Unless ye are disapproved.] Dr. Guise paraphrases the words οὐ μὴ τι ἀδοκιμασῆτε, “unless there be something very disapprovable in you;” and it certainly expresses the sense with great propriety; but as the apostle supposes this to be something which would prove that Christ was not dwelling with and among them, it seems that it must be extended to the sense given in the paraphrase.

^f Have not lost, &c.] It seems that the possibility of losing extraordinary gifts by the abuse of them, is finely insinuated in this oblique manner; and it might, if rightly understood, have its weight with many of them.

ser.
xxi.

2 Cor.
AIII. 8.

8 For we can do nothing against the truth but for the truth.

if we were disapproved, and upon a level with those who have no testimonials of an extraordinary mission to produce. For we are not able to do any thing against the interest of that important system of truth which God hath intrusted us with; but must strenuously act for the service of the truth, and support of the gospel, and not act by personal inclinations and affections, of resentment on the one hand, and tenderness on the other.

9 For we are glad when we are weak, and ye are strong; and this also we wish, even your perfection.

I wish the regularity of your behaviour at all events, as I declared above; for we rejoice, when we are weak, or seem so by not exerting any miraculous powers to the purposes we have hinted; and when ye, our dear converts and brethren, are strong in gifts and graces in faith, and good works: and this also we wish [even] your being set in perfect good order^g. Your entire reformation would give us the greatest pleasure imaginable, a pleasure far beyond what we could derive from the most astonishing interpositions of God, to chastise those that rebel against us. Therefore upon the whole, I write these things thus largely being absent, that when I am present I may not be obliged to act severely according to the Divine and extraordinary power which the Lord Jesus Christ hath given me, for the edification of the several members of his church, and not for the destruction of men's lives and comforts. And therefore it is that I give you this warning; in order to prevent what would otherwise be grievous to myself, as well as to you.

10 Therefore I write these things being absent, lest being present I should use sharpness according to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification, and not to destruction.

As for what remains, my dear brethren, fare-¹¹well; and may all joy and happiness ever attend you. And that this may be the case, let it be your great care, that ye may be perfect, that ye may arrive at the highest degree of goodness. May you all be comforted with those strong consolations which true Christianity suggests, and exhorted and animated by the instructions it inculcates. Attend to the same thing^h, pursue with the greatest unanimity of heart, and intenseness of affection, that which ought to be

11 Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love φρονήσις should undoubtedly be rendered rather than be of one mind; which in some respects might have been impossible. See my Sermon on Candour and Unanimity, and Phil. ii. 2, and note there.

^g Being set in perfect good order.] This I think the import of κατασκευάζω, that perfect reformation which was not yet wrought, though something considerable had been done towards it.

^h Attend to the same thing.] So το αὐτὸ

SECT.
XXI.
2 Cor.
XIII. 11.

the great end of all our schemes and designs, the care of glorifying God, and adorning the gospel. And as you have, in some instances, seemed to have forgotten how essential it is to true Christianity, that its professors should abstain from mutual injuries, and cultivate unfeigned friendship, let me urge it upon you that ye be peaceful, candid, and affectionate in your sentiments; and the God of love and peace will gratefully own you as his children, and be favourably with you, and fix his residence among you. And in token of this entire harmony, and endeared affection, salute each other according to the custom of your assemblies, with an holy kiss as a proper expression of the purest and most ardent love. All the saints, that is, the Christians here, in the place from whence I now write, salute you with the sincerest affection, and will always rejoice to hear of your peace, prosperity, and edification.

14 I conclude all with my most affectionate good wishes for you; even that the perpetual favour of the Lord Jesus Christ, the great Head of the church, in whom all the fulness of grace dwells; and the constant and peculiar love of God the Father, and the most abundant communion and fellowship of the Holy Ghost, in the richest anointings of his gifts and graces, may [be] with you, and rest upon you all continually, henceforth and for ever. Amen: may God ratify the important wish, so as to answer and exceed your most exalted hopes.

love and peace shall be with you.

12 Greet one another with an holy kiss.

13 All the saints salute you.

14 The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. 4 ADORED be the name of that compassionate Redeemer, who was once crucified as through weakness; and when he could have commanded more than twelve legions of angels to his rescue, voluntarily submitted to be seized and bound, like an helpless mortal, subject to superior force, and thus led away to torture and death! He lives for ever by the power of God, by a life derived from him: may we, weak as we are in ourselves, live through him to all the purposes of the Christian life.

And

[Favour of the Lord Jesus Christ.] I express χρησις by favour here; for if grace be taken for sanctifying influences communicated from Christ, (which to be sure makes a great part of the idea,) it may be less easy to distinguish it from the communion of the Spirit.—It is with great reason, that this comprehensive and instructive benediction is pronounced just before our assemblies for public worship are dismissed; and it is a very indecent thing to see so many quitting them, or getting into postures of remove, before this short sentence can be ended. Compare Numb. vi. 26, 27.

And that this life may flourish abundantly, let us be often engaged to examine ourselves; since it will be so great a scandal, and so great a snare, to be strangers at home. Do we not indeed after Ver. all know ourselves? Let us search, whether Jesus Christ be in us? 5 Whether he be formed in our hearts, whether he live and act in us 6 by his Holy Spirit? Else shall we be treated as reprobate silver, shall be justly rejected of God, and no gifts or privileges will avail us. Having gained the sure evidences of sincere goodness in ourselves, we may, with the greater cheerfulness and confidence, pray for our brethren; and let us offer the Apostle's petition for them, that they may do no evil, but every thing that is just and honourable, beautiful and lovely; never desiring to exalt ourselves on the mistakes and follies of others; but on the contrary, wishing 9 their perfection, and labouring to the utmost to promote it.

How charming a spirit breathes in those sentences in which the Apostle takes his leave of the Corinthians! So much wisdom and 11, 12 goodness, that one is almost grieved, that he who bids farewell in such an engaging manner, does it so soon. Let us however bear his parting words in mind. When ministers are leaving those among whom they have laboured, when Christian friends are separated from each other, let this be their common petition and care, that they may be improved and comforted; that unity and peace may prevail and increase; and that the God of peace may be with them all: that he may be with them in those happy effects, and blessed operations, which will be the result of the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost.

How often hath this comprehensive benediction been pronounced! 13 Let us study it more and more; that we may value it proportionably, that we set ourselves to deliver, or to receive it, with a becoming solemnity; with eyes and hearts lifted up to God, who, when out of Zion he commandeth the blessing, bestows in it life for evermore. Amen!

END OF THE SECOND OF CORINTHIANS.

THE
FAMILY EXPOSITOR:

OR, A

PARAPHRASE

ON

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

GALATIANS.

WITH

CRITICAL NOTES, AND A PRACTICAL IMPROVEMENT OF EACH SECTION.

A GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO THE

PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

THE GALATIANS.

THE churches of Galatia, which was a province of the Lesser Asia, were first converted to the Christian faith by the apostle Paul, about the latter end of the year 50, when passing through the region of Galatia, he was received with great affection, and made the instrument of planting several churches there; which, when he visited those parts again, in his next progress in the year 54, he had an opportunity of confirming in the doctrine that he before had taught them. (Compare Acts xvi. 6; xviii. 23; and Gal. iv. 13—15.)

From the contents of this epistle it appears, that after he had preached the gospel to the Galatians, some judaising zealots had endeavoured to degrade the character of St. Paul among them, as one not immediately commissioned by Christ, as the other apostles were, and to subvert his doctrine in the grand article of justification, by insisting on the observation of the Jewish ceremonies, and so attempting to incorporate the law with Christianity. And as St. Paul expresses here to the Galatians his concern and wonder that they were so soon perverted from the doctrine he had preached, (chap. i. 6.) he therefore must have written this epistle not long after he had been among them; and as no hint is given through the whole of it, that he had been with them more than once, it is most reasonable to conclude, that it was written before his second journey to Galatia, and consequently not later than the year of our Lord 53, which was the 13th of the emperor Claudian. (See vol. III. sect. 41. *note*ⁱ p. 177.)

And

And though by the subscription, which is commonly placed at the end of it, this epistle is said to be written from Rome, yet if the latest date which some have given it should be allowed, which fixes it to the year 58, this could not be the place from whence it was written, as St. Paul then had never been at Rome, and none suppose him to have come there till after the year 60; which manifestly shews that the subscription ought to be rejected as a spurious addition, though it has been the means of leading many into a palpable mistake. See vol. III. sect. 44, note^a, p. 192. But dating it as above, in the year 53, it appears to be written from Corinth, where the apostle had sufficient time to write it as he did with his own hand, as he continued in that city near two years. Compare Acts xviii. 3, 11.

The principal design of the apostle Paul in this epistle, was “to assert and vindicate his apostolical authority and doctrine, and to establish and confirm the churches of Galatia in the faith of Christ, especially with respect to the important point of justification; to expose the errors that were introduced among them; and to revive those principles of Christianity that he had taught them when he first preached the gospel to them.” And to this purpose,

FIRST, He begins with an address adapted to his main design, in which he asserts his own apostleship, and hints at the provision made for our justification by Christ, expressing at the same time his most affectionate regard for the Galatian churches; (chap. i. 1—5. And then,

SECONDLY, He enters upon what he principally had in view,—to vindicate the authority of his doctrine and mission,—to prove that justification only can be had by faith in Christ, without the works of the law,—and to expostulate with the Galatians on their weakness and folly, in hearkening to false teachers, and being persuaded by them to become subject to the law, Where,

I. In vindication of the authority of his doctrine and mission,—after declaring his astonishment that the Galatians had so soon been led aside, under the influence of seducing teachers, from the simplicity of that gospel he had preached among them with the greatest faithfulness (ver. 6—10) he shews them,

(1.) That he received his mission and his doctrine, not from men, but by immediate revelation from Christ himself, who when he was a persecuting zealot for the law, he had called him by his grace to preach the gospel; in which he had immediately engaged without consulting any man, or making any application to the other apostles for instruction in his work, or for authority to perform it, (ver. 11, to the end).

(2.) That in this interview with the apostles at Jerusalem, fourteen years after his conversion, he had maintained the liberty of Christians from the yoke of the law; and having communicated to the chief of them an account of his ministry, they were so far from disapproving either his doctrine or his practice, that they acknowledged the authority of his mission: and cordially embracing ing him as a brother apostle, encouraged him to prosecute the work he was engaged in, and to continue preaching to the Gentiles; (chap. ii. 1—10.) To which he adds,

(3.) That however some had represented him as inferior to the other apostles, and as a favourer of the ceremonial law, he had given sufficient proof of the contrary; in that when Peter came to Antioch, the character of that apostle did not prevent his openly reproving him, for withdrawing from the conversation of the Gentile converts for fear of displeasing the Jews, and undermining by this means the liberty of the Christian church from Jewish impositions; expostulating with him, how very inconsistent and absurd it was, that when they who were Jews had thought it necessary, from a full conviction of the insufficiency of the law to justify them, to embrace the gospel, and to believe in Christ for justification, they should endeavour after this to bring the Gentiles into subjection to the law, as if the dispensation introduced by Christ would leave them under sin without it. He was determined for his own part, that no such inconsistency should be found either in his doctrine or his practice; and, having renounced all expectations from the law, his whole dependence was upon Christ alone for righteousness and life, (ver. 11, to the end.) Having thus entered on the main point he had in view, the apostle proceeds,

II. To prove, that justification only can be had by faith in Christ without the works of the law. And this he introduces, with reproving the Galatians for their instability with regard to this important doctrine; which having been established by the death of Christ, and confirmed by the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, nothing could be more senseless than to turn from it to the carnal ordinances of the law, and so to lose the benefit of all their sufferings for the gospel, unmindful of the attestations that were given to the truth of it; (chap. iii. 1—5.) And then, in confirmation of the doctrine he had proved them for rejecting, he offers several arguments, and shews,

(1.) That as it was by faith Abraham was justified, so it is by faith that we become his children, and are partakers of the blessing with him; (ver. 6—9.)

(2.) That the law pronounces a curse on every one who is in any instance guilty of transgressing it; and therefore, that it is not by the law we can be justified, but by faith; (ver. 10—12.)

(3.) That Christ hath set us free from the condemning sentence of the law; and as it is by him that we escape the curse, so we obtain the blessing only through faith in him; (ver. 13, 14.)

(4.) That the stability of the covenant of promise to Abraham and his seed is such, that it could not be vacated by the law, which was given long after the promise was made, under the mediation of Moses, and between different parties; and therefore, that it is not by the observance of the law, but only by faith in the promise, the benefit of justification and a title to eternal life can be obtained; (ver. 15—18.)

(5.) That the design of God in giving the law was, not to justify but

but to convince of sin, as well as to restrain from the commission of it; and being intended only for a temporary institution, instead of vacating the promise, it was designed to be subservient to it, by shewing the necessity of a better righteousness than that of the law, and so to lead the awakened soul to Christ, that being justified by faith in him, we might obtain the benefit of the promise; (ver. 19—24.) And therefore,

(6.) That such is the advantage of the gospel dispensation, that Christians are no longer under the discipline of the law; but being united unto Christ by faith, and so become the sons of God, both Jews and Gentiles are all one in him; and the distinctions which the law had made being done away, all true believers are the seed of Abraham, and heirs of the blessing with him, by virtue of the promise, and not by any title which the law could give; (ver. 25, to the end.)—But as the heir to an estate is in subjection, like a servant, under the government of guardians, during his minority; so were the Jews, before the gospel was revealed, like children under age, kept in subjection to the law; till at the time appointed for their entering on possession of the promised inheritance, as sons that were come to maturity, Christ was sent forth to answer all that the law demanded, and to redeem his people from their bondage to it; that being received by faith in him into the number of the sons of God, both Jews and Gentiles might be brought into a glorious liberty, and, being enabled by the Spirit to approach to God as their Father, they might enjoy the privilege and freedom of heirs of God through Christ, and be no more as servants under subjection to the law; (chap. iv. 1—7.) And hence the apostle takes occasion,

III. To expostulate with the Galatians on their weakness and folly in being so deluded by false teachers, as to give up the liberty of the gospel, and be persuaded to become subject to the law. And, to convince them how unreasonable and absurd their conduct was,

(1.) He observes, that they were formerly, as Gentiles, in bondage to the superstitions of the heathen worship, and now, that they were brought into a state of liberty, it was a strange infatuation they should be willing to submit again to another servitude, and to come under bondage to the unprofitable rites and ceremonies of the law; which gave him ground to fear his labour would be found in a great measure to have been lost upon them; (ver. 8—11.)

(2.) He reminds them of the great affliction and regard they had expressed for him and his ministry when he first preached the gospel to them: and argues with them, what occasion he had given for the alteration of their disposition towards him, or how they could account for it, unless he was become their enemy by telling them the truth; (ver. 12—16.)

(3.) He cautions them against the base design of their false teachers, who would alienate their hearts from him, to engross them to themselves; and intimates how fit it was they should retain the same regard to him and to the truth, now he was absent, as they had shewn when he was present; assuring them that he had still the

the same affectionate concern for them, and would be glad of coming to them, and finding matters better with them than he feared; (ver. 17—20)

(4) He illustrates the advantage of believers under the gospel, as to their privilege and freedom, above that of those under the law by an allegory taken from the two sons of Abraham by Hagar and Sarah, as typical of the difference between the two dispensations of the law, and gospel; of which the former was a state of bondage, and all that seek for justification by it are excluded like Ishmael from inheriting the promise; whereas the latter is a state of freedom, and those who come into this new and better dispensation, like Isaac, are the children of the promise, and are by faith entitled to the blessings of it; (ver. 21, to the end.)—This was the freedom they were brought into by Christ; and he exhorts them to be steadfast in it, and to beware of coming under a servile yoke by a subjection to the law; (chap. v. 1.) And, to prevent their having any further thought of it,

(5.) He assures them, that by submitting to be circumcised, they became subject to the whole burden of the law, and could receive no benefit by Christ, but were cut off from all advantage they might have by the grace of the gospel, by seeking to be justified by their obedience to the law; while he and all true Christians looked for justification only by the righteousness of Christ, with reference to which it made no difference whether they were circumcised or not, if they had such a faith as operates by love; (ver. 2—6.) And therefore,

(6.) He calls them to consider whence it was that, after they had set out well, they were drawn off from that regard which they once had for the truth and liberty of the gospel; and shews them it was owing to the ill impressions made upon them by their false teachers, by whom he was unjustly charged with preaching up circumcision, of which his sufferings for the doctrine of the cross were a plain confutation; expressing at the same time his hope concerning them, that they would come to be of the same mind with him, and wishing those who had endeavoured to corrupt them were cast out of the church, that they might do no further mischief; (ver. 7—12.)—And now, as he was drawing to a close of his epistle, according to his usual method.

THIRDLY, He offers several practical directions to them, and exhorts them to a behaviour answerable to their Christian calling, and to the institutions of the gospel, as a doctrine according to godliness. Where,

(1.) He takes occasion from his mentioning their Christian liberty to caution them against abusing it to an indulgence of the flesh, and to the breach of Christian charity; and urges them to mutual love, as what they were obliged to both by the law and gospel, and which if they neglected, and gave way to animosities and contentions, they would be exposed to ruin and destruction; (ver. 13—15.)

(2.) He exhorts them to a conversation suitable to the dispensation

tion of grace they had received, by a compliance with the influences of the Spirit, in opposition to the workings of the flesh; and, giving a description of the different fruits of each, shews, that as Christians they were obliged to crucify the flesh with its corrupt affections, and to obey the dictates of the Spirit, in a continual exercise of all the graces of it; and warns them, in particular, against pride and vain glory; (ver. 16, to the end.)

(3.) He recommends it to them to deal tenderly with those who are overtaken in a fault, endeavouring to restore them, with a compassionate regard to their infirmities, by a meek and gentle treatment, as those who would fulfil the law of Christ; and cautions them, instead of entertaining a conceited notion of their own sufficiency, as if they were not liable to fall as well as others, or being pleased with the high sentiments that others have of them, to examine their own work, whether it be such as may afford them ground of rejoicing, since every one must be accountable for his own behaviour, and shall at last be dealt with, not according to the vain imagination he has of himself, or the good opinion of others concerning him, but according to what he really is, and the true character that he is found to bear; (chap. vi. 1—5)

(4.) He presses it upon them as their duty, to be free and liberal in contributing to the support and maintenance of their ministers, assuring them that plausible excuses in a point of duty would fatally deceive those that made use of them, and every one should reap according as he sowed; and therefore urges them not to be weary in well-doing, but to lay hold of every opportunity for doing good to all, especially to their fellow Christians; (ver. 6—10.)

And now, the apostle having written this epistle with his own hand, and given this testimony of his affectionate regard to the Galatians, sums up the main design of it as the close of all (ver. 11, to the end), and shews,—that as to their false teachers it was for selfish ends, and not from any veneration for the law, they pressed them to be circumcised, that by this means they might keep up their reputation with the Jews, and might not only save themselves from persecution, but glory also in the number of their proselytes; while, for his own part, he had no worldly views, and would not glory but in the cross of Christ, by whom alone it is that justification can be had. This was the doctrine that he preached, nor should the fear of persecution make him to disguise it, for it was only in this way that any could be justified and saved; and, whether they were circumcised or not, if they were made new creatures, and acted by this principle, mercy and peace should be upon them, as the true Israel of God. No one should therefore trouble him any more with urging the necessity of circumcision, or with suggesting he himself was for it, when he had shewn his zeal for the pure doctrine of the gospel by his sufferings for it; the marks of which were a plain evidence of his regard to Christ, and such a proof of his sincerity, as might well serve to vindicate his character, and to confirm the truth of what he had taught them.—And, having thus reminded them of the main view he had in writing this epistle, he concludes it with a solemn apostolical benediction.

A
PARAPHRASE AND NOTES
ON
THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE
TO THE GALATIANS.

SECTION I.

The Apostle Paul, after a general and proper salutation, expresses his surprise and concern, that the Galatian Christians had so soon suffered themselves to be led aside from the simplicity of that gospel which he had first planted amongst them. Gal. I. 1—10.

GAL. I. 1.

PAUL an apostle (not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father

GALATIANS I. 1.

YOU receive this epistle from Paul, who hath the honour to stand in the character of an apostle of the Christian church; an important office which he did not presumptuously arrogate to himself, nor receive from the appointment or authority of men, as the original, nor by the choice or intervention of any man upon earth, as the instrument of his mission; whatever the factious teachers, who are endeavouring to disturb you, may have represented: but I am capable of giving you the most convincing evidence, that I had an immediate call to this honourable charge by Jesus Christ the great Head of the church, who did himself in person appear to me again and again (Acts ix. 4; xxii. 18), and sent me forth to be his witness unto all men, according to the sovereign choice of God the Father (Acts xxii. 14, 15), who hath raised him

SECT.
i.

Gal.
I. 1.

SECT. i.Gal.
i. 1.

him from among the dead^a, and therein laid the great foundation of our faith in him for righteousness and life, and our reliance on him as the Son of God and the only Saviour of men.

2 And while I am thus addressing myself to you, all the Christian brethren, especially the ministers^b, who are with me here at Corinth, join with me in the sentiments I am going to propose, and in the most friendly and affectionate salutations unto the churches of Galatia, whom they cordially love, notwithstanding any difference in form and opinion which at present may

3 subsist among them^c. It is our most unfeigned ardent prayer, that the richest communications of divine grace and favour may [be] imparted to you, with all the blessings of prosperity and peace of every kind, from God the Father, the great original and fountain of all good, and [from] our Lord Jesus Christ, the purchaser and

4 dispenser of it; Who graciously and compassionately gave himself up to the severest sufferings as an atoning sacrifice for our sins, that he might thus deliver us by the efficacy of his death from the destructive snares and condemnation that attend this present evil world^d, from the pre-

Father; who raised him from the dead;)

2 And all the brethren which are with me, unto the churches of Galatia;

3 Grace be to you, and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ,

4 Who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, a Who hath raised him from the dead.] Mr L'Enfant thinks these words are added to obviate an objection which might be raised against Paul's mission from his not having received a commission from Christ, like the other apostles while he was here on earth.—But the minds of the apostles appear to be always full of the joyful idea of Christ's resurrection, and therefore it is no wonder that out of the fulness of their hearts they should seize every opportunity of speaking of it. Compare Rom. i. 4; 1 Thess. i. 10; Heb. i. 3; 1 Pet. i. 3; and a multitude of other texts.—To which it may be added, that it is with great propriety the apostle mentions here, that God had raised him from the dead, as agreeable to the main point he had in view, which was to assert the doctrine of justification by faith in Christ; since God declared, by raising him from the dead, that he accepted the atonement Christ had made, and gave him a discharge from any further claim upon him for the satisfaction of his justice: and as it is this, that is the great foundation of our faith in Christ, so the apostle says elsewhere, that he was raised again for our justification: Rom. ix. 25.

b The brethren, especially the ministers.] As the titles of brethren and saints are applied to different persons, and ministers seem to be distinguished by being called brethren, Phil. iv. 21, 22, they are probably here intended.

c [Notwithstanding any difference in form and opinion, &c.] Though the Christians at Corinth were most of them converted Gentiles, and these of Galatia were strongly prejudiced in favour of the Jewish ceremonies; yet the apostle expresses their affection towards these their brethren, and that with great propriety, that he might thereby invite them to a suitable return of love. On the same principle he reminds them (ver. 4), of the blessings which as Christians they shared in common, that he might endear them the more to those who were joined with them in such happy bands.

d From this present evil world.] The words ἐκ τοῦ ἐνεστώτος αἰῶνος κόσμου are ambiguous, and some would render them, from the evil of this present world; which makes a very good sense; but had it been intended by the apostle, I think the article τοῦ would have been repeated. (Compare John xvii. 15.)—Mr. Locke argues from 1 Cor. ii. 6, 8, that αἰὼν αἰῶνος signifies the Jewish nation under the Mosaic constitution; and supposes these words to contain an intimation, that God intended world, according to the will of God and our Father :

predominant vices of the age, and from the ruin they will bring on all who shall continue in the practice of them, whether Jews or Gentiles, which glorious design he generously undertook according to the merciful and saving will of God, even our Father, who chose this wisest and happiest method of recovering us to himself : To 5 whom therefore, for this adorable and matchless grace to sinful creatures, [be] glory and praise for ever and ever. Amen.

SECT.
i.
Gal.
1. 4

5 To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

6 I marvel, that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel :

Since this then is the only way of being justified and saved, it gives me great concern, and I am quite astonished, my beloved brethren, that after ye have been instructed in it, and seemed to have received the truth in the love of it, ye are so soon removed from a due regard to him that called you into this method of salvation by and through the grace of Christ^f, and who continues still in the same sentiments as when he was at first the happy instrument of bringing you to an acquaintance with it; that ye are so soon removed, I say, unto what may almost be called another gospel^g, as being so entirely inconsistent with the very fundamentals of that which you were originally taught concerning our free justification by Divine grace on our believing, without the works of the Mosaic law. But indeed, to speak more exactly, that system of doctrines which you have so rashly and unhappily received, is not in strict propriety another gospel, nor worthy the name of gospel at all :

7 Which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and to take the Jews themselves out of it; so far was he from any purpose of bringing the Gentiles under it. But as it is certain that αἰών often signifies the same with κόσμος, that is the world (see Mat. xiii. 39, 40; 2 Cor. iv. 4; and Tit. ii. 12; when last place seems exactly parallel to this), I think it would be very unreasonable to limit so noble and expressive a clause by so narrow an interpretation.

e That ye are so soon removed.] It appears from the beginning of the general introduction to this epistle, that Paul had preached the gospel first to the Galatians, and planted several churches in that country, in his passing through it (Acts xvi. 6), about the latter end of the year 50, He visited them again (Acts xviii. 23) in the year 54; and he seems to have written this epistle before that visit. He had reason therefore to wonder that their sentiments were so quickly changed, and that such warm affections as they then bore him (chap. iv. 14, 15) were so soon and so greatly alienated.

f I am him that called you by the grace of Christ.] If it be here considered that the expression in the original is ἐν χάριτι, that is by or through the grace of Christ, (as our translation renders it elsewhere, 2 Cor. i. 12; 2 Thess. ii. 16), and not not into the grace; there is no difficulty in admitting that the apostle Paul points out himself by him that called them (as he may likewise afterwards, chap. v. 8), nor is there any thing more assuming in it than in his speaking of himself as he that ministered the Spirit to them. Chap. iii. 5.

g Unto another gospel.] Mons. Saurin observes (Serm. Vol. XI. p. 46), that the Galatians were a colony of the Gauls that is, of the ancient inhabitants of France; who, says he, have been always reproached with taking impressions easily, and as easily suffering them to be effaced.

SECT.
i.Gal.
1. 7.

all : but this in short is the case, that there are some seducing and Pharisaical teachers, who, for their own unworthy ends, have gone about to trouble you with false insinuations, and are desirous to do their utmost to subvert and overthrow the gospel of Christ, which hath been preached to you in so pure and powerful a manner.

8 You know the doctrine that was first delivered to you under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit : and whatsoever may have been suggested, as if Peter and the other apostles, and even I myself, do sometimes preach up the works of the law, as necessary to be joined with faith in Christ for justification, let no such principles be admitted by you : but though we, or any other apostle, not excepting the most honourable and illustrious names, or even an angel from heaven^h, if that were possible, should preach any other gospel among you than that which we have already preached unto you, and confirmed by such apparent and uncontrouled miracles, let him not only be rejected, but pronounced an anathema, and be devoted to a perpetual and most dreadful curse.

9 Nor is it by any sudden flight of zeal that I express myself thus ; but as we have said but just before, so say I now again, and solemnly repeat it as my deliberate judgment, If any one, whatever, whether man or angel, preach any other gospel to you than that which ye have received already from our lips, and which indeed ye have been taught by us from Christ himself, let him be anathema, and look upon him with as much detestation as you would on the most execrable creature in the universe.

10 I speak with all this freedom from the sure consciousness of my own integrity : for after all that I have done and suffered for the truth, do I now solicit the favour of men, or of God? Do I endeavour in my ministry to ingratiate myself with men, or to approve myself to God? Or do I, in the general course of my conduct, seek to please and would pervert the gospel of Christ.

8 But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

9 As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

10 For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men?

^h Or an angel from heaven.] Some have imagined that the apostle here refers to the pretences which Cerinthus is said to have made to his receiving a revelation from the hand of an angel ; but I see no proof that this pretension was made so early, if indeed it were made at all.

i Solicit the favour of men, or of God?] Ἀνθρώπους περιθω, ἢ τὸν Θεόν ; It is by a great latitude that the Prussian version renders this, "The doctrine which I would here persuade, is it that of men or of God?" The connection seems to demonstrate that περιθω here signifies, seek to persuade or to degrade himself with the one or the other, though it be acknowledged to be a less common sense. Compare Acts xiii. 20 ; xiv. 19 ; xix, 26.

k In-men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ.

please men by a compliance with their prejudices or designs? I have no party-views, as I had formerly before I was converted (Acts ix. 1, 2), nor any intention to pursue the schemes and serve the purposes of men; for if indeed^k I yet pleased men, by soothing their humour and flattering their vanity, I should not be the servant of Christ; I should not deserve the name of a Christian, and much less that of a minister and an apostle, and must indeed change the whole system of my doctrine, if I would render it agreeable to human prejudices.

SECT.
I
G. II.
I. 10.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET us adore the name of that blessed Redeemer who gave Ver. himself a sacrifice for our sins: and may the consideration of his 4 gracious purpose in doing it have its efficacy, to deliver us from this present evil world, and to raise our hearts to that to which the Father hath exalted him, by whom he was raised from the 1 dead; to whom, for all the purposes of his grace in the whole 5 scheme of our redemption, be glory for ever and ever.

Let the remembrance of this compassionate Saviour, who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever engagé us to be stedfast in the profession of his religion, and to be upon our guard against all who would pervert the gospel. May his ministers especially be 7 exceeding cautious how they do any thing that looks like corrupting it; since such a dreadful anathema is pronounced against an 8, 9 apostle, or an angel, who should attempt it!

Who can be superior to every alarm on this head that considers the case of the Galatians, who, though they received the gospel from the lips of such an apostle as Paul, could be so soon 6 removed, and drawn aside to a quite different system? But God made a gracious provision for their being recovered, and confirmed in the primitive faith, by this epistle; which was intended also to be a security to us, that we might learn from hence the purity and simplicity of the Christian doctrine, and be established in the truth as it is in Jesus.

Let the ministers of Christ faithfully preach it, not as seeking to 10 please men, but that God who trieth the hearts; and who can only be pleased by an entire surrender of the soul to that system of truth and duty which he hath condescended to teach, and by a faith-

^k indeed.] That γὰρ is often used to signify indeed, see note q on Acts xix. 40,

Vol. III, p. 199.

SECT.
i.

faithful care to spread its genuine and salutary maxims as widely as they can, without any addition or diminution. To solicit the Ver. favour of men, and to endeavour to oblige them, by sacrificing 10 such sacred considerations to any of their prejudices and follies, is to act in a manner utterly unbecoming a servant of Christ; and so unworthy a conduct in such as bear the character of ministers, may justly provoke the indignation of their Divine Master to make them as contemptible as they suffer themselves to become unfaithful.

SECT. II.

To vindicate this doctrine to the Galatians, and to remove the prejudices that were raised against it, Paul shews them it was not received from men; and, as a proof of the Divine authority of his mission, gives some account of facts which immediately succeeded his conversion from a persecuting zeal against Christianity to the profession of it. Gal. I. 11, to the end.

GALATIANS I. 11.

SECT.
ii.Gal.
I. 11.

SOME have indeed attempted to reflect upon my doctrine, and to depreciate the authority of my commission as an apostle: but I certify you brethren, and declare in the most determinate language I am capable of using, that whatever my enemies, who herein are yours likewise, may insinuate to the contrary, the gospel which has every where been preached by me, is not according to the tradition or invention of man, nor in any way adulterated and debased to suit the relish, or to favour the prejudices, of those to 12 whom it was to be delivered. For I neither received my commission to preach it from the authority or interposition of any man whatever, nor was I taught [it] by any written memoirs, or any other human method of instruction^a; but in a most extraordinary and miraculous way I was enlightened in it, and authorized to preach it,

GAL. I. 11.

BUT I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me, is not after man.

12 For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it but

^a Nor was I taught it, &c.] If it should be objected here, that Ananias would undoubtedly instruct Paul in the principles of the gospel before he baptized him, it may be replied, not only that Ananias was no such considerable person that Paul should be suspected by the Galatians to have been modelled by him; but that it seems, when Ananias first came to him, Paul was so well acquainted with the principles of Christianity, which he had been instructed in by revelation during the three days of his blindness, that Ananias could not judge it necessary to instruct him as a catechumen; which is the more probable, as it appears the Lord had told him, Paul was before acquainted by a vision with the purpose of his coming to him. See Acts ix. 12.

but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

it, by the immediate revelation of Jesus Christ himself, who communicated to me by inspiration the knowledge of salvation by faith in him, and sent me forth to publish the glad tidings of the gospel.

SECT.

II

GAL.

I. 12.

13 For ye have heard of my conversation in time past, in the Jews religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God and wasted it:

This you already know, though I touch upon it again as a truth of so great importance: for you undoubtedly have heard of my conversation and character in time past, particularly in my youthful days, and to the happy time when I became acquainted with the gospel; that I was such a violent bigot in the profession of Judaism, and so implacable an enemy to the followers of Christ, that I unmeasurably persecuted with the most insatiable rage the church of God, which I now esteem it my greatest honour to edify and serve, though I was then intent upon its ruin, and ravaged it, with all the fury of a beast of prey. And such was my regard for all the Jewish rites and customs, that I made proficiency in the knowledge and practice of Judaism, beyond many of my own nation, [who were] my equals in age, and of the same standing with myself in the study of the law; being more abundantly and passionately zealous for the hereditary maxims and traditions of my fathers, on which the Pharisaic sect lays so much stress. But

14 And profited in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers.

15 But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, when at length it pleased God, who in the secret purposes of his mercy had set apart and separated me to this office from my mother's womb (as he did Jeremiah to that of a prophet, Jer. i. 5), having determined to employ me as a minister of his gospel; and who afterwards called [me] by such an astonishing display and energy of his grace, while I was actually engaged in opposition to his cause and interest; When it pleased him, I say, to reveal by vision and inspiration his Son Christ Jesus in me, and thus to give me a discovery of the glories of his person, and of his righteousness and grace, that I might not only know him for my own salvation; but also in due time, when Providence should open a convenient way, might preach him among the 16 To reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I con-

Gentiles, as well as among the Jews, to whom my

^b In Judaism.] Mr. L'Enfant well observes that this does not signify the religion originally taught by Moses, but that which was practised among the Jews at this time, and much of it built upon the tradition of the elders.

^c That I might preach him among the Gentiles.] This was undoubtedly the scheme

SECT.
ii.
Gal.
I. 16.

my addresses were at first confined ; immediately my heart was overpowered, and all my prejudices so entirely removed, that I conferred not with flesh and blood^a, and stood not to consider what would be most subservient to my worldly interest, or to consult with any mortal man about engaging in the work to which I had so clear a call. Nor did I at that time go up to Jerusalem to them that were apostles before me, to be instructed more particularly in the doctrines I should preach, that there might be no inconsistencies between us, or to apply to them for a commission to perform my office: but, having entered on my ministry, and preached the word at Damascus (Acts ix. 20), I went for a while into Arabia, where I could have no opportunity of being taught by any man, as none of the apostles had been there before me ; and from thence I returned again to Damascus, where I boldly declared the necessity of believing in Christ for salvation, even in the presence of those Jews whom I knew to be most strongly prejudiced against that important doctrine.

18 Then at length, after three years from the time of my conversion, I went up to Jerusalem to visit and converse with Peter, by whom, when he had heard from Barnabas an account of my

I conferred not with flesh and blood :

17 Neither went I up to Jerusalem, to them which were apostles before me ; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus.

18 Then after three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, scheme of providence concerning Paul, who was accordingly distinguished by the character of the apostle of the Gentiles ; but if his conversion happened, as we suppose, about the year 35, and Peter's preaching to Cornelius in the year 39, then, since it is incontestably evident that the Gentiles first heard the gospel by the mouth of Peter, it would follow that Paul did not at first understand the full extent of his commission, and therefore, when he first began to preach, confined his labours to the synagogues at Damascus, which is indeed intimated, Acts ix. 20—22.

^a Immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood.] Dr. Wells and some others understand this as if the apostle had said, "Immediately after the recovery of my sight, without conferring with any man in the world, or so much as applying to Ananias himself for advice, I retired by Divine direction into the desert of Arabia ; where, after some time spent in devotion, I had a full revelation made to me of the most important facts and doctrines of Christianity [which some suppose to be the rapture referred to, 2 Cor. xii. 3] and then, after my return from thence, preached at Damascus for the first time." (See Wells's Geog. Vol. III. p. 275.) And Mr. Locke insists that with here does not refer to his immediately engaging in the work of the ministry without applying for advice to any man, but to his going into Arabia.—But the same word is used by Luke in his history of the Acts, who, without taking any notice of Paul's departure into Arabia, says, that after he recovered strength, he tarried certain days at Damascus, and (with) immediately preached Christ in the synagogues. Acts ix. 19, 20. So that it seems most probable to me, that, after his conversion, Paul was so well instructed in the knowledge of the gospel by the revelation that was then made to him, that he immediately began, without consulting any man, to preach the word at Damascus, before he went from thence into Arabia ; which is most suitable to the natural order of the words, and best agrees with the account of his first entering on his ministry in the Acts. See Vol. III. sect. xx. note h, p. 52.

ter, and abode with him fifteen days.

my conversion and my preaching at Damascus, I was cordially received as one whom the Lord had called; and I abode there with him at his house but fifteen days, to have the pleasure of discoursing with him on the mutual success of our ministry, and not with the least view of receiving any farther authority from him. But 19 I saw no one of the apostles then besides, except it were James, the brother or near kinsman of the Lord Jesus; for all the rest of that sacred society were absent at that time on their respective missions.

SECT.
II.
Gal.
I. 18.

19 But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother.

20 Now the things which I write unto you, behold, before God, I lie not.

Now with respect to all these circumstances, 20 [as to] the things which I write unto you, you may give the most entire credit to them, how little soever they may consist with some reports that have been artfully spread abroad concerning me; for behold I solemnly profess to you before God that I do not lie or falsify in the least degree, but with all possible frankness and sincerity speak what I assuredly know to be the most certain truth.

21 Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia;

Afterwards departing from Jerusalem, I came 21 into the regions of Syria; and from thence I passed into my native country of Cilicia, to exercise my ministry there and to bring, if possible, those among whom I was born to the knowledge of Christ and of the doctrine of salvation by him. And during all this time, as 22 I had only just passed through their country in my way, I was unknown by face to the several churches of Christ which were in Judea, as well as to the greater part of my brethren the apostles: so that I could learn nothing of the contents of the gospel from any of them: But only they 23 had 22 And was unknown by face unto the churches of Judea, which were in Christ.

23 But they had heard

e James, the brother, or near kinsman of the Lord Jesus.] He was the son of Alphaeus and Mary, the sister of the virgin, so that James was cousin-german to Jesus.—This visit to Jerusalem, (which is mentioned Acts ix. 26, & seq.), as it was three years after his conversion, appears to have been in the year 38; and, after Paul had preached so long before, it cannot be supposed he was instructed how to preach the gospel in the short stay he now made at Jerusalem, where he saw only two of the apostles.

f Before God, I do not lie.] A revelation of the facts and doctrines of Christianity immediately from Jesus Christ himself, without the assistance of any human teacher, so wonderfully agreeing in all its branches with that which Christ had taught on earth both before and after his resurrection, was so extraordinary an event, and of so great importance to those whom St. Paul visited and to whom he wrote, that one cannot wonder he should think proper to assert it in so solemn a manner. We have great reason, while we read the attestation he has given to the truth of what he says, to acknowledge that it is of a piece with the many signs and wonders attending both his conversion and his ministry; which Mr. Lyttleton has so admirably illustrated in his Observations on the Conversion, &c. of St. Paul.

SECT. ii. had heard this wonderful account in general, which might well spread through all the land, which persecuted us in times past, now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed.

Gal. I. 23. that he who so cruelly persecuted us in times past to imprisonment and death, was become a convert to the victorious truth and grace of the gospel, so that he now preacheth the same Divine faith which he formerly ravaged and laid waste to the utmost of his power, and would, if possible, have totally destroyed and extirpated: And they glorified God in me.

24 And they glorified God in me.

And they glorified God on my account, as they well might, beholding in me so illustrious an instance of the power and sovereignty of his grace.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. LET us also, at this distance of time and country, join with them in glorifying God in the apostle; in adoring the grace that engaged him to preach the faith he would once have destroyed, and at length to add his own blood to that of the martyrs of Christ which he had shed. Still hath the great Head of the church the same omnipotent efficacy, the same ability to influence the heart, to overcome the strongest prejudices, and to turn bigots into true believers; and, rather than his church shall want its servants and its ornaments, he will find them among its most cruel enemies.

17, 18 Had the gospel been taught St. Paul by Ananias, or Peter, or any of the apostles, his readiness to receive it from such teachers, and to preach it at the certain expence of his reputation, his interest, and his life, would no doubt have ranked him among the most illustrious witnesses to the truth of Christianity. But this additional fact of an original revelation of the whole system of it to him independent of human teaching, deserves our admiration, and demands our praise.

15 God herein wrought according to the secret counsel of his Divine will, and that purposes by which he had separated Paul from the womb. In vain was it opposed by the prevailing prejudices of his education, or by the violence of his zeal for Judaism, and that proficiency in it by which he had eclipsed so many of his contemporaries, and those of his own nation. All his zeal for the traditions of his fathers gave way to a yet greater zeal for a nobler object; a zeal, which carried him through Arabia and Syria, through Judea and Cilicia, and prevented him, in one sense as well as another, from consulting with flesh and blood, from being influenced by any selfish worldly views, or giving heed to any man's opinion.

Adored be the grace that anniated and supported him in overcoming every difficulty; and having so miraculously furnished him for the great work that he was called to, made him so gloriously successful in it. So may we be enabled to surmount every obstacle! and so may we be taught, as to those things which we have most highly esteemed, to count them all but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, and to grudge no labour, self-denial, or suffering, by which the gospel may be any way promoted or adorned, and a testimony given of our faithful subjection to it?

SECT.
ii.

SECT. III.

The Apostle, in prosecution of that design on which he entered in the preceding section, informs the Galatians of his journey from Antioch to Jerusalem, and of his interview with the apostles there, fourteen years after his conversion. Gal. II. 1—10.

Gal. II. 1.

THEN fourteen years after I went up again to Jerusalem, with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also.

GALATIANS II. 1.

I HAVE just been telling you, that quickly after my journey from Damascus to Jerusalem I traversed the regions of Syria and Cilicia, being then in a great measure unknown to the churches in Judea, otherwise than by my general character, and what they had heard of the surprising change wrought in me; I am now to add, that about fourteen years after my conversion^a, when I had preached the word some time at Antioch, I went up again to Jerusalem, with Barnabas, to consult with the church there upon the grand question of the freedom of the Gentiles from the Mosaic law, (Acts xv. 2.) and I took Titus also with me^b, though he was uncircumcised

SECT.
iii.Gal.
II. 1.

^a Fourteen years after.] As it is certain that Paul saw both Peter and James in that journey to Jerusalem of which we have an account, Acts xv. 4, & seq. it is very natural to suppose he would mention it here, and that this is the journey which he now refers to (compare Vol. III. sect. xxxiii. note a, p. 122, and ver. 9, of this chapter;) and as we have found reason to believe that the council then held at Jerusalem did not happen later than the year 49, it seems reasonable to reckon the fourteen years here mentioned from his conversion, and not from the conclusion of those travels through Syria and Cilicia which he had mentioned ver. 21. of the foregoing chapter; for as we cannot suppose him to have finished his tour through those countries in much less than four years after his conversion, such a computation will bring back that ever memorable event to the year 51, which was two years before Christ's death.—He does not here mention his going up to Jerusalem in the year 43, with what had been collected at Antioch for the poor brethren in Judea (of which we read Acts xi. 29, 30; xii. 25. (because he then saw none of the apostles; and the question here was about the opportunity as he might have had of conversing with them.

^b Took Titus also with me.] This is the earliest mention that we meet with of Titus; for he is no where mentioned by St. Luke in the Acts, and what we read of him in the second epistle to the Corinthians, (2 Cor. ii. 13; vii. 6, 14; viii. 6,) as well as in that to Timothy, (2 Tim. iv. 10,) was later by some years. He is here

SECT.

iii.

Gal.

II. 2

uncircumcised, that I might therein shew my Christian liberty, and assert that of my Gentile brethren, against those who were so zealous in their attempts to invade it. But I then went up, not to receive instructions in my work from any of the apostles there, or to be confirmed in my office by them, but by the appointment of a special revelation^c, and to subserve a very different and important purpose, in which the peace and liberty of the church were much concerned. And when I was arrived there, and had the pleasure of meeting my brethren, I explained at large and freely laid before them the contents of that gospel which I preach among the Gentiles, not only as far as it relates to the exemption of the Gentile converts from any obligation to observe the Mosaic law, but likewise with respect to the deliverance of the Jews themselves from the bondage of it: which gave them an opportunity of seeing how fully I was instructed in the mind of Christ, and how little I needed any farther teachings from them. But this account however I gave, not in a public assembly, but privately^a to those who were of greatest note and reputation in the church; lest some should have been found who would have cavilled at it, and by abusing some of the particulars,

2 And I went up by revelation, and communicated unto them that gospel which I preach among the Gentiles, but privately to them which were of reputation, lest by any means said to have been a Greek, (ver. 3,) and being born of Gentile parents was not circumcised; but where or when he was converted is uncertain: only we may conclude he was converted by St. Paul, from the title he gives him of his own son after the common faith, (Tit. i. 4;) and as he now took Titus with him from Antioch to Jerusalem, so he employed him afterwards on several occasions, and appears to have regarded him with great affection and endearment.

^c Went up by revelation.] Dr. Whitby supposes in his note upon this place, that as St. Paul had said before that he received the gospel which he preached by the revelation of Jesus Christ, (chap. i. 12.) he only means by what he now declares, that he went up according to the revelation which he then received, and in this journey acted suitably to that revelation which had constituted him the apostle of the Gentiles, telling the church at Jerusalem what things he had done among the Gentiles in pursuance of it. But it seems rather to be here implied (as I have observed elsewhere, Vol. III. sect. xxxiii. note a, p. 122,) that in sending Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem, the church at Antioch were directed by a revelation made, either immediately to Paul himself, or to some other of the prophets there, relating to the important business they were sent upon.

^d But privately.] I have elsewhere shewn at large, that the the secret here referred to was not, as has been so confidently asserted, his preaching the gospel to the idolatrous Gentiles,² which was a fact it cannot be supposed he should endeavour to conceal from any: but the point which he communicated thus in private, was the exemption, not of the Gentile converts only, but of the Jews themselves, from the observance of the Mosaic ceremonies, as what they were no longer bound to under the gospel, any farther than as the peace and edification of others were concerned.² On this as (I have shewn) there were sufficient reasons why he should choose to be on the retire at present; yet when the purpose of his journey had been answered, and he had left Jerusalem, he used great freedom afterwards in publicly declaring his opinion. See Vol. III. sect. xxxiii. note d, p. 123, and sect. xxxv. note a, p. 135.

means I should run, or had run in vain.

particulars, would have represented us as differing from each other; in consequence of which it might be feared, I should hereafter run, or hitherto had run in vain, as the good effects of my future or past labours would have been lessened or obstructed by the increase of their prejudices; and in particular, the intent of my journey to Jerusalem might have been hindered, had I then opened my thoughts too fully in the presence of a large and promiscuous assembly.

3 But neither Titus who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumcised :

But though I did not think myself obliged in 3 sincerity to make a public declaration of all that was in my breast on that subject, yet I did not take any step that looked like giving up the liberty of my Gentile brethren : for neither Titus who was then with me, being a Greek, and still continuing in a state of uncircumcision, was compelled to submit to that rite, though so many maintained that it was absolutely necessary to be circumcised in order to salvation, (Acts xv.

4 And that because of false brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty, which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage :

1, 5.) And I was more averse to [that], and 4 rather favoured the disinclination of Titus to it because of the false brethren [that were] artfully introduced, not only into the church, but the ministry, upon a general apprehension of their piety, without being sufficiently informed of their principles and tempers : who had before slipped in among us at Antioch, to spy out and make their ill natured remarks upon our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus with regard to these things, that by imposing on the church there, which consisted chiefly of Gentile converts, they might find means to bring us into a servile bondage to the law of Moses, by urging the necessity of submitting to the grievous and painful yoke of its ceremonies : To whom, 5 whatever court some thought proper to make to them, or whatever personal condescensions even I myself might sometimes yield to, (1 Cor. ix.

5 To whom we gave place by subjection, no not for an hour; that the truth of the gospel might

19, 20,)

e Neither Titus—was compelled, &c.] This conduct of Paul with respect to Titus, in not submitting to his being circumcised, when it was insisted on as necessary to salvation, is very well consistent with what he afterwards did without constraint, to promote the circumcission of Timothy in different circumstances, (Acts xvi. 3,) as is shewn in the note on that text, Vol. III. sect xxxvi. note a, p. 159.

not how far so late a writer as Epiphanius is to be credited in affirming (as he does, Her. xxviii. that Cerinthus the heretic insisted absolutely on the Jewish observances, and having raised up several Jews into a most violent opposition against St. Peter, on his first going to the Gentiles (Acts xi. 2, 3.) contended afterwards at Antioch and Jerusalem for the necessity of circumcising, (Acts xv. 1, 5.)

f Because of the false brethren.] I know

g But

scri.
iii.

Gal.
II. 2.

secr.
iii.

Gal.
II. 5.

19, 20,) we did not either at Antioch, or at Jerusalem, give place by any compliance or subjection to their insolent demands for so much as an hour ; but always entered our open protest against their principles, that the truth of the gospel might continue with you, and you might rest assured, by all the proofs we could give, that the Christian religion was sufficient for justification and salvation, without the super-addition of the Jewish rituals.

6 This was my conduct at Jerusalem on this grand occasion, nor was it upon the whole disapproved by those of my brethren for whom I had the greatest regard. But even of those who indeed appeared to be the most considerable and of the greatest note and eminence g, however some would set them up above me, as having conversed with Christ here on earth, and been apostles long before me, I must needs say, that whatsoever advantage they had, or how great soever they formerly were as to any personal privileges, it makes no difference as to me, nor does at all affect my character, or set me upon this account beneath them as to my knowledge in the gospel (since God, who called me as well as them to the apostleship, accepteth no man's person, so as out of partial favour to constitute him supreme in his church, and Lord of his brethren, but employs whom he will to be apostles, and qualifies them for it in what way he pleases, as it is manifest he hath done with reference to me,) for they who were of greatest note and reputation, when I engaged in conference with them, added nothing further to me, nor were capable of informing me of any thing which I had might continue with you.

6 But of these who seemed to be somewhat (whatsoever they were it maketh no matter to me : God accepteth no man's person ;) for they who seemed to be somewhat, in conference added nothing to me.

g But of those who appeared to be considerable.] The apostle had before declared what was his conduct with respect to the false brethren, and now proceeds to those who were of real note and reputation : and there is no such difficulty in the construction here, as that there should be a necessity of supplying any thing to complete the sense, or of supposing an ellipsis of the article a at the beginning of the verse, which instead of removing a difficulty, would only involve the construction, which is obvious enough as it stands, if the parenthesis be rightly placed, so as only to include (God accepteth no man's person) and without any supplement or transposition, the sense of the whole verse is easy.—And as there is no doubt but a δουλοῦς in this verse, as well as in verse 2 and 9, is to be understood of those who really were men of note and eminence, and does indeed refer to the apostles themselves (who are expressly named in ver. 9,) however it may be a litera translation, it carries in it to an English ear (as Mr. Locke observes,) too diminishing a sense, to render it as if St. Paul had only spoke of them as those who seemed to be somewhat, and who seemed to be pillars. I have therefore rendered it as expressive of the character of those who indeed appeared to be considerable, and were confessedly of the first rank, and pillars of the church.

SECT.
iii.Gal.
II. 7.

7 But contrariwise, when they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter;

8 (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me towards the Gentiles :)

9 And when James, Cephas and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision.

had not before fully learned by immediate revelation from Christ. But on the contrary, far from pretending to give me any new instructions, or to invest me with any new powers, they recognized my full title to the apostleship in all its extent; and plainly seeing that I was intrusted with the chief management and direction of the gospel of the uncircumcision, or of the mission to the Gentiles, as Peter was [with that] which was especially directed to those of the circumcision; (For indeed it was very apparent, that he who wrought so effectually in Peter, to qualify him for the apostleship of the circumcision wrought effectually also by the same miraculous powers and endowments in me, to fit me for my mission to the Gentiles;) My worthy associates in this high office seeing this, and knowing the grace that was given to me, and how remarkably I was furnished for the great work in which I was engaged by the extraordinary favour I had received from Christ, James, and Cephas and John, who appeared to be, and were indeed, the pillars of the church, on which that at Jerusalem especially rested, as the great ornament and support of it under Christ, and on whose pious labours and wise conduct so much of the interest of the gospel in general depended, willingly gave to me and Barnabas my companion, the right-hands, in token of receiving us into full fellowship and apostleship with them; that we [might go] and preach, as we had done before, to the Gentiles, wherever it should please the great Head of the church to direct us, and that they for the present would continue their endeavours to promote Christianity among those of the circumcision^h, till the whole harvest of the Jews in those parts should be gathered in: Only [they proposed] that we should be mindful of the poor Christians in Judea, so as to make collections in their favour, as we proceeded in our progress through the Gentile churches; which very thing I also of my own accord was forward to do with all the diligence I could from the 10 Only they would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do.

^h They for the present would continue, &c.] I express it with this caution, because there is no reason to believe that the labours of Peter, James, and John were entirely appropriated to those of the circumcision; as, on the other hand, we are assured that those of the apostle Paul were not confined to the uncircumcised Gentiles; for we often find him preaching to the Jews, and indeed, wherever he came, he proposed the gospel in the first place to them.

SECT.
iii.

the sincere affection I had for them, and the concern I had for their encouragement and support, under the frequent sufferings they endured from their oppressive and rapacious enemies.

IMPROVEMENT.

WARM and eager as the temper of St. Paul naturally was, it must certainly give us great pleasure to observe in how prudent and steady a manner he conducted himself when once engaged in the sacred work of the Christian ministry and apostleship.
 Ver. 3—5 With what integrity and resolution did he behave on the one hand, that he would not give place for an hour to the false brethren, who had slipped in among his converts to spy out and subvert their liberty? And on the other, with what caution, that he might not frustrate the purposes of his own ministry, by carrying that which was in general the cause of truth, of liberty, and justice to an excess? Thus also let us act, holding the truth in love and in prudence, and labouring to do all the good we can with as little offence as possible.

While we are contending for the liberty of Christians, against the imposition of things which at best are indifferent, we may possibly be obliged to dispute the point with some who are persons of worth and eminence; but God accepteth no man's person. We may give them all the honour that is due to their wisdom, their piety, and their station, without yielding up what ought to be dearer to us than any human approbation or friendship, the dictates of our conscience as in the sight of God.

Persons of true steadiness and candor, such as to deserve to be esteemed pillars of the church, will not suffer themselves to be so borne down by popular prejudices as to disown their brethren, whom God had honoured with the ministry as well as themselves, because they exercise it in some diversity of forms; but will be willing (so far as they can) to give them the right-hand of fellowship, and will perhaps wish to be able to do it more entirely and openly than some human constitutions will admit.

In this however may we all agree, after the example of this blessed apostle, ever to do what we can to promote mutual charity among different denominations of Christians; to be expressed by a readiness to bear one another's burdens, and to afford liberal relief as providence gives opportunity. And we shall find, that as a disunion of hearts adds weight to the least cause of division, so fervent and unfeigned love will by mutual condescension and indulgence heal the breach, or happily prevent its most fatal consequences.

SECT. IX.

The Apostle gives an account of his opposing Peter publicly at Antioch, and standing up in defence of the liberty of the church from Jewish impositions. Gal. II. 11, to the end.

GAL. II. 11.

BUT when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed.

12 For before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles: but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision.

13 And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch

GALATIANS II. 11.

I HAVE been telling you how entirely I agreed with the chief apostles of the circumcision, in the interview which I had with them at Jerusalem, when that decree was made in favour of the converted Gentiles, by which they were declared free from any obligation to observe the rituals of the Mosaic law. But when Peter was come to Antioch^a, after Barnabas and I were returned thither (Acts xv. 30), I opposed him to the face, because indeed he was so far left to his own spirit, as to behave in such a manner, that he very much deserved to be blamed. For before some Jewish zealots, who were strict in the observation of those rituals, came from the apostle James who was then at Jerusalem, he did upon all occasions eat and converse freely with the Gentiles there, who had embraced the gospel and had not submitted to circumcision; but when they were come, he withdrew from that freedom of converse, and separated himself from them, as if he had thought them unclean, though the Lord had so expressly taught him the contrary (see Acts x. 28); and this he did, not from any change in his sentiments and apprehension of things, but purely as fearing them of the circumcision, and being unwilling to displease them, thinking their censures of much greater importance than they really were.

And I thought it the more necessary to take public notice of it, as the other converted Jews, who had before used the like freedom, dissembled their true sentiments also, by a weak conformity

^a When Peter was come to Antioch. It is a just remark of Mons. Saurin (Serm. Vol. XI. p. 49,) that Father Harduin seems to have been solicitous to increase the number of his chimeras as much as possible [and more I never met with in any learned author than in him] by adopting the pious frauds of some of the ancients, who, to defend themselves from Porphyry's objection against Christianity from this error in the conduct of Peter, denied it to be Peter the apostle who was here spoken of, and interpreted it of another Cephas, whom they pretended to be one of the Seventy: an hypothesis as unnecessary as it is improbable. See Hard. Diss. in loc.

SECT.
IV.Gal.
II. 13.

formity with him in this scrupulous avoiding their brethren; so that even Barnabas too, though so honest and worthy a man, and one of the messengers who had passed with me between Antioch and Jerusalem, and been acknowledged there as an apostle of the Gentiles, was himself in some measure carried away with their dissimulation; which could not but give great grief and offence to the Gentile Christians, who had been so particularly committed to his care as well as mine. But when I saw that they did not in this affair walk uprightly, according to the truth and design of the gospel, which indeed taught the contrary, I said to Peter in the presence of [them] all^b, when a numerous assembly was met together.

I must speak to thee, Peter, with the freedom of a Christian brother and fellow-apostle, on a particular of thy conduct which hath given public offence: let me then ask thee, If thou, being a Jew, and having been brought by circumcision under the strongest engagements to fulfil the whole law, livest frequently (as we have many of us seen) after the manner of the Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, making no scruple to converse freely with the Gentiles without conforming to the ceremonial customs of the Jews; why dost thou now, by a change in thy conduct, as it were compel the Gentiles to live as do the Jews? Is it not at least as lawful for them to neglect the Jewish observances as it was for thee to do it but a few days ago? We [who are] by nature, that is, by birth and education, Jews, and so entitled to many peculiar privileges^c, and who are not unclean, profligate, and abandoned

^b I said to Peter in the presence of [them] all.] Had this been matter only of private offence, to be sure Paul would have known that duty required him to expostulate with Peter privately upon it before he had brought it before such an assembly; but as it was a public affair, in which great numbers were so sensibly affected, this method was most proper. Probably this happened after public worship; and it would seem the less surprising, considering the conferences which used to be held in the Jewish synagogues before the assembly was broke up; of which many instances still occur to those excellent persons in Germany and the neighbouring regions, who are engaged in a mission to the Jews, much that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation.

14 But when I saw that they walked not uprightly, according to the truth of the gospel, I said unto Peter before them all,—

—If thou being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?

15 We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles, which may Divine grace succeed!—It is a very just observation of Mr. Jeffery here, that had any imposture been carried on, the contention of these two great managers would probably have been an occasion of discovering it.—That no objection against the authority of Peter, as an apostle and inspired writer, can be derived from this dispute, will follow on the principles laid down in our essay on inspiration, Vol. III. See also note f, on Acts xv. 7, Vol. III. p. 124.

^c We who are by nature Jews, &c.] Mr. L'Enfant thinks Paul speaks of himself in the plural number, and rests the matter on his own practice: but to me it appears evident he meant to include the Jewish abandoned *sinner*s of the Gentiles that walk in idolatry and all kinds of wickedness; We, I say, knowing in our own hearts, and having been effectually convinced, that a man is not justified by the works of the Mosaic law, but only by the faith of Jesus Christ, and cannot be accepted in the sight of God but by cordially and truly believing in him; even we ourselves have taken refuge here, and, giving up all confidence in the law for justification, have believed in Jesus Christ to this great purpose, that we might thus be justified, as I said before, by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: this is the method we that are Jews have taken, as being thoroughly made sensible that it was absolutely necessary we should do so; wherefore it must be evident that no flesh living, whether he be Jew or Gentile, shall or can be justified by the works of the law, since none is capable of fully answering its demands, or can pretend to have paid an universal and unerring obedience to it. Judge then how absurd it would be to urge those who never were, like us, under such obligations to the law, to come under them, when we ourselves have been obliged to give up our expectations from hence, and to have recourse to something so much higher and nobler. But, after all, if 17 seeking to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found sinners, if we are still in an unpardonable state under the guilt and power of sin, and notwithstanding all that Christ has done, his gospel and grace be not sufficient to justify us, unless there be something superadded to it by the law of Moses, what [is] Christ then the minister of sin, and not of justification? Must it not follow that he is so, if he hath introduced an imperfect dispensation, which will not sufficiently ensure the happiness of those that follow it? Yea, doth he not indeed teach sin, if justification cannot be obtained without the law, in teaching men to renounce all dependance upon it, as it is certain by his gospel he doth? But God forbid that any thing should ever be insinuated so much to the dishonour of God and of our glorious Redeemer.

16 Knowing that a man is so justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified.

Thus

Jewish believers in general, and to argue from the virtual confession they had all made of the insufficiency of their own obedience to the law, if considered as a ground of justification,

SECT.
IV.Gal.
II. 13.

Thus I addressed myself to Peter on this public occasion, and shewed that the observance of the ceremonial law was not to be imposed on Christians. Now if I build again the things which I then destroyed, and insist (as some would charge me) on the necessity of the works of the law for justification, I in effect condemn what I then did, and, setting up the very principles which I opposed, I acknowledge myself to have been a transgressor in attempting to pull them down^d: but I am so far from acting such an inconsistent part, that I declare myself entirely in the same sentiments which I then publicly professed. For though I was once so zealous a bigot for the rights of the law, yet now, upon the whole, I through the law am dead to the law; the more I consider its nature and tenor, the more I am convinced that it is absolutely impossible that I or any man living should be justified by it, and therefore I give up all such expectations: and yet the effect of it is, not my being a lawless licentious creature, but quite the contrary; it is, that I might live to God in a state of favour and acceptance with him, animated by nobler views and hopes than the law could give, and therefore engaged to a more generous, sublime, and extensive obedience than it was capable of producing. For I am crucified with Christ, and have such a sense of his dying love upon my heart, and of the excellency of that method of justification and salvation which he hath accomplished on the cross, that I am in consequence of it dead to all the allurements of the world, and to all views of obtaining righteousness and life by the law; nevertheless, I live a new and spiritual life, in a conformity to the will of God, and feel the comforts of it in my heart; yet, to speak properly, it is not I that live, not I my former or my present-

^d I acknowledge myself a transgressor.] Mr. L'Enfant seems to consider this verse as a continuation of Paul's speech at Antioch. He would render and connect it thus; "On the contrary, so far are we from being made sinners by neglecting justification by the law, that, if we taught the necessity of its works, we should become transgressors in building again the things that we have destroyed." But if this interpretation was to be admitted, we should not only find it hard to clear up the argument, but must, I think, suppose the following verses likewise a part of the speech

18 For if I build again the things which I destroyed I make myself a transgressor.

19 For I through the law am dead to the law that I might live unto God.

^e 20 I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless, I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the to Peter; which would make them much less pertinent and natural than if we suppose them the overflowings of Paul's devout heart in addressing the Galatians.—His speech to Peter rather seems to have gone no farther than the foregoing verse; and yet is often used with such a latitude that we may take it in the beginning of this verse to signify Now, and so consider Paul as shewing here, that whatsoever some insinuated to his prejudice, there was no inconsistency in his doctrine and practice with what he had then so openly declared.

the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me.

self, by any strength or power of my own, but it is Christ that by the energy of his word and Spirit liveth in me, and continually influences and quickens my soul to every good action and affection: and the life which I now live in the flesh, while surrounded with the snares and sorrows of mortality, I live in the continual exercise of that faith which [is] established in and centered upon the perfect righteousness of the Son of God; on whom alone it is that I depend for justification, and am daily deriving new influences from him, by realizing and affectionate views of that gracious and condescending Saviour, who loved me, and that to such an astonishing degree, that he delivered himself up to torments and death for me, that he might procure my redemption and salvation.

SECT.
IV.
Gal.
II. 20.

21 I do not frustrate the grace of God: for if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain.

So that you see upon the whole, when you²¹ consider all the tenor of my conduct, as well as my conference with Peter at Antioch, that I do not, like many others, frustrate the grace of God in Christ, and render void that method of salvation which the gospel hath revealed, which a behaviour like that which I reprov'd, if pursued into all its consequences, must appear to do: for if righteousness [come] by the law, and that made a sufficient provision for our being justified and accepted in the sight of God, then there was no necessity of the grace of God in giving his Son for us, and Christ is dead in vain, since he died to redeem us from the curse of the law, as being utterly hopeless and irrecoverable by that dispensation alone.

IMPROVEMENT.

It is a most generous and worthy Spirit that was shewn by the apostle Paul on this occasion, in his being so ready to stand up for Ver. Christian liberty, and to reprove even Peter himself, though so¹¹ honoured and beloved a brother, when he acted a cowardly and inconsistent part. He did not meanly censure him to others, and endeavour by private insinuations to lessen his character; but by his openly rebuking him he shewed himself a sincere friend, and took the most effectual method to prevent the ill consequences of his dissimulation, and at the same time to *recover his brother to a*¹⁴ more worthy and consistent conduct.

How little there is in all this passage that looks like any pecu-

SECT.
iv.

Ver. liar authority assumed on the part of St. Peter, or acknowledged by St. Paul, every unprejudiced reader will easily observe: and perhaps God might suffer this great apostle of the circumcision thus to fall, and to be thus corrected by the apostle of the Gentiles, the more effectually to discountenance those arrogant and groundless claims of the pretended successors of Peter to supremacy and infallibility, which have introduced so much confusion and infamy into the church.

- We may well rejoice in the review of a passage which so strongly asserts Christian liberty on the one hand, and exemplifies the very life of Christian grace on the other. Let it ever be retained 16 in our memories, that we are justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law, and may our conduct be agreeable to the doctrine we profess, giving up all expectations inconsistent
 17 with this decision, yet ever remembering that Christ is not the minister of sin. Let faith in him engage us; whilst dead to the law as 19 a covenant of works, to be observant of it as a rule of life, and so to live to God as those who are still under a law to Christ, (1 Cor. ix. 21); and, animated by the influences of his grace, may our souls feel more and more of the efficacy of his death, who loved us and gave himself for us.
- 20 Strongly indeed will the affecting consideration of the death of Christ impress our hearts, when we are conscious of our interest and concern in it. May the impression last through life; and may we remember that we are not merely to make one solemn address to our adorable Redeemer, committing by an act of faith our souls into his hands; but that our faith is daily to be renewing its views of him, that so the life which we now live in the flesh, in the midst of so many vanities and dangers, may be conducted by the continual influence of this principle. May we therefore daily regard him as our Instructor and Governor, our Atonement and Intercessor, our Example and Strength; our Guardian 21 and Forerunner: and, in proportion to the degree in which such views as these prevail, the grace of God, instead of being frustrated, will be the more admired and esteemed; and as it was impossible that righteousness should be attainable by the law; it will appear Christ hath not died in vain, but that his death was necessary to procure our justification, and is the only sure foundation of our faith and hope.

SECT. V.

The Apostle reproves the Galatians for their instability with regard to the important doctrine of justification by faith; which he further confirms from the instance of Abraham, who was thus justified, and in whose blessing we share, through the redemption Christ has wrought out for us. Gal. III. 1—14.

GAL. III. 1.

O FOOLISH Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth crucified among you?

GALATIANS III. 1.

THESSE are the real sentiments of my heart which I have now laid before you, and you were formerly taught them at large. But O ye thoughtless Galatians, after all the instructions I have given you, how little do they prevail in your breasts? May I not even ask you, who hath by some fallacious fatal charm enchanted you^a, and as it were dazzled the eyes of your mind with the vain glitterings of sophistry and delusive arts of evasion, that you should not go on to obey the truth so solemnly inculcated upon you; even you, before whose eyes Jesus Christ crucified hath been so evidently set forth and strongly delineated among you^b, in the most affectionate representations of his word and ordinances; One would have imagined these lively views should for ever have secured your fidelity to him and have fortified your hearts against every insinuation injurious to the honour of his cross. But methinks even now the matter might be brought to a short issue: and to this purpose, there is this only I would learn of you, Did ye receive the Spirit in its extraordinary operations in and upon you, by a regard to the works of the Mosaic law, or any other law, on which you might depend for justification as a matter of legal claim? or were you made partakers of it by the hearing of the gospel, proposing the method of

SECT.
V.Gal.
III. 1.

^c This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

^a Who hath enchanted you?] I know some would render εξαγαγὼν, Who hath excited your happiness? But as the Jewish zealots could not have any sense of the happiness of those christians they endeavoured to disturb, it is not, I think, so natural to refer their attempts to envy; and it is well known the word also signifies to enchant. It strongly expresses the unreasonable turn their minds had taken, so that one would imagine they had been deprived of the regular use even of their natural faculties.

^b Before whose eyes Jesus Christ crucified, &c.] There is no room to object that this is merely an argument to the passions; for in proportion to the affecting sense they had of the love of Christ in submitting to crucifixion for them, would be the rational sense of the obligations they were under to him, to preserve his gospel pure, and his church free and happy.

^c Did

SECT.

v.

Gal.

III. 2.

of justification by faith in the righteousness and grace of the Redeemer? If any of the new teachers that are come among you can work such miracles in proof of their tenets, and confer such gifts on their followers, you will be more excusable in hearkening to them than in present circumstances you can possibly be.

3 But are you indeed so inconsiderate as to need being reminded in this manner? Where is the benefit you can propose by turning to the law? Having begun in the Spirit, having known the spirituality, power, and energy of the glorious gospel, are ye now seeking to be made perfect by the flesh? or have you any expectation of attaining to a superior degree of perfection and excellency, by a submission to those carnal ordinances of the law which at first view appear to be so much beneath it, and to be altogether insufficient for it? If you are tempted to so great a fall as this, let me remind you of the difficulties you have already borne for Christianity; many of which have been brought upon you by the instigation of the Jews, whose hatred is so violent against it. Say then, my brethren, have ye suffered so many things in vain?^d Will you give up the benefit of all these sufferings, and lose in a great measure at least, the reward of them, by relinquishing what is so material in that scheme of doctrine you have been suffering for? Shall all that you have endured be thus in vain? if indeed [it be] yet in vain, which I am willing

3 Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?

4 Have ye suffered so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain,

^c Did you receive the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? There is no doubt but that it was on their becoming Christians that they received the Spirit; and therefore that it could not be ascribed to the law, which they were strangers to till afterwards, but must be owing to that faith in which they were instructed by the gospel on their embracing Christianity. Nor can it justly be objected that they still retained the Christianity by which the Spirit was received; for they were now perverted to a different system by their new teachers, and that which Paul had preached at first among them, when they received the Spirit, was a Christianity of which Judaism made no part.

^d Have ye suffered so many things in vain? Should it be said, "that, notwithstanding the Galatians were for adding the observation of the law to the gospel, it would not necessarily destroy their hopes as Christians, nor deprive them of the reward of that courage they had hitherto shewn in its defence:" yet it must be allowed that some degree of their reward might be lost, as it might derogate from their future glory, to have been through inconsideration, and prejudices rashly admitted, accessary, to the corruption and consequent obstruction of the gospel? and also, that as much persecution might be declined by admitting this mixture of Judaism, there was reason to fear that it was a regard to their own present ease and convenience that led them to it, (compare chap. v. 11, and vi. 12;) which was in a manner cancelling the good effect of their former resolution; and indeed any thing that looked like a sinful temporizing in those who had before been confessors for the truth, might occasion peculiar scandal, and endanger many more.

e Worketh

willing to hope it is not entirely, and that however your principles may have been shaken, yet God will not permit them to be quite overthrown.

SECT.
V.

Gal.
III 4,

5 He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

I know that your favourite teachers have⁵ many arts of address with which they endeavour to soothe you, and to conciliate your regards to themselves, while they would alienate them from me: but when you come to the most solid and authentic proofs of a Divine mission, have you not seen them wrought among you, in confirmation of the doctrine I delivered to you? He therefore that ministereth to you an extraordinary supply of the Spirit by the laying on of his hands and that worketh other evident and uncontroled miracles among you^e [doeth he it] by the works of the law, and in virtue of any commission he had received from God to inculcate the observation of the Mosaic precepts? or is it by the hearing of faith that he doeth it? Is it not evidently by that gospel which you have heard me preach, and which exhorts you to seek justification and salvation by faith? And will you then forsake a doctrine which has been so signally attested, and exchange it for one, the teachers of which have no such attestations to produce?

6 Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness.

And this method which the gospel proposeth⁶ is agreeable to the example which you have in the great father of the faithful; for even as you read of Abraham, (Gen. xv. 6.) long before he was circumcised, “that he believed God, relying on the promise that he made him, and it was imputed to him for righteousness;” it was set down to his account, as an evidence of his being a righteous person: *Know ye therefore,*⁷ and infer from hence, that as faith was the brightest part of the character of this illustrious patriarch, so all they who [are of faith], all that have the same principle working in their hearts, and engaging them to receive the gospel-dispensation, the same are, and shew themselves by a like disposition, to be, the children of Abraham, and 7 Know ye therefore, that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham.

^e Worketh miracles among you.] It is a just and important observation of Mr. Baxter here, that it was a great display of Divine Wisdom to suffer such contentions to arise thus early in the church as should make it necessary for the apostles to appeal to the miracles wrought before, and upon those who were afterwards in some degree alienated from them; that future ages might be convinced of the certainty of these miracles as matters of fact beyond all possibility of contradiction. See Baxter's Practical Works, Vol. II. p. 118.

f In

scr.
v.

and may expect to inherit the same blessings with him, as by embracing the gospel they manifest the same principle and temper.

Gal.
III. 8.

And again, the Holy Spirit, by whose inspiration the scripture was written, foreseeing that God would justify the Gentiles, when he should call them by his grace, in the same manner as he justified Abraham, only through faith, did in effect before the revelation of it to the world preach the glad tidings of the gospel unto Abraham himself, [saying] once and again, Gen. xii. 3 ; xviii. 18 ; xxii. 18. In thee shall all nations of the earth be blessed¹ ; that is to say, By their faith in that glorious Person who is to descend from thee, all persons whatsoever shall be blessed, of whatever nation they be, who learn to resemble thee in their readiness to receive every message from God with an entire submission and obedience. So then it appears, that they who are really partakers of the grace of faith, and seek to be justified by it ; they who have an unfeigned principle of faith in their hearts, and shew it by giving due credit to this great and indubitable testimony which God hath borne to his Son ; they are blessed with believing Abraham, and shall inherit the promises made to him, though they are, as he was when he first received these promises, in a state of uncircumcision.

- 10 Now it is evident that this blessing must be received by the gospel ; for as many as are of that covenant, which relates only to the works of the law, and have no higher views and expectations than a legal dispensation could give, are indeed under a curse², and by every breach of that law become obnoxious to it. And of this, with respect to the Mosaic law, we have as express a proof as can be imagined ; for it is written

[In thee shall all nations of the earth be blessed.] It may perhaps be asked, "What evidence there is that this promise meant the converting Jews and Gentiles to Christianity, rather than converting the Gentiles to Judaism, and so blessing them with a participation of the privileges originally granted to the natural seed of Abraham?" But besides what the apostle afterwards says for clearing up this point, it may be answered, That the Mosaic economy was so constituted that it could never be an universal thing ; and that when it was considered what sort of a person Christ

8 And the scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed.

9 So then they which be of faith, are blessed with faithful Abraham.

10 For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curse: for it is written, in fact was, there would appear reason to believe that this promise referred to him, even separate from the authority of the apostle in asserting it, and how dubious soever the sense of the oracle might appear till it was illustrated by the event.

g Are under a curse.] Dr. Whitby proves (in his note on verse 13,) that the law of Adam was attended with a curse as well as that of Moses ; and that it is the more general curse which is here intended, as illustrated by what Moses expressed as the sanction of his institutions.

ven, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law, to do them.

written, with regard to all that are under it (Deut. xxvii. 26,) "Cursed [is] every one who confirmeth not all the words of this law, that is, who continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law, to do them." It is therefore a perfect, personal, and perpetual obedience to every one of its injunctions, which the law requires: and as every man's conscience must tell him that he hath not performed this, he must see the dreadful denunciation levelled at himself, and dooming him to death and misery.

scrip.
v.
Gal.
III. 10.

11 But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, The just shall live by faith,

And that no man is justified in the sight of God by the performance of the law, or by his own obedience to it, [is] farther evident from God's appointment of another way of justification; for (as the prophet saith, Habak. ii. 4,) "The just, or righteous man, that is, he who shall finally be treated by God as such, shall live by faith^h." he shall be justified and saved by trusting in the mercy of an almighty God through Christ, and resting on the promise he hath graciously made of pardon and salvation even to sinful creatures, who shall by faith apply to him for righteousness and life. Now it is manifest that the law is not of faith, nor doth it allow of such a way of justification; but puts it on another and most rigorous footing, insisting on exact obedience to all its commands, and declaring (Lev. xviii. 5,) "that the man that doeth them, shall live in or by them:" he who perfectly conforms himself to these precepts shall have a right to happiness in consequence of them; but he that breaks them must bear the penalty without any farther assistance from a law which, being in one instance violated, must for ever condemn the transgressor.

12 And the law is not of faith: but, The man that doeth them, shall live in them.

13 Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made

But ever adored be the riches of Divine grace, 13 Christ hath redeemed us who believe in his name from the terrible curse of the lawⁱ, and bought us

h The just shall live by faith.] As the apostle shews in the next verse that there was no obtaining life by the law without a perfect personal obedience, faith, which stands here in opposition to it, must signify a firm belief of the promise of God, and acting according to it in a dependance upon Christ for righteousness; which is the way of justification that the gospel has revealed. Compare note d, on Rom. i. 17, Vol. III. p. 387.

i Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law.] The curse of the law from which Christ has redeemed us was that which doomed us to eternal misery; from whence it hath been very plausibly inferred that the law of Moses was established on the sanction of future punishments. But perhaps it may be solidly answered, that the apostle arguing concerning the law of God in general, the breach of which did certainly render obnoxious to future punish-

SECT.
V.
Gal.
III. 13.

us off from that servitude and misery to which it inexorably doomed us, by being himself made a curse for us, and enduring the penalty which our sins had deserved: for such was the death which he bore in our stead; not only when considered as a capital punishment, which universally implies something of this, but as thus stigmatized by the express declaration of the law against every one in such a particular circumstance; for it is written (Deut. xxi. 23,) "Cursed [is] every one that hangeth on a tree."

now Christ, as you well know, was hung upon ¹⁴a tree; he expired on the cross, and his dead body hung for some time upon it. And this, in his adorable condescension, he submitted to for us and our salvation; that the curse having been borne by him in our room, the blessing of Abraham in all its extent of spiritual benefits, and that adoption which was given in him, might come, not only on believing Jews, but on the Gentiles also, through Christ Jesus the great anointed Saviour; and particularly, that we, even the whole church of Christian converts, might, through the exercise of a living and sincere faith in him, receive the promise of the Spirit, as the seal of our adoption^k, both in the effusion of its miraculous gifts, so far as they may conduce to the edification of the church, and in the rich abundance of its saving graces.

made a curse for us; for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree.

¹⁴ That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith;

IMPROVEMENT.

THROUGH the amazing goodness of God to us we share with the Galatians in this great privilege, that Jesus Christ crucified ments, may mention the circumstance of the Mosaic law leaving every presumptuous offender to die under a curse, as an intimation of those melancholy prospects with respect to futurity which we must grant it certainly gave, even though we should not suppose that it contained an express threatening of such punishments; which I do not see that it any where does, and which I think the learned Mr. Warburton has fully proved that it doth not. And it is evident that the course of the apostle's argument here implies, that all true believers are redeemed from the curse, and consequently, that he speaks of a curse, to which all, as sinners, were liable; whereas the Gentiles being under no obligation to the Mosaic law at all, could not possibly be directly affected by its curse, nor could indeed be at all affected by it, otherwise than in the latitude in which we have explained this passage.

^k That we might receive the promise of the Spirit.] It is justly observed by the learned Diodate here, that the plentiful effusion of the Holy Spirit of God had been so frequently promised by the prophets as the great blessing of the latter day, that it is here used as synonymous to the blessing of Abraham. And Mr. Howe very properly argues from hence the great importance of the Spirit, since the imparting it is represented as the great blessing by which the curse is removed; from whence (says he) it follows that the withdrawing and withholding it is the great calamity which falls upon men by their apostacy from God See Howe's Works, Vol. I. p. 237.

Red is evidently set forth among us. Let us make the object familiar to our view, to our hearts: and O that we may all feel its powerful influence to engage us to obey the truth, and to comply with the practical design of the gospel! O that none of the enchantments of this vain world may be able to draw us aside from a becoming regard to it! May those especially, who have begun in the Spirit, and perhaps have suffered many difficulties already in the cause of religion, be concerned that they may not suffer so many things in vain, and after all their pretensions and hopes make an end in the flesh, by forsaking that excellent cause!

That we may be deemed the children of Abraham, let us have the same faith with him; that believing in God as he did, and trusting in the promised Messiah, we may attain that righteousness which it is impossible to obtain by the deeds of the law, which insists upon perfect obedience, and passes sentence upon every one that has transgressed it. Nothing can be more important than to endeavour to impress our souls with this great and fundamental truth, that if we are of the works of the law, and trust in these for justification, we are under a curse. O that God may graciously thunder that curse in the ears of sleeping sinners, and make them sensible of their guilt and danger; that as prisoners of justice, yet in some measure prisoners of hope (Zech. ix. 12), they may flee for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before them in the gospel (Heb. vi. 18.)

We need not go far for help. No sooner are we wounded (as it were) in one verse, than we find provision for our healing in another. For Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law; and this in a method never sufficiently to be admired, even by making himself a ransom, yea and becoming a curse for us; submitting, not only to great infamy and wretchedness in his life, but to an ignominious and accursed death, being slain and hung upon a tree (Acts v. 30; x. 39.)

To him let us apply, that the curse may be removed; and with humble confidence in him, let us lift up our eyes in cheerful expectation, that though by birth we are Gentiles, the blessing of Abraham will come upon us, and that through faith we shall receive the promise of the Spirit. And what promise can be more valuable than this? what blessing more desirable, than to be enlightened, to be quickened, to be sanctified, to be comforted by the Spirit! As the just, may we live by faith; and make it our daily request at the throne of grace, that God will implant and increase that Divine principle in our hearts, even such a faith as shall work by love, and prove a genuine principle of sincere and universal obedience.

SECT. VI.

The Apostle farther illustrates the stability and importance of the covenant made with Abraham as the father of believers, which the Mosaic covenant could not infringe, and to an application to which its greatest severities were intended to lead. Gal. III. 15, to the end.

GALATIANS III. 15.

SECT.
vi.Gal.
III. 15.

I HAVE been speaking, brethren, of the blessings of the Abrahamic covenant, and have shewn that, according to the original tenor of it, all his believing seed, whether they be or be not circumcised, must be entitled to many very valuable privileges. And herein I speak after the manner of men, and reason on the principles of common equity, according to what is the allowed rule of all human compacts; for though it be but the covenant of a man with his fellow-creature, yet if it be once legally confirmed by mutual promise and seal, no honest man concerned afterwards cancelleth what was agreed to by it, or adaeth any thing to it which should alter the terms of it, without the consent of the other stipulating party.

- 16 Now, to apply this to the case before us, the promises relating to the justification of believers were spoken by God at first to Abraham, and to his seed, who are expressly mentioned as making a party with him in the covenant. And here by the way you will observe, that he saith not "And to seeds," in the plural number, as speaking of many: but in the singular number, as of one, "And to thy seed;" not extending it to a variety of seeds, which might descend from him, but limiting what he says to one^a, which is all to

^a He saith not, "And to seeds," as of many; &c.] One would not easily allow that the apostle founds his argument on a presumption, that seed cannot signify a plurality of persons; since (not to mention a thousand other texts), in that very covenant with Abraham to which he refers, God said, Gen. xv. 5. So shall thy seed be: that is, It shall be as numerous as the stars of heaven. Nor can any instance be produced in which the greatest number of persons to descend from any

GAL. III. 15.

BRETHREN, I speak after the manner of men; Though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth or addeth thereto.

16 Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many: but as of one; And to thy seed, which is Christ.

one are called his seeds. Therefore, with Bishop Burnet (in his Four Discourses, p. 66), I take it to be only the apostle's saying, in bad Greek I confess, but with good sense and reason, that the promises made to Abraham are not only appropriated to one line of his descendants, that is, to those by Isaac; but centre in one illustrious person, with regard to whom the rest are made partakers of the great blessing exhibited in the Abrahamic covenant. And this interpretation I greatly prefer to theirs who suppose to center in Christ ; out of regard to whom that branch of Abraham's family from which he was to spring was in so remarkable a manner separated from the rest.

SECT.
VI.
Gal.
III. 16.

17 And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect.

And this I say further, on the principles laid down above, [that] the covenant which was long before confirmed by the promise of God with respect to Christ, as the illustrious Seed referred to, and the great universal blessing exhibited in the promise, the law which was given at mount Sinai four hundred and thirty years after the date of it ^b cannot disannul, [so] that it should make the promise void and ineffectual ; which it must have done if the observation of that law had been for the future, the necessary means of justification and happiness. For if the inheritance of Abraham's blessing [be] suspended on such a condition as not to be obtained but by the observation of the law, it must then follow that [it is] no more the effect of the promise, which is indeed quite abrogated by such a clog ; but it is evident that God freely gave [it to] Abraham by promise ; and therefore it must be left in such a state as that the honour of the promise may be secure, which otherwise would be abolished and disgraced (Rom. iv. 13, 14).

18 For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise ; but God gave it to Abraham by promise.

But it may be objected, If justification and eternal life cannot be obtained by this means, to what purpose then [serveth] the law, or what significancy hath it ? I answer, That it was added after the promise was made, because of transgressions^c ; that the Jews might either be preserved

19 Wherefore then serveth the law ? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should suppose that Christ here signifies the mystical body of Christ, or the aggregate of all believers ; which interpretation will no more afford an argument from these words than the preceding. And if we suppose it merely a remark by way of illustration, I think no sense so easy as this which is favoured by ver. 19.

^b Four hundred and thirty years after.] To make out this computation, Dr. Whitby and several other commentators proceed thus. The first celebrated promise was made to Abraham when he was seventy-five years old (Gen. xii. 3, 4) ; and from this date of it to the birth of Isaac, when Abraham was an hundred years old (Gen. xxi. 5), was 25 years : Isaac was 60 when Jacob was born (Gen. xxv. 26). Jacob went into Egypt at 130 (Gen. xlvii. 9). And the Israelites sojourned there (according to the Septuagint, Exod. xii. 40) 215 years, which completes the number. Compare note f, on Acts vii. 6, Vol. II. p. 574.

^c It was added because of transgressions.] As the law that was given by Moses neither did, nor could disannul the covenant made with Abraham, to which the Jews undoubtedly had a claim, the design of that law must therefore have been to engage those of his descendants that came under it to see their need of that covenant, and more effectually to recommend the promise to them. And as the writings of the book of Genesis gave them a farther account of it than tradition had preserved, the law might be said to be added to that account because of transgressions ; as their transgressions, not only of the ceremonial but of the moral precepts, would appear more exceedingly sinful and dangerous in proportion to the perspicuity of these precepts, and the awful solemnity with which they were delivered.

SECT.
vi.
Gal.
III. 19.

served from idolatry and other crimes; or that they might be convicted of their guilt in committing them, and so be taught to seek after a more effectual method of obtaining pardon, with an earnestness proportionable to the discovery it made of the malignity of their guilt : and with this view it was to continue till the illustrious Seed should come, even the Messiah, to whom the promise was made ; into whom both Jews and Gentiles being ingrafted by faith, when the gospel-dispensation took place, should become without distinction the spiritual seed of Abraham, and be entitled to the blessings of the promise. Accordingly the law was given in a way agreeable to this design of it ; [and it was] ordained and promulgated by the ministration of angels at mount Sinai ^d, and put in the hand of Moses, who was then appointed by God to act the part of a mediator between him and the people of Israel^e, and was authorised to attest (as it were) their mutual and reciprocal obligations to each other ; whereas the promise needed no mediator, but was immediately deposited by God in the hand of Abraham to whom it was made.

20 Now we know that a mediator is not merely [the mediator] of one party, but at least of two, between which he must pass, and by the nature of his office is to transact for both : but God is only one party in that covenant made with Abraham of which we have been speaking^f, and Abraham should come, to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator.

20 Now a mediator
15

^d By the ministration of angels at mount Sinai.] That the law was given by the ministration of angels, is apparent from many passages of scripture (compare Psal. lxxviii. 17 ; Acts vii. 53 ; and Heb. ii. 2) : though the Logos did undoubtedly preside among them, and it was in his name that the proclamation was made by angels, as his heralds and attendants.

^e In the hand of a Mediator.] It is a singular notion of Mr. Pierce on Heb. vii. 22, that the mediator here spoken of is the order of Jewish high-priests, who succeeding one another, were by virtue of their office mediators between God and the people. He pleads, "that the law is here represented as left in the hands of a mediator till the promised seed should come." But the clause αρχη ελθη το σπριγμα, till the Seed should come, will make very good sense if it be taken in connection with the preceding word ωσειθεν, and referred to what is said immediately before of the law being added ; as appears in the paraphrase. And the apostle's argument will be much better supported by referring this to Moses, who was particularly authorised by the Jewish people, as well as constituted by God, to mediate in the affair of receiving the law, which he transacted once for all.—It is so unusual and unnatural a manner of speaking, to call a succession of men a mediator, that one would not willingly be forced on such an inconvenient interpretation.

^f A mediator is not [the mediator] of one ; but God is one.] I have followed Mr. Locke's interpretation of this difficult passage, not without attentively comparing a variety of others. The learned Dr. Jenkins (in his Remarks on four Books, p. 156) interprets it, "This mediator is not a mediator of one and the same covenant with the former ; but God is still one and the same, an unchangeable Being, who will therefore adhere faithfully to his prior engagements." But this changing the sense of the word one, and putting so unusual an interpretation upon it, is a difficulty one would choose is not a mediator of one;

but God is one.

Abraham and his seed, including all that believe, both Jews and Gentiles, are the other. As Moses therefore, when the law was given, stood at that time between the Lord and Israel (Deut. v. 5), and did not pass between the whole collective body of Abraham's seed and the blessed God; so nothing was transacted by him with relation to those for whom he did not appear; and consequently nothing in that covenant wherein he did mediate could disannul the promise, or affect the right accruing to any from a prior engagement, in which the Gentiles were concerned as well as the Israelites: for no covenant can be altered but by the mutual consent of both parties; and in what was done at mount Sinai by the mediation of Moses, there was none to appear for the Gentiles; so that this transaction between God and the Israelites could have no force to abrogate the promise which extended likewise to the Gentiles, or to vacate a covenant that was made between parties of which one only was there.

sect.
vi.
Gal.
III. 20.

21 Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law.

And shall it now be said, [Is] the law then ²¹ against the promises of God? And so far as the law takes place with regard to those who are under it, doth it not seem at least to implead in some measure, and to infringe upon that better state in which they who are brought into subjection to it, would otherwise have been? God forbid, that we should insinuate any thing of that kind! On the contrary, it was intended to be subservient to the promise, and the design of it in its remoter consequences, if rightly attended to and applied, was to lead the thoughts and hearts of those who are under it to an higher and better dispensation. For if indeed there had been a law given, which could have given life, if any law, considered in itself alone, could have been to sinful creatures a sufficient means of justification choose, if possible, to avoid.—Nor can it be understood as if it were said, “Where a mediator is appointed to interpose his office, it is a sign the parties are at variance;” but God is now reconciled: for neither does it appear that there was any controversy between God and Israel when Moses was appointed a mediator: nor does God's being one properly signify being at peace.—I shall mention but one other explication, which makes the sense of it as if it had been said, “Moses is not a mediator in, of the one seed, to whom the promise was made; and therefore could not act so as to give up his right, or that of the persons whose guardian and representative he was.” But this would suppose a very unwarrantable change in the signification of one when applied to God, and takes it for granted, I think very unreasonably, that Christ was not concerned in giving the law from mount Sinai.

g Righteousness

SECT.
vi.Gal.
III. 22.

tification and eternal happiness, then assuredly righteousness should have been by the Mosaic law^s, than which there is not any law more holy, excellent, and good. But so far is the law from introducing any justifying righteousness, that the scripture in revealing it hath plainly shut up all, both Jews and Gentiles, under sin, as so many condemned malefactors; for it hath stated the rule of duty in such a manner, that every man's conscience must, on considering and understanding that rule, certainly charge himself with sin. And it is wisely ordered in this manner, that they who are so convinced of guilt and misery, might look beyond it to be delivered from their lost condition, and that the promise of righteousness and life by faith in Jesus Christ, as the on'y means of justification, might be given and appropriated to them that truly believe in him for pardon and salvation; and thus the seeming severity of the sentence was intended so much the more to illustrate the grace of the promise.

- 23 The law then, which condemns every transgression, was designed to be preparatory for the discovery which the gospel makes of the way of being justified by faith: but before this faith came to be exhibited, as the method of acceptance with God, we that were under the law stood on the foot of our own obedience before him; and having become obnoxious to Divine justice, and liable to death, the punishment of sin, were kept under the bond of the law, as condemned malefactors are guarded in close custody, shut up as prisoners under sentence^h, unto the faith which in due time should afterwards be revealed; there being no possibility of escape, till the Messiah came, and brought the happy tidings of a way to be justified and accepted, though we were before most justly condemned. So that the law, while it continued its authority over us, and held us under the rigour of its discipline, was 22 But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.

23 But before faith came we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed.

24 Wherefore the law was our school-master

^a Righteousness should have been by the Mosaic law.] This was the law by way of eminence, to which therefore God would have done that honour, if he would have done it to any.

^h Shut up as prisoners under sentence.] The apostle having shewn in the preceding verse, that all were shut up under sin, what he now adds of the Jews being shut up does not so much refer to the fatigue of ceremonies (though some have explained it so) as to the condemnation under which the violation of the law brought the transgressors of it; according to the grand argument so largely insisted upon by St. Paul in his epistle to the Romans, chap. iii. 9—23.

master to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith.

was as it were our schoolmaster, or the instructor of our childhood, to teach us our own sinfulness and the necessity of a better righteousness than our own; and so [to lead us] unto Christ, and to engage us, as condemned by the law, to have recourse to him who is the end of the law for righteousness, (Rom. x. 4.) that we might thus be justified by faith in him, and so obtain the benefit of the promise.

SECT.
VI.
GAL.
III. 24.

25 But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster.

But when this faith once came to be fully revealed by the gospel-dispensation, we then passed over to a more liberal and happy state; and being instructed in the knowledge of Christ, we are no longer under the discipline of a schoolmaster as children in a state of minority, and have no such need of the law, as we had formerly, to direct us to him. For having believed in Christ, as he is discovered in the gospel, ye are all, without distinction, Gentiles as well as Jews, the sons of God by faith in Christ Jesusⁱ and are now as it were brought into an adult state in which you have a claim to higher privileges, and to greater freedom, than you had before.

26 For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus.

For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, and so have taken upon you the solemn profession of his religion, may thus be said to have put on Christ^k, and to be clothed with his character and covered with his righteousness; and by the interest you have in him by faith, are so united to him as to appear one with him in his state of liberty and felicity. So that 27 For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ.

28 There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye now the distinctions, which were before so much regarded, are in a manner done away, and have an end put to them, by this happy union; and there is neither Jew nor Greek, but the latter has the same privileges with the former, and the former may without offending God use the same freedom in approaching to him with the latter;

ⁱ The sons of God by faith in Christ Jesus.] It may perhaps be objected, "We might have been the children of the sons of God, though we had still continued under a schoolmaster;" but we should not then have appeared under the character of such, as the apostle argues in the beginning of the next chapter. But perhaps the particle ye may here signify we; and so it may introduce the following application of the promises laid down before in more general terms. It seems that regency here signifies such a master or governor as hath a power of restraining and correcting children in a manner that suits only an infant-state, or that of early childhood.

^k Have put on Christ.] Mr Locke here observes, that by their putting on Christ it is implied, "that to God, now looking on them, there appears nothing but Christ: They are, as it were, covered all over with him as a man is with the clothes he has put on. And hence, in the next verse, it is said, they are all one in Christ Jesus, as if there were but that one person."

- MARK.
vi. latter; there is neither bond nor free, but slaves are now the Lord's freemen, and freemen the Lord's servants; and this consideration makes the free humble, and the slave cheerful, and swallows up in a great measure the sense of his servitude; there is neither male nor female, but all are now admitted to that initiatory ordinance of baptism which comes in the place of circumcision that was appropriated to the males; and this happy state of equality, into which, with respect to spiritual privileges, both sexes are brought, may justly prevent that tyranny over the weaker which in some places hath so shamefully prevailed: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus, and are all equally accepted in him; and being made one body in him, believers, of whatever nation, or sex, or condition they be, are all cemented in the bonds of holy friendship, and animated with the views of the same happiness.
- 29 And if ye [be] Christ's, and are by faith united to him, who is the promised Seed, in whom all nations shall be blessed, then are ye the true seed of Abraham, and equally are so, whether ye are circumcised or not; and, in consequence of this, ye are heirs in virtue of the promise, and may look upon the best blessings promised to that holy patriarch as your own, though you have no inheritance in the land of Canaan, and pretend to claim nothing by virtue of a natural descent.
- ye are all one in Christ Jesus.
- 29 And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.

IMPROVEMENT.

- Ver. 26 LET us rejoice in those spiritual privileges to which all true Christians are now equally entitled; and charge our souls with those obligations which necessarily attend them. Let us look
- 29 upon ourselves as the children of Abraham, as entitled to the noblest of those promises which God made to that excellent saint; even to that great and comprehensive promise (which is all the salvation, and all the desire, of every true child of Abraham,) namely, that God will be a God to us, (Gen. xvii. 7, 8.) Let us approve ourselves his genuine offspring by imitating his faith;
- 27 and always remember that, having been baptized into Christ, we have so put on Christ, as to be obliged to resemble him, in his temper and character.
- 23 If we desire to share the blessings and glories of that one body of which Christ is the great and glorious Head, let us not lay a disproportionate disproportionate stress upon any thing by which one Christian may be distinguished from another ; but endeavour, as one in Christ Jesus, to be one in affection and friendship to each other ; Ver. and let those who seem to have the greatest advantages condescend to them that seem most their inferiors.

Giving up all expectations of life from any law, since that of Moses could not give it, let us look for glory, honour, and immortality by the gospel ; and be very thankful for the knowledge we have of the Mediator of a better covenant than that in which Moses was appointed to mediate. And as the law was given, not to disannul the covenant of promise, but with a view to be subservient to it, and to point out Christ, let us apply to him for righteousness and life ; and in him, as that one Seed of Abraham in whom all the families, all the nations of believers were to be blessed, let us center our hopes, and be very solicitous that we by faith may be united to him, and so may have a claim to all the privileges of the promise under him.

Thus let us continue to make use of the law, not as the foundation of our hope towards God, but as our school-master to bring us to Christ by the discovery it has given of our need of him and being sensible that it hath shut up all under sin, from which we cannot be delivered but by the faith the gospel hath revealed, may we be led to seek the benefit of the promise, that being the sons of God by faith in Christ Jesus, we may be heirs of eternal life and blessedness.

SECT. VII.

The Apostle illustrates the superior excellency and freedom of the state into which believers as the sons of God are brought by the gospel, above the state which they were in before under the law, when they were only as minors under a rigorous tutor ; and at the same time he reproves the Galatians, that they were no more resolute in adhering to that better dispensation, the first tidings of which they had received from him with so much affection.

Gal. IV. 1—20.

GAL. IV. 1.

NOW I say, that the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all ;

GALATIANS IV. 1.

I OBSERVED to you, my friends, a little before, that while we were under the law, we were as in a state of minority ; (chap. iii. 24, 25.) Now for the further illustration of that thought, by what is known to be the usual method of dealing with children, I say, [that] so long as the heir of the most plentiful estate is a child in his non-age, he, with respect to the possession and

SECT.
vii.

Gal.
IV. 1.

SECT.
vii.Gal.
IV. 2.

and free use of it, and to the right of managing it in his own person differeth nothing from a servant or bond-man, though he be in title and by right of inheritance lord of all: But during his minority he is under the authority and restraint of governors and guardians, to whose tutorage and management he is committed, till the time appointed by the father when he shall be deemed of age, and be at liberty to manage

3 his affairs himself. So likewise we who having been Jews before, have now embraced the faith of the gospel, when we were but as children in minority, though we had the promise and hope of the Messiah, were held in bondage under the discipline of the law; in which we were employed, in a way suited to the imperfect circumstances of an infant-state, about worldly elements^a, or about those inferior things which are but like the letters of the alphabet when compared with that sublime sense which they may be the means of teaching, when their power is duly understood, and the use of them become

4 familiar to the mind: But when the fulness of the time, which had been marked out by the prophets for the accomplishment of this great event, was come, and we were arrived at the age appointed by our Father for entering upon our adult state, God sent forth his own Son, to give us the inheritance of the promise he had made of pardon and salvation, and bring us to a state of liberty and happiness. For to this end it was that the Messiah came; and that he might effect this grand design, he was pleased indeed to appear in a most humble form, taking upon him mortal flesh, made of the substance of a woman, according to the great original promise (Gen. iii. 15,) and was thus made under the discipline of the Mosaic law in all its rigour; That

5 so by his submitting, not only to the precepts of the law, but likewise to the penalty and curse of it, he might redeem them who were under the yoke and curse of the law, and bring us into an happy

2 But is under tutors, and governors, until the time appointed of the father.

3 Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world:

4 But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his son made of a woman, made under the law.

5 To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive

^a Worldly elements.] The Jewish rituals might be so called, not only on account of the relation which they had to worldly things, by which they were adapted to the low conceptions of children, who are most affected with sensible objects, and have no taste for spiritual and heavenly things; but also, because the same kind of things had before obtained in the world, and were in use among the heathens, though under the Mosaic law they were directed to a better object and end.—Some would consider it as referring to the wisdom of the Israelites, in the infancy of their commonwealth, for receiving a more rational and sublime plan of religion, having been used in Egypt to so many pompous ceremonies.

receive the adoption of sons.

6 And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father.

7 Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.

8 Howbeit, then when ye knew not God, ye did service unto them which by nature are no gods.

happy liberty, both from the sentence of it, and from any future obligation to obey the ceremonial part of it; that, instead of that servile spirit which the law breathed, we might all, as believers in Christ, receive the adoption of sons, and see and know the happy privilege to which we are advanced in consequence of it. For unto all who are partakers of it, it is attended with the most joyful and beneficial effects; and because ye are thus admitted by the gospel to the full character and dignity of his sons, God hath graciously sent forth an abundant effusion of the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, O ye believing Galatians, as well as into the hearts of the Jewish converts, crying, Abba, Father^b; giving us all, both Jews and Gentiles, in our different languages, an equal freedom in addressing ourselves to him with the overflowings of filial confidence and love.

So that now, O Christian, whatever be thy rank or station, or whether thou be Jew or Gentile, thou art no longer to look upon thyself as a servant or bond-man, or as standing on a level with such an one in point of present enjoyment: but, on the contrary, as admitted to the liberty and freedom of a son at age: and if thou art indeed a son in such circumstances, then it follows, by an happy consequence, that thou art an heir of all the promises of God through Christ, and hast a claim to God himself, as to thy father and thy portion:

But if this was the case with the Jewish converts, that they were in a state of servitude while they continued under the law, the bondage of the Gentiles in their unregenerate state must have been greatly worse; and it is still more absurd and unreasonable as to you Gentile converts, that when you have been called into a glorious liberty by the gospel, you should not entertain such liberal sentiments as are suited to it, but should be willing to submit to another servitude: for then indeed, when ye knew not the only true God and the way of being accepted with him, ye were in bondage to those stupid idols which

sect. VII.
Gal. IV. 5.

^b Crying Abba, Father.] The learned Mr. Selden (de suc. in Bona. Dif. cap. iv.) hath brought a very pertinent quotation from the Babylonian Gemara, to prove that it was not allowed to slaves to use the title of Abba in addressing the master of the family to which they belonged, or the correspondent title of Imma, or mother, when speaking to the mistress of it.

SECT.
vii.Gal.
IV. 9.

which by nature are no Gods^c, and greatly were your rational natures debased by so ignoble and absurd a service. But now, after that ye have known the mind and will of God, or rather are so happy as to be known of God, and he has shewn his favour to you, and brought you to the knowledge of himself by the instruction of his word and by the influence of his Spirit, how turn ye again into another kind of servitude to the weak and poor elements of the Mosaic ceremonies^d, which are so far beneath that glorious and happy state into which ye are called? Elements, to which ye unaccountably desire again to be in bondage anew^e, changing indeed the form and object of your ceremonies, but retaining many of the same law, perplexing, and unprofitable observances. For as under heathenism you had your frequent feasts in honour of imaginary deities, so now ye observe the Jewish solemnities with as scrupulous an exactness; even your sabbath days, and the beginning of your months or new moons, and your times of grand festivals, and your sabbatical years, and those of Jubilee.

11 Indeed, my brethren, when I think of these things, I am afraid of you, lest it should be found that I have bestowed upon you so much affectionate labour in vain^f, while, after all the pains that I have taken to instruct you in the faith and liberty

9 But now after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, wherunto ye desire again to be in bondage?

10 Ye observe days and months, and times, and years.

11 I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain.

c Ye were in bondage to those which by nature are no gods.] It is evident here, that though these Christians had before their conversion been idolatrous Gentiles the Judaizing teachers were desirous of subjecting them to the Mosaic ceremonies: from whence it appears how much those learned writers are mistaken who think the Jews only imposed ceremonies on these those who were already, as they affect to call them, Proselytes of the gate, or worshippers of the true God; and how vain is the attempt to prove from hence, that the injunction of abstaining from blood is to be considered as peculiar to them.

d Weak and poor elements.] The ceremonies of the law were weak, as they had no sufficient power to cleanse the soul from sin, and justify the sinner in the sight of God; and poor, as they could not confer the spiritual riches of the gospel, pardon and peace, and the assurance of enjoying life and happiness. Besides which it is to be remembered, that those who were most zealous for imposing the observance of the Mosaic ceremonies on the Gentile converts, were of the sect of the Pharisees (Acts xv. 5), who therefore would not fail to impose a great many additional observances, taught only by tradition of the elders, which may sufficiently account for the law terms which the apostle uses upon this occasion. Compare Rom. viii. 3; and Heb. vii. 18.

e Ye desire again to be in bondage anew.] It is certain they could not be said to be in bondage to the Jewish ceremonies anew who had never been acquainted with them; but it was a bondage in some measure of the same kind; and that is all that can be intended here.—I cannot think anew should be rendered from above; as if the meaning were, they had received such notice or demands from Jerusalem.

f I am afraid of you, &c.] Some have observed, there was a greater reason for this apprehension, as the fixing the time of the Jewish feasts depended upon the grand sanhedrim; so that their observing them would bring them into such an intercourse with and dependence upon that court as might be greatly to the hazard of their Christianity.

12 Brethren, I beseech you, be as I am; for I am as ye are: ye have not injured me at all.

liberty of the gospel, you appear to act as if you had forgotten what I taught you, and would be seeking justification from the law.

Give me leave, brethren, while I am thus expostulating with you and reproving you, most earnestly to beseech you with all tenderness, that ye be as I [am]: that ye maintain the same affectionate regard for me as I bear towards you; and that ye candidly receive those sentiments, which I, to whose authority in the church ye can be no strangers, have been inculcating upon you. And this I may the rather expect from what I have experienced in myself; for it is well known there was a time when I [was] as ye [are], as much bigoted to the Mosaic rituals and Pharisæic traditions as any of you all can be: but God hath now taught me better; and that your hearts may also feel the power of his grace, and every prejudice may be subdued and rooted out, I am solicitous that the purity of that truth which I have learnt in so extraordinary a manner, and which I have faithfully preached among you, may continue with you. Remember too, that I am Paul your apostle and your friend, for whom you have formerly expressed the highest affection; and as, whatever instability you may have shewn as to some important doctrines which I taught you, ye have not personally injured me to all, I can have no ill-will to you, nor any inclination to find fault with you on my account.

13 Ye know how, through infirmity of the flesh, I preached the gospel unto you at the first.

But, whatever change may be in you, I still retain the same affectionate regard I manifested for you at my first coming to you, when I was treated by you with the greatest respect, and you esteemed yourselves happy under my ministry, notwithstanding all the disadvantages that attended it: for ye well knew that I preached the gospel among you at first, when ye were entire strangers to the happy contents of it, in the infirmity of the flesh, and indeed with a great mixture

g I [was] as ye [are], &c.] The words $\epsilon\gamma\omega\ \eta\mu\omega\ \omega\varsigma\ \upsilon\mu\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ are ambiguous, and may either signify, I was, or I am as ye are. Our translation takes them in the latter sense; and then it must express his unanimity with them, which he urges as an argument for their unanimity with him, and affection to him. And as this suits the connection with the latter part of the verse, I have expressed that sense in the paraphrase; though the former seems preferable, as more weighty, copious, and striking, and indeed I think more natural too; for it is plain many of them were much prejudiced against him (chap. i. 6: vs. 16), while he was most tenderly affected towards them.

h My

SECT
vii.Gal.
IV. 13.

ture of weakness in my manner of expressing myself; which was the consequence of that disorder in the whole system of my nerves, that was occasioned by the revelations I had the honour to receive some time before I came among you :

- 14 And yet with respect to this my temptation that was seated in my flesh^h (for a temptation indeed it was, and sometimes threw me into greater anxiety than it ought to have occasioned,) I had however the consolation to see, that you did not despise it, or reject [me] with scorn on account of it; but, on the contrary, struck with the importance of my message and those evident proofs of a Divine co-operation that attended it, ye received me as if I had been an angel of God come down from heaven to you, [yea] with as much affection and submission as it can be supposed you would have shewn to our Divine master Christ Jesus himself, if instead of sending me as his messenger and ambassador, he had visited you in person. What was then your felicity? and how great was the sense you had of your happiness, upon your first receiving the glad tidings of the gospel from me, when such a change was made in your state, and your hearts were under the impulse of such holy affections,

as

14 And my temptation which was in my flesh, ye despised not, nor rejected; but received me as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus.

15 Where 'is then the blessedness you spake of? for I hear you record that, if it had

^h My temptation that was in my flesh.] What the apostle here refers to must have been so well known to the Galatians, that it was needless he should give a particular description of it in his writing to them.—Dr. Hammond and others explain it, of the persecutions which he suffered for preaching the gospel; but these could be no cause why the Galatians should despise him, and were so far from making him contemptible, that they must rather be an inducement to their receiving him with more respect, when he could bear such sufferings in vindication of the doctrine he delivered.—The apostle speaks of it as an infirmity and temptation seated in his flesh, which by the effect it had upon him might render both his person and his speech obnoxious to contempt, and have a tendency to make him despicable in the eyes of others; agreeable to which he elsewhere mentions it as objected to him, that his bodily presence was weak, and his speech contemptible (2 Cor. x. 10), and, on the whole, there seems to be so manifest a resemblance between his representing this temptation as in his flesh, and what he says of the thorn in the flesh, that was given to humiliate him after the abundance of his revelations (2 Cor. xii. 7,) that I can see no room to scruple why we may not take it for an effect of that memorable circumstance which must have happened some time before his preaching first to the Galatians, and was attended with such consequences as might still be discernible in him, since it was not removed on his desire to be delivered from it. See note f, on 2 Cor. xii. 7. p. 215.

ⁱ What was then your felicity?] Some think that St. Paul here refers to the high things which they spake of himself, and to their blessing him for what he taught them; and Mr. Locke would have it, that the sense of this clause must be, "What benedictions did you then pour out upon me? But howsoever this would be, the consequence of their accounting themselves happy in having him for their apostle, and being instructed in the gospel by him, that upon this they would be heaping blessings on him, in testimony of the high regard which they had for him; it does not suit so well with the original, which rather is expressive of the sense they had of their own happiness in being enlightened by him in the knowledge of the gospel; for such appears to be the proper meaning of the words μακαρισμοῦ ὑμῶν. Compare Rom. iv. 6, 9.

k They had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me.

16 Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?

17 They zealously affect you, but not well; yea, they would exclude you, that ye might affect them.

18 But it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing, and as that you could not but congratulate yourselves and me upon it? You cannot surely have forgot it; for I bear you witness, that if [it had been] possible you could have done it, and I could have received any benefit by it, you would even have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me, as a convincing proof of your affection for me. And why should there now be such a change in your disposition towards me? Am I therefore become your enemy, or have you any reason to account me such, unless it be because I tell you the truth, and bear a faithful testimony to the uncorrupted gospel which I desire to maintain among you in all the purity in which I planted it?

I do not indeed impute this alienation of affection wholly to yourselves; for I know that a great many dishonest artifices have been used to prejudice your minds against me, and there are those among you who would endeavour to persuade you that they zealously affect you, and have an extraordinary concern for your welfare, [but] are not upright and sincere, and what they aim at is not well, as they are seeking to subvert the truth, and to seduce and draw you off to their own sentiments; yea, they would quite exclude and shut us out from any share in your regards^k, that ye may zealously affect and be attached to them, and having engrossed you to themselves, they may thus have an opportunity of promoting their own secular views at your expence. But it is fit you should remember, that [it is] good for you to be zealously affected always in that which is good^l: for as the beauty and excellence of zeal is to be estimated, not by the degree of it considered in itself, but by the object to which it is directed; so too the warmth of your affection towards an object truly worthy of it should be at all times equally maintained; and ^k Then would shut us out.] Though most copies read it οδοιτιζουσιν υμεις; the sense appears more natural and easy, if we read us rather than you: and as there is no doubt but the apostle here refers to the endeavours used by their false teachers to alienate their affections from himself, it may induce us to prefer this reading, which has the countenance of some copies, and upon this account is put by our translators in the margin.

^l To be zealously affected always in that which is good.] Εν αγαθω either may refer to a good person, or a good thing, and may be understood of their continuing zealous in their affection, either to himself, or to the truth that he had preached. But as the apostle had been speaking of himself in the foregoing verses, he likewise seems to have still in view the warmth of their affection to him when he was present with them, though he expresses it in a graceful way, with such a latitude, as may include their zeal for his doctrine, as well as for his person: and I have chosen, therefore, not to limit it to either in the translation.

and the same fervent zeal which you have formerly expressed, ought to be manifested by you, not only when I am present with you, but in my absence too, if you really think me to deserve your regards, and have indeed received the truth in the love of it.

- 19 What shall I say to you, my dear little children, of whom I hoped I had begotten you in Christ Jesus through the gospel? (1 Cor. iv. 15) I am in great anxiety of heart concerning you, and am so earnestly solicitous you may be found to have received the grace of God in truth, that I declare, with all the undissembled tenderness of a most affectionate parent. I travail as it were in birth again, and am in pangs about you, till Christ be fully formed in you, and I have the happiness to see clear evidences of the prevalence of true Christianity in all its branches in you, by which it may appear you are renewed after the image of Christ, and are really brought
- 20 to a life of faith in him. But since I find you have lost so much by my absence, and have unhappily been set upon by those who have took the opportunity of it to practise upon you, I could heartily wish to be present with you even now, and to see cause to change my voice towards you, so as to speak to you in terms of greater confidence, assurance, and complacency, than I now can; for indeed I am in great doubt and in much perplexity about you; and though I do not absolutely despair of your recovery and establishment, yet I am not without very discouraging apprehensions, lest after all the pains that I have taken with you, the good effects of my labours among you should in a great measure be lost.

and not only when I am present with you.

19 My little children, of whom I travail in birth again, until Christ be formed in you, 20 I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; for I stand in doubt of you.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. As the church in general was in its minority till the full revelation of the gospel came, so is every true member of it a minor while he continues in this world, and is in many instances inferior to some who have no part in the inheritance; but the time will come, when, as an heir who is deemed of age, he shall be admitted into full possession; and it will amply and immediately repay all the abasements and mortifications of that state in which the wisdom and love of our heavenly Father hath at present placed us.

The grand foundation of this hope is that infinite love which we can never sufficiently acknowledge and admire, even the love of God our Father, in sending forth his Son at the appointed time, made of a woman, and made under the law, subject at once both to its precepts and its penalty, to redeem us when we were under its condemning sentence, and to introduce us to all the privileges of that Divine adoption which we receive from him. May each of us, in consequence of it, receive more and more of that spirit of adoption whereby we may be enabled to raise our souls to God, with all the holy overflowings of genuine filial affection, while we daily, cry, Abba, Father, "Send forth, O God, this Spirit of thy Son in our hearts, whatever worldly benefits and delights thou mayest deny us; that we may thus rejoice in the assurance that we are heirs of God through Christ, and may be able to glory in this, that the Lord is our inheritance!"

If we thus know God, being delivered from the bondage of corruption, and from those idolatrous regards to the creature to which our hearts are naturally so inclined; let us acknowledge that it is because we rather have been known of him, and being apprehended by his grace, he hath received us into the number of his sons, and given us the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. Let us act suitably to such a character, and be solicitous to maintain the purity of that religion by which we are brought to such exalted dignities and hopes. And let our hearts be always open to receive the truth in the love of it; not despising the infirmities of those that preach the gospel to us in faithfulness, nor allowing ourselves at any time to look upon them as our enemies, for the plainness with which they may tell us the truth; which is sometimes the case with regard to those who might once have been ready, in the forwardness of their zeal and affection, almost to have plucked out their own eyes for ministers whom they afterwards slight and forsake.

Let us labour after a steadiness in our temper and conduct, and take heed that our zeal be so guided as that it may center upon objects truly good, and may continue to act in proportion to their excellency; always suspecting those principles and those persons who would alienate our hearts from any of the faithful servants of Christ, because they do not agree with our sentiments about the circumstantials of religion.

Such as the apostle Paul expresses here with so much tenderness will be the desires of every faithful minister for the spiritual children which God hath given him: and where he sees reason to stand in doubt of any of whom he had once good hopes through grace, lest perhaps he should have bestowed upon them labour in vain, it will give him a deep and tender distress, and he will,

SECT. VII. as it were, travail in birth again, till Christ be formed in them. His very heart will be in pain for this: and what can be a greater or more worthy object of desire? O that it might appear that Christ is formed in the very souls of all that are called by his name! So would ministers have a firm foundation of joy in them, and they of hope towards God for that eternal happiness which can only be built upon Christ; upon Christ formed in them, as the only well-grounded hope of glory, (Col. i. 27.)

SECT. VIII.

The Apostle illustrates the subject of his foregoing discourse by an allegory borrowed from what is written of Sarah and Hagar, and their respective seed. Gal. IV. 21, to the end. V. 1.

GALATIANS IV. 21.

SECT. VIII. I HAVE been saying a great deal to take you off from any further thoughts of becoming subject to the Mosaic law: but if you still have any inclination to it, tell me now, ye who are desirous of being under the law, do ye not hear and call to mind what is said in the book of the law itself, which is so often read in your assemblies? There is a passage even in the first book of that sacred volume, which is very capable of being improved to your instruction, if you
 22 rightly enter into it. For it is written there (Gen. xvi. 15, and xxi. 2, 3,) that Abraham, the great patriarch, in a descent from whom so many are ready to glory, had two sons, who, though equally related to him, were by no means equal with regard to the blessings which they were to inherit: the one of these he had by Hagar a bond-woman, and the other by Sarah a free-woman, whose name signifies a Lady or Princess, and so may be understood as importing not only liberty, but authority. But there
 23 was a great difference between them; for he [who was born] of Hagar, the bond-woman, that is, Ishmael, was born only according to the flesh, and produced in the common order of nature, without any particular promise of God, or any unusual interposition of his power and Providence; whereas he [who was born] of Sarah the free-woman, that is, Isaac, [was born] by virtue of the promise. when his parents were in the course of nature absolutely incapable of producing

GAL. IV. 21. TELL me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?

22 For it is written, that Abraham had two sons; the one by a bond-maid, the other by a free-woman.

23 But he who was of the bond-woman was born after the flesh; but he of the free-woman was by promise.

24 Which things are an allegory : for these are the two covenants, the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar,

25 For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia and answereth to Jerusalem, which now is, and is in bondage with her children :

26 But Jerusalem which is above, is free, which is the mother of us all.

ducing a child ; and upon him the peculiar blessings of the Divine promise were entailed.

Now I would lead you to an evangelical improvement of this remarkable and mystical fact : which contains many concurrent circumstances, so nearly resembling what we now observe with regard to the Jewish and Christian religion, and the professors of both, that I cannot but propose them to you as things that may be profitably allegorized. For these two persons (Hagar and Sarah) are, that is, may well be considered as representing, the two celebrated covenants, or the two dispensations of the law and gospel, the tenor of which is so different : the one that was delivered from mount Sinai, is that which bringeth forth her children to bondage which is Hagar, whose servile disposition and state may be considered as an emblem of that less ingenious dispensation. This Hagar, I say, whose name signifies a Rock, is a representation of those who are under the law given from mount Sinai in Arabia^a, in the deserts of which the Hagarenes who descended from Ishmael were settled ; and it answers in the allegory to the present state of the earthly Jerusalem, which with her children is in a state of bondage, as being in subjection to so many ritual observances, and under a sentence of wrath on the commission of the least wilful offence, which hath the greatest tendency to produce a mean and disingenuous fear. But the Jerusalem above, or that celestial society to which all that believe, both Jews and Gentiles, are come, and are united, under the new and better dispensation of the gospel-covenant, is the free woman, answering to Sarah in the superior character and state to which it introduces us, and is indeed the mother of us all^b ; to whom we as Christians do all

^a This Hagar, I say, &c.] The particle ay cannot here have its illative force, since it would be very injurious to the apostle to suppose he meant to argue this, Mount Sinai is Hagar—for this Hagar is mount Sinai. It must therefore here signify the same with I say, and only introduce the repetition of a thought which the apostle was desirous to inculcate ; as it often does elsewhere. Compare Rom. iii. 2, and xv. 27.

^b Jerusalem above is the free woman, which is the mother of us all.] Some have thought the apostle here suggests an argument to prove the liberty of the Christian church from the great number of its converts, which would have rendered the observation of many of the Mosaic precepts impossible : but that intimation, if intended, must have been very obscure. It is more reasonable to conclude that he refers to the five genius of Christianity, which, when compared with Judaism, is extremely obvious, and made it evidently fit, in the illustration of this allegory, to consider the free woman, that is, Sarah, as representing the church under this nobler form.

sect.
viii.Gal.
IV. 26.

all belong, and by virtue of our relation to whom we not only are at present in a more liberal and happy condition, but become heirs, as Isaac was of the promises which God was pleased to make to our father Abraham.

- 27 And there is a passage in the prophecy of Isaiah, which may naturally suggest such a thought: for it is written there, with reference to the greater freedom and enlargement of the church in the times of the Messiah, (Isa. liv. 1.) “Rejoice, and be exceeding glad, thou barren, who for a long time didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud for joy, thou who didst not travail in birth: for such is now thy happy state, that many more are the children of the desolate than of her who had an husband.” The children of the christian church, the spiritual seed of the true Sarah, shall (as the prophet there suggests) be abundantly more numerous than those of the Jewish ever were; and what we see at present of its enlargement and prosperity may encourage our faith

27 For it is written, Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not; for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband.

c For it is written.] Mr. Pierce has a learned and ingenious dissertation (at the end of his paraphrase on the Philippians) to prove that the apostle here asserts that Isaiah, in the passage he quotes from his prophecy, points out the allegorical correspondence between the Christian Church and Sarah, on which he had been insisting in this section; and accordingly this critic renders those words in ver. 24. δύνα ἔτιν ἀλλοτρίων, which things are allegorized, that is, are actually turned to this sense by the prophet: who (as he says) calls out, in his livth. chapter, to some woman celebrated for having children after long barrenness, to shew that something like this should happen after the sufferings and resurrection of the Messiah, which had been foretold in the liiid. And having observed that no person mentioned in the Old Testament can so properly be addressed in such language as Sarah, who in respect of children might be called desolate, whereas Hagar was the married wife and mother, he thinks it reasonable to conclude from hence, that she was referred to by Isaiah, as St. Paul according to him asserts in this text—But, not to insist on the impropriety of giving Hagar, who was only a slave and a concubine, the character and title of the married wife, in opposition to Sarah, the principal wife and undoubted mistress of the family, I think the context in Isaiah, plainly shews that the prophet refers to the future conversion of the Jews, and the increase and prosperity of that happy nation after its long rejection, as far exceeding what it had known before in its most favoured state. (Isa. liv. 6, & seq.) And therefore I would choose to explain this passage in St. Paul, as an allusion, rather than an argument; which frees it from many objections and embarrassments to which it would otherwise have appeared liable.—If any should urge that such glosses are of little importance, it may be sufficient to reply, that they were much in the Jewish taste, and that we may assure ourselves that the apostles were preserved from any thing in them which was not perfectly agreeable to the mind of the Spirit.—On the whole, I entirely agree with Mr. Chandler, that this part of the epistle was not intended to prove Christianity, but to illustrate the different genius of that and Judaism, and to shew that not all the carnal descendants of Abraham, but the spiritual offspring only, were heirs, even according to the principles which the Jews themselves readily admitted. See Chandler of Miracles, p. 345, 346. And Dr. Syke's interpretation agrees with this. Compare Sykes on the Truth of Christianity, p. 198, 199.

28 Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise.

29 But as then he that was born after the flesh, persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now.

30 Nevertheless, what saith the scripture? Cast out the bond-woman and her son: for the son of the bond woman shall not be heir with the son of the free-woman.

31 So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond woman, but of the free.

GAL. V. 1. Stand fast therefore in the liberty faith in the promises relating to its yet more universal spread and brighter glory in the latter day.

Now, to apply what I have been saying to ourselves, we brethren, like Isaac, are the children of Abraham, not according to the flesh, but as born of the Spirit in virtue of the promise; and so are heirs of the blessings of the covenant, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, in consequence of our believing in Christ, and being united to him, as the Seed in which it was declared that all the families of the earth shall be blessed. But indeed the parallel holds farther still, in this respect; that as then he who was born after the flesh, that is, Ishmael, in whose production there was nothing beyond the common course of nature; mocked and derided, and so persecuted him [who was born] after the Spirit, that is, Isaac, who was produced as the spiritual seed by the special energy of God's miraculous power, even so, [it is] now: the carnal Jews, who are the seed of Abraham, after the flesh, abuse and persecute us Christians, who are Abraham's seed after the Spirit. But what saith the scripture in regard to this? The oracle is correspondent to the case before us, for it there follows, (Gen. xxi. 10.) "Cast out the bond-woman and her insolent son; for the son of the bond-woman shall not inherit with Isaac, the son of the free-woman;" which howsoever grievous it might seem to Abraham, when it was said by Sarah, yet God himself confirmed the sentence, and directed that it should be done; and in like manner also shall the rebellious Jews be treated who, notwithstanding their boasted descent from Abraham, shall be cast out of the church and family of God, and shall be visibly expelled and (as it were) turned out of doors by him, as the mocking Ishmael was, for insulting those whom God hath chosen for his covenant children, and shall not be permitted to be heirs of the promise with them.

So then, upon the whole, my brethren, we that believe in Christ are not children of the bond-woman, under subjection to the servile dispensation of the law; but we are children of the free-woman, and have the privilege of being called into a state of liberty under the spiritual covenant of the gospel. See to it, therefore, that you strenuously maintain the privilege and freedom you are called to, and without yielding scri.

viii.

Gal.
IV. 28.

Gal
v. 1

in

SECT.
VIII.Gal.
V. 1.

in the least to those who are endeavouring to seduce you to a subjection to the law, let me exhort you to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free^d: contend earnestly for the purity and honour of that religion which he hath established, and be not persuaded to be entangled again with the yoke of bondage; of which you appear to be in danger, from what I hear of your circumstances, and am informed of the temper of some among you.

berthy wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage.

IMPROVEMENT.

Chap.
iv. 21.
& seq.

LET us not allow ourselves to cavil at a passage like this that we have now been reading, but submit to the authority of this divinely inspired interpreter, who we are sure was enabled to explain and improve scripture in such a manner as he, by whose Spirit it was dictated, knew to be most agreeable to its spiritual design.

iv. 31.

Let us bless God, that we are children of the free-woman; that we are so happy as to be called to so liberal and ingenuous a dispensation, and are not fettered with that yoke of bondage, or doomed to those servile terrors, which would have been so grievous, had we been left to them unsupported by the grace of the gospel, and which would so much have abated our comforts, had they been incorporated with the Christian dispensation.

27 Well may we rejoice to hear in prophecy of the glorious increase here promised to the church; let us be thankful that it hath in part been accomplished: and let it invigorate our prayers for the hastening that happy time, when the desolate shall enlarge the place of her tents, and stretch forth the curtains of her habitations; when she shall lengthen her cords, and strengthen her stakes; and, though long afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, she shall see her pavement of fair colours, and her foundations of sapphires: her windows shall be made of agates, and her gates of carbuncles. (Isa. liv. 1, 2, 11, 12.)

29 In the mean time, let us guard against the disingenuous temper of the son of the bond-woman, against every thing that may look like persecuting our brethren. It is much better, if such be the will of God, that we should suffer ill usage from them; staying our

^d Therefore stand fast in the liberty, &c.] This exhortation is so evidently grounded on what the apostle had been saying just before, that it seems best to be connected with it, and I have therefore placed it at the end of this section. It is made the close of the fourth chapter in three of Stephens' copies; which seems to be more proper than to make it, as we generally do, the beginning of another chapter.

our souls upon the promises of God, which shall all be assuredly accomplished in their season. Yet may all this meekness and gentleness be exercised, in full consistency with that generous care to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ, hath made us free, which we owe to ourselves, our brethren, and our children; and indeed owe to the honour of our common Christianity, and to the regard we should express to him who hath broken the yoke from our shoulders; who cannot be pleased to see us voluntarily entangling ourselves with it anew, or meanly lying down under the oppressive hands of those who in the abuse of his sacred name would presume again to bind it upon us.

sect.
viii.

Chap.
v. 1.

SECT. IX.

The Apostle urges them more resolutely to retain the doctrine of justification by Divine grace; and renews his caution against the efforts of those seducing teachers who had done so much to alienate their minds from it. Gal. V. 2—15.

GAL. V. 2.

BEHOLD, I Paul, say unto you, That if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing.

GALATIANS V. 2.

I HAVE exhorted you, as children of the promise, and born not of the bond-woman, but the free, to maintain your Christian liberty, and guard against the encroachments of those who would break in upon it. And I now plainly tell you, that I particularly mean those Judaizing teachers with whom the church is at present so much infested: in reference to whose tenets, behold, I Paul, whatever may have falsely been suggested of my favouring their sentiments and sometimes preaching circumcision, expressly say unto you, That if ye, who are by birth and education Gentiles, submit to be circumcised, with a dependance on the observation of those Jewish rites to which ye are thereby obliged for your justification before God ^a, Christ shall profit you nothing, and all that he hath done and suffered will be of no advantage to you: for if the whole confidence of the soul do not rest upon him for salvation, he will reject those divided

sect.
ix.

Gal.
v. 2.

^a If ye be circumcised, with a dependance on the observation, &c.] Common sense plainly requires to take the assertion with such limits; which is also necessary to reconcile it with the hopes of all Jewish believers, and with the conduct of St. Paul himself in circumcising Timothy (Acts xvi. 3). And this accounts for the indifference with which he elsewhere speaks of circumcision as availing nothing. See chap. v. 6; vi. 15; and 1 Cor. 19.

SECT.
ix.Gal.
V. 3.

vided regards which are offered to him, and interpret them as an affront rather than an acceptable homage.

- And I repeat it as a point of the highest importance, which is agreeable to what I have always preached, and do now testify again to every particular man among you who is circumcised, in the view I have just been mentioning, with a dependance on that rite for justification, that he is thereby become a debtor to do the whole law: for as circumcision binds a man fully to observe all the other rituals of the Mosaic dispensation, so will the tenet which I now oppose leave you under the rigor of that covenant which required perfect and sinless obedience, and left every wilful transgressor under a curse, from which by the law he could never be delivered.
- 4 It is therefore evident that Christ is become of none effect to such of you, but must have appeared and died in vain as to any benefit you would have by him. whosoever of you are seeking to be justified by the works of the law; yea by this means, whatever your profession may have been of a regard to Christ, ye are indeed fallen from the grace of the gospel, and have in effect renounced your expectations from it. For we who are true Christians, and have been savingly enlightened in the knowledge of the truth, do, through the influence of the Spirit, whose gifts and graces are so glorious a seal of the gospel, wait for the hope of righteousness and life, not on account of any claim or title we have to it by our obedience to the law, but by a sincere and operative faith, casting our souls on Christ as condemned creatures who have no hope in themselves, and trusting in the grace of God for justification through the redemption he has wrought. And herein we act according to the true tenor of the gospel; for in the dispensation of grace by Christ Jesus, to those who would obtain salvation by him, neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, and no man will either be saved or condemned for being or not being circumcised; but our interest in the blessings of the gospel depends upon a sincere faith in Christ, which operates by an unfeigned love to God and man, and so engages

3 For I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law.

4 Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace.

5 For we, through the Spirit, wait for the hope of righteousness by faith.

6 For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love.

[h Faith which operates by love] There is some degree of ambiguity in the original expression, h' agapan uegghiam, which is capable of being differently rendered, and may gages us, from a principle of holy gratitude, to yield a sincere obedience to all the known will of God, renouncing any dependence on that obedience, how complete soever it may seem, as the meritorious cause of our acceptance with him.

SECT.
IX.
GAL.
V. 6.

7 Ye did run well; who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?

This is true genuine Christianity; and you⁷ once received it as such, and appeared to be under the influence of it: in regard to which I may say, Ye did once run well at your first setting out in the Christian race, and seemed to exert yourselves in a very happy manner; who then of late has hindered you^c from obeying the truth, with that readiness and perseverance which might reasonably have been expected from so hopeful a beginning, and has turned you out of the way in which you were making so fair a progress: Of this I am sure, that the⁸

8 This persuasion cometh not of him that calleth you.

persuasion you now seem to have entertained of the necessity of mixing Judaism with Christianity, and seeking justification, in part at least, by Mosaical observances, [comes] not from him that called you into the profession of the gospel^d; nor did I teach you any such lesson when I was made the happy instrument of bringing you to the Christian faith, but have largely and earnestly inculcated the contrary. There were indeed⁹ some secret workings of this pernicious principle which I now oppose, that early became visible among you; and I find they have spread in such a manner as to shew that a little leaven, if it be suffered to continue, operates unseen, till it diffuseth itself on every side, and leaveneth the whole mass. But having laid the matter¹⁰ thus before you, and warned you of the danger of th's leaven, with that fidelity and zeal which love to your souls and a regard to the honour of Christ requires, I have this confidence in you through

9 A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

10 I have confidence in you through the Lord, that you will be none otherwise minded: but be that troubleth may signify either which operates and works by love, or which is wrought, inspired, and perfected by love; which latter sense some have preferred, and have taken occasion from hence to shew how much charity tends to establish and perfect faith. But I prefer the more usual sense, when I think to be authorized by the use of the same word, Eph. iii. 20, and Col. i. 29.

^c Who hath hindered you? It hath been observed that ἀναστασις is an Olympic expression, answerable to ἀγχις; and it properly signifies coming across the course while a person is running in it in such a manner as to jostle and throw him out of the way.

^d From him that called you.] This expression of him that called, or colleth you, agrees with what he had used before, chap. i. 6; and in both places it would seem he means himself. See note f on that passage, sect. i. p. 259.

SECT.
ix.Gal.
V. 10.

through the grace of the Lord Jesus, on whom I humbly depend for the influences of his Spirit, and to whose blessing I commit all my endeavours, that ye will be no otherwise minded, and entertain no other sentiments, as to what is necessary to your justification, than ye have been taught by me: but he that troubleth you, and would pervert your minds from the purity of the faith, shall certainly bear [his] judgment of deserved censure here, and, if he persist in his evil, of weighty condemnation hereafter, whosoever he be: God will judge him at last for a conduct like this, and in the mean time he has reason to apprehend my animadverting upon him, with that apostolic authority which some of my adversaries have found to their cost they were unable to resist. (Compare Acts xiii. 10, 11; 1 Cor. v. 4, 5; 2 Cor. x. 6, 8; xiii. 10; and 1 Tim. i. 23.)

- 11 I know there are some who have insinuated, as if I myself favoured the very principles elsewhere which I so much oppose among you; but I leave it to you, my brethren, when you consider the treatment I have met with from these zealots, to judge if the contrary do not evidently appear. For if I yet preach the necessity of circumcision, and insist upon submitting to it in order to salvation, why do I still suffer such grievous persecution, as it is evident to the whole world I endure, by the malice of the Jews, who are every where endeavouring to raise, not only prejudices, but tumults against me? Then surely, if it be true that I agree with them on this head, the offence taken at the doctrine of salvation by the cross of Christ is ceased; and in effect I give up that which I have been so long contending for, and they have as eagerly been struggling bleth you, shall bear his judgment, whosoever he be.

11 And I brethren; if I yet preach circumcision, why do I yet suffer persecution? then is the offence of the cross ceased.

e He that troubleth you shall bear [his] judgment, whosoever he be.] Some think that the apostle here refers to one particular man, who was more forward than the rest, and had been chiefly instrumental in corrupting them: but by his adding at the close, whosoever he be, he seems to intend it as a general declaration; which best agrees with what follows in ver. 12, and what he elsewhere says in this epistle, where he speaks always of their seducing teachers in the plural number. (See chap. i. 7; iv. 17; vi. 12, 13.) And when he thus declares, that whosoever he be that troubled them he shall bear his judgment, though some would understand this only of the censure which the church should pass upon him, or of the punishment he should suffer when St. Paul came to exert his apostolical authority, of which we have several instances elsewhere (see note f, on 1 Cor. iv. 21, Vol. III. p. 597). yet it is reasonable to extend it to the solemn account he should give to God, and to the condemnation he should certainly receive if he persisted in the endeavours he was using to subvert the truth.

12 I would they were even cut off which trouble you.

gling against. But I am so far from agreeing with them, that I could wish they were even cut off entirely from the communion of the Christian church, and cast out of it as unworthy members, who thus unsettle your minds, and disturb you¹, by so many false suggestions and irregular methods, as do indeed well deserve such a censure.

SCHE.
IX. 12.
Gal.
V. 13.

13 For brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another.

This might be a means of restoring to the church that peace which is so agreeable to the principles of our common religion and calling; for it is manifest, my brethren, ye have been called by the gospel to liberty and freedom from the bondage of the Mosaic ceremonies: only see to it, that ye [abuse] not this liberty for an occasion of unwarrantable indulgence to any irregular appetites of the flesh, as if we were set free from the observance of the moral precepts of the law; and remember that it is not only consistent with that liberty, but greatly subservient to it, that ye should look upon yourselves as bound, by the exercise of the most cordial mutual love, to serve one another. For all the law with which we Christians have any concern, so far as it relates to our fellow-creatures, is fulfilled in the observation of one word or precept [even] in this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, and treat him as in a change of circumstances thou wouldst reasonably expect and desire to be treated by him. But if, instead of cultivating these Christian and humane sentiments, ye indulge a fierce and savage disposition, so as to bite and devour one another, it will be necessary to take heed that ye be not destroyed by one another, as wild beasts sometimes worry one another till both are slain: at least it is certain, that by these mutual contentions you take the readiest way to disgrace, and so far as in you lies to overthrow, the religion to which you profess a regard.

14 For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

15 But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.

IMPROVE-

[I could wish they were even cut off who disturb you.] It by no means agrees with the gentle genius of Christianity, to suppose that the apostle (who understood it so well, and cultivated it so much) should mean by this to intimate that he wished them dead, or wished that any bodily evil were inflicted upon them, by human violence. All arguments therefore which are drawn from this text in favour of persecuting principles must be very inconclusive. But when we consider the particular circumstances in which these seducing teachers opposed the apostle, it will appear that they very well deserved that ecclesiastical censure which according to the paraphrase he here wishes to be pronounced against them.

IMPROVEMENT.

SECT
xi.

How awful is the supposition which the apostle makes, even with regard to those who had distinguished themselves by so zealous a profession; to those before whose eyes Christ had been evidently sent forth as crucified (chap. iii. 1), and who would once have been ready to have plucked out their own eyes for the minister that preached him to them (chap. iv. 15); that he should speak of it with regard to such as a possible case, that on the whole Christ might profit them nothing! Let our souls dread the thought of being in the number of those to whom he shall be thus unprofitable.

How heavy will our account be, and how dearly shall we pay for the amusements of the sublimest knowledge, or the most sanguine hopes we entertain, if this be the end of all! That we may none of us be so unhappy, let us be very careful that we do not think of seeking justification by the law, in such a manner as to fall from grace: but as no right or title to it can be obtained but by an interest in Christ, let us through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness and life, by faith in him. May the blessed Spirit of God form and support in our minds such an hope; which, if it be thus formed, will never make us ashamed. (Rom. v. 5.) Let us be therefore animated by it; and if at first we have run well, let us always consider the dispatch we may have made already in our Christian race, as an excitement to farther vigour, rather than an encouragement to indolence and sloth.

Let the Spirit which these and so many other parts of the New Testament breathe, teach us to moderate our zeal about circumcision and uncircumcision, about the rituals and externals of religion, and to cultivate more and more that faith which operates by love, and therefore will express itself by keeping the commandments of God. This will engage us, by the best and most generous principles, to serve one another in our truest interests, and to fulfil that royal law which is comprehended in this one important word, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Surely we have not as yet attained to perfection in this excellent grace; sure there is room for new attainments, even in the best. But O, how lamentably deficient are the generality of Christians! yea rather, how scandalously and how fatally hath the opposite principle prevailed! so that, instead of that mutual love, of which our gracious Redeemer was the great teacher and example, the contrary principle of hatred and malignity hath triumphed to such a degree, as to turn the church into a camp of warriors, or rather (as it may be be called) into a theatre of wild beasts, where they have been worrying one another almost to death, yea in many instances biting and devouring one another, till they have actually been destroyed one by another. Let us take heed, after all the Christian and the Protestant interest hath suffered by these fatal divisions, that we do not catch the contagion, and bear our part in so common, yet so pernicious a mischief. It is a spreading evil, and a little of this leaven often diffuses itself over the whole mass; but nothing is more manifest than that it is a persuasion, which is so far from coming of him that called us, that it is indeed the most direct violation of his distinguishing precept.

Let us remember that the time will come, when he that troubleth the church, either in one way, by unscriptural impositions, to which the apostle here refers, or in another, by an unreasonable stiffness about things indifferent, will certainly bear his judgment, whosoever he be. Let us therefore rather choose to suffer persecution than to share in such guilt; and be continually praying for that Divine wisdom which may teach us so to bear afflictions as not to increase the offence of the cross, and so to stand fast in our liberty as not to abuse it for an occasion to gratify those irregular passions, which, to whatever high original they may pretend, are indeed to be traced no higher than a carnal principle, and to be numbered among the works of the flesh.

SECT. IX.

Ver.

8

9

10

11

12

13

SECT. X.

He exhorts the Galatians to a conversation suitable to the dispensation of grace which they had received, and warning them against the several vices of the flesh, recommends to them the habitual practice of the graces of the Spirit, and presses them in particular to purity, spirituality, and mutual love. Gal. V. 16, to the end.

GAL. V. 16.
THIS I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.

GALATIANS V. 16.

I HAVE been cautioning you against that contentious temper which is so great a reproach to the professors of Christianity, and tends so much to the detriment of our common faith. But, that I may effectually guard you against this and every other evil, I have a charge to give you, and in one word I say, Walk in the Spirit, and at all times endeavour to conduct yourselves as under the influences of that blessed Agent and in a way agreeable to the new nature he hath given you, and then ye will not fulfil the lust of the flesh; but notwithstanding the remainders of

SECT. X.
 Gal. V. 16.

SECT.
X.Gal.
V. 16.

of corruption in you, yet by his powerful suggestions, and by the gracious aids that you receive from him, you will be happily preserved from the predominancy of carnal and irregular appetites, so that the work of mortification, and all the exercises of true godliness, will daily become more and more easy and familiar to you.

17 And this precaution is absolutely necessary in present circumstances, by reason of the continual contest that there is between the flesh and Spirit in the renewed soul: for while you are here in the body, the flesh is lusting on the one hand, and hath desires contrary to the motions and dictates of the Spirit^a, or of that gracious principle which is communicated by the Holy Spirit in his regenerating operations on the heart; and, on the other hand, the Spirit [hath desires] contrary to the appetites and inclinations of the flesh, or of that principle of corruption which is introduced by sin, and the remains of which are ready to exert their influence in the regenerate, and these two principles are directly opposite to each other both in their nature and their tendency; so that, upon the whole, ye do not the things that ye would, and are indeed incapable of doing them without your overbearing, either the desires of animal nature, or the nobler dictates of an enlightened and sanctified Spirit. Now surely you may easily judge, since one of these must be opposed, and one only can be pleased and pursued, to which of them the preference is to be given.

18 But, for your encouragement to a wise and happy

17 For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would.

18 But if ye be led by

^a The flesh hath desires contrary to the Spirit.] As it is plain that by the flesh, which is the same with what the apostle elsewhere calls the body of sin and the old man (Rom. vi. 6), we are to understand that natural corruption and depravity which is the ruling principle in a state of nature, and has so far infected all the faculties of man, that even the regenerate are troubled still with the remainders of it, and find it working in the motions of in-dwelling sin within them: so by the Spirit, which is here set in opposition to it, and is elsewhere expressed by the new man that is put on by such as are renewed in the spirit of their mind (Eph. iv. 23, 24), we are to understand that supernatural principle of grace which is imparted from above to the renewed soul, to overcome the passions of the carnal mind, to set us free from the dominion of our lusts, and to inspire us with a love to holiness; which Divine and heavenly principle being communicated to us by the Holy Spirit, has frequently the title of the Spirit given to it, as it is plainly the effect and fruit of it; for that which is born of the Spirit, is Spirit, (John iii. 6.)—And there is such a contrariety in these two principles, that they are continually opposing one another in their desires and tendency, so that (as the apostle adds) ye do not the thing that ye would (for, so it is expressed in the original, and not, ye cannot do, &c.): ye do them not without doing violence to the opposite principle that would be drawing you another way; which is agreeable to what the apostle elsewhere says, Rom. vii. 19, For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not that I do.

^b The

by the Spirit, ye are not under the law.

py choice, you will, I hope, always remember, that if ye be led by the Spirit of God in the paths of evangelical holiness and obedience, and act according to that new and spiritual nature he has formed in you, in the prevailing bent and tenor of your lives, ye are not then under the condemning sentence of the law, but are in consequence of this entitled to every benefit and privilege of the gospel.

SECT.
X.

Gal.
V. 18.

19 Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness,

And a farther argument will arise from considering the different tendency of these principles, and the effects or fruits of which they are productive, on the one hand and on the other. Now, as to the former part of the view, the works of the flesh are very obvious and manifest, which are such as [these:] Adultery, a crime to be considered as in the first rank of enormities, as tending so directly to embitter conjugal life, and to introduce confusion and ruin into families; fornication, which, how light soever heathens may make of it, is in the sight of God a very grievous offence; as all uncleanness and immodesty of behaviour, and all lasciviousness in every kind and act of it, must also be, though fools who make a mock of sin mention these things in sport rather than with detestation.

20 Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations,

Idolatry likewise proceeds from this corrupt principle, as it inclines men to choose some sensible object for their devotions, and often such an one as may patronize their most irregular passions. From hence is also witchcraft, whereby desperate wretches are led to attempt an express association with infernal spirits in order

b The works of the flesh are manifest.] As some of the fruits which are here specified seem to consist in errors of the mind, and others are the product of an evil disposition of spirit, it has been thought not easy to perceive with what propriety they are called works of the flesh; and Dr. Whitby offers several considerations to account for it. But if the flesh be taken (as it appears from hence it should be) for that natural corruption which in the note before is said to have infected all the faculties of man, and so extends to all the powers of the mind as well as to the appetites of the body, there is no difficulty in ascribing each of the particulars here enumerated to the flesh, as it is evident they all proceed from that corruption, by means of which even the mind and conscience is defiled. Tit. i. 15.

c Witchcraft.] I know some would render the word νεφελισμοσ poisoning; but I think it is with justice Mr. Leigh has observed, that this is comprehended under the word murders; nor is there any reason to believe the flesh so particularly inclined to this one kind of murder, as to give reason for specifying it rather than any other. It is certain that, on account of the drugs made use of in some supposed magical compositions, this word is often used to express those practices in which combinations with invisible malignant powers, were believed and intended, to which (whether they had, or had not, that real foundation which has generally been believed) it is well known the Gentiles, even in the most learned nations, were very much addicted, as Mr. Weston has shewn at large in the 7th chapter of his late learned treatise on the Rejections of Christian Magic.

d Demons

SECT.
X.Gal.
V. 20.

order to gratify that malignant disposition of mind which excites and arms them against those who are regarded by them with an evil eye : and to the same original are owing implacable and bitter enmities, outrageous strifes, and quarrels, inordinate transports of ill-placed and ill-proportioned zeal, deep resentments treasured up in the mind, clamorous contentions vented with eagerness and obstinately carried on, together with the keen divisions of a party spirit^d, among those who ought to be united in one interest and affection : yea, sometimes these ill principles proceed so far as to produce seditions in the state, and heresies also in religious communities^e, by which professing Christians are induced to separate from each other, and to form sects, who, instead of maintaining true candour and benevolence, renounce and condemn each other. To this corrupt source we are also to trace the many envyings which are so commonly to be seen against the prosperity and success of others ; and sometimes murders too, contrived and perpetrated by those whose passions and interests clash to such a degree, that nothing less than the destruction of the antagonist can appease the rage ; and, to complete the catalogue, all kinds of irregular self-indulgence, and particularly drunkenness, that sinks a man into a beast, and those disorderly and gluttonous revellings^f, by which the rational emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies.

21 Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings ; and such like : of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall

^d Divisions of a party spirit.] We render ἀρχαίαιαι seditions ; but as that rather expresses a state crime, and the original word seems more general, I choose to express it by a periphrasis, sufficiently distinguishable from the other evils here mentioned, and tending naturally towards those heresies mentioned in the next article, as I understand it : yet, as seditions in the state are 'great evils, and the word ἀρχαίαιαι may express dispositions leading to them, I introduce the mention of them into the paraphrase.

^e Heresies.] The proper signification of heresies here seems to be what I have briefly expressed in the paraphrase, and I must beg leave to refer to what Mr. Haller has written upon this subject, as containing the reasons which have determined me to prefer it ; for this is by no means a proper place to discuss a subject so much controverted. Yet I doubt not but heresies, in the ecclesiastical sense, as distinguished from what I take to be the scriptural, may generally be said to be works of the flesh ; as bad inclinations of mind naturally lead to bad opinions, and to a haughty and factious manner of obtruding them upon others.

^f Revellings.] Κῶμος, or revellings, among the Greeks (as Mr. Locke observes) were " a disorderly spending of the night in feasting, with a licentious indulging to wine, good cheer, music, dancing, &c." and in this sense the word is explained by Hesychius and Suidas. We meet with it but twice elsewhere, (Rom. xiii. 13 ; and 1 Pet. iv. 3) and in both places it is joined, as here, with other riotous excesses. But though the heathens were notoriously addicted to them, it is a sad evidence of the prevailing power of corruption, and it were well the consequences of it were more laid to heart, that among those who bear the name of Christians, any should make it a diversion to resemble them in such indulgencies, and not be ashamed of running to the same excess of riot.

g Fidelity.]

shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

tional powers are in a great measure extinguished, or at least rendered incapable of performing their offices in a proper manner. These, and such like, are the works of the flesh; concerning which I now solemnly forewarn you, as I have also formerly declared for your security when I was present with you, that they who practise such things, whatever zeal they may pretend for the externals of religion in any of the forms of it, shall not inherit the kingdom of God, or be admitted to the possession of it; and are indeed so far from having any title to be numbered among Christians, that they shall soon be disowned, and turned out of that place which they have no right to hold in the church, with just infamy and detestation.

SECT.
X.
Gal.
V. 21.

22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith,

Such, I say, are the fruits and tendencies of ²² the flesh: but the blessed fruit of the Spirit, in those who are governed by that gracious principle which is derived from him, is something quite of a different nature; for this, wherever it hath impregnated the mind, produces the amiable dispositions of undissembled love and holy joy, of universal benevolence of heart, and of that cheerful temper which is naturally connected with it: it engages us to cultivate peace with all men; and where we meet with injuries and provocations from any, to bear them with much long-suffering, before we enter into any contentions about them: it forms us to gentleness in the whole of our conduct, and inspires a tender care that we may not, by any thing rough and overbearing, grieve and injure before we are aware: it excites us to such acts of generous goodness as our own circumstances may afford, and those of our neighbour require: it is also the Spirit of truth as well as of love, and leads us most strictly to observe fidelity^g, or good faith and uprightness, in all our dealings, neither in any instance imposing upon others, nor failing in any of those engagements which it is
in

^g Fidelity.] It is observed in note a, on Mat. xxiii. 23, Vol. II. p. 222, that the word πίστις has undoubtedly this signification in many places. So we may understand it of the faithfulness of God, or his *fideli*ty to his promises, Rom. iii. 3. and where it is applied to servants we expressly render it *fideli*ty. Tit. ii. 10. And though it generally signifies the grace of faith or the confidence reposed in another, yet where we find it joined, as in the place before us, with other moral virtues, it may be rather taken to denote *fideli*ty. See Mat. xxiii. 23; 1 Tim. iv. 12; vi. 11; 2 Tim. ii. 22; iii. 10; and Rev. ii. 19.

SECT.
X.Gal.
V. 23.

in our power to fulfil : It teaches us mēckness, even when we are obliged to reprove others or otherwise to animadvert upon them for their faults ; and, with regard to the government of our corporeal appetites, it dictates the strictest temperance, that we may neither exceed in the quantity nor the kind of our food, or in any other indulgence of animal nature. These, as you plainly see, are most excellent dispositions, and against such [things] as these there is no law ; they have so manifest and evident a goodness in them, that they never were forbidden by any human institutions ; and those who in the general course of their lives practise them, under the influence of this Spirit, shall by the grace of the gospel be delivered from the condemning sentence of the Divine law.

24 And this is now, upon the whole, the character of all true Christians ; for they who indeed are Christ's, they who have received his Spirit, and whom he will finally own as belonging to him, have crucified the flesh with all [its] irregular passions and desires, and doomed it to a slow and painful, but to a certain death ; as if, like one that is crucified, the body of sin were fastened to the cross, and left to expire upon it ; and this they do, out of love to the memory of their crucified Lord, by a continual regard to whom they are animated strenuously to persevere in so self-denying a resolution.

25 If therefore we profess to live in the Spirit ^h, if we profess to be members of the Christian church, and to have that inward principle of Divine life which is produced by the Spirit, and continually subsists on communications from him, let us also make it our constant care, in consistency with such a profession, to walk in the Spirit, in a regular and orderly manner, taking every step according to rule and under his

26 influence. And after all our care, as it is only by his grace that we are what we are, let us not be vain-glorious, or conceited of our own endowments or performances ; provoking one another to mutual ill usage by a contemptuous carriage

23 Meekness, temperance ; against such there is no law.

24 And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts.

25 If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit.

26 Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another envying one another.

^h If we live in the Spirit.] Mr. Howe insists largely on the energy of this phrase, living in the Spirit, as expressing in terms nearly resembling those in Acts xvii. 28, our continual dependance on its influence :

and also illustrates the significancy of the word ενωραμην in the latter clause of the verse, as explained in the paraphrase. See Howe on the Spirit, Vol. I. p. 237.

riage towards any whom we consider as beneath us, or secretly envying one another for any imagined or real advantage which our brother may possess and we desire: but rather, with an unaffected humility and true benevolence of heart, let us rejoice in the happiness of others, and endeavour to promote it to the utmost of our power.

SECT.
X.
Gal.
V. 26

IMPROVEMENT.

LET us learn to consider this our mortal life as a state of wear- Ver.
fare in which we are to be always struggling with enemies, with 17 whom we are never to make either peace or truce; and since while we dwell in the body we shall still find the flesh lusting against the Spirit, let it be our constant concern, that the desires of the flesh may be opposed and mortified, and that the interests of the Spirit may be more and more advanced. And though the contrariety is such between them, that we cannot completely and continually do the things which we would, let us in the main be 18 led by the Spirit, and give up our rational and governing powers more and more to its holy dictates, that we may not fulfil the lusts 16 of the flesh; and though it still continues to solicit and disturb us, sin shall be kept from reigning in us.

We see what the works of the flesh are; which, if we really belong to Christ, we shall resolutely bind and crucify, with its af- 24 fections and lusts. Let us endeavour more and more to subdue them, and learn (as it were) to use the instruments of his death most effectually to accomplish the death of sin; bringing the old man to be crucified with him (Rom. vi. 6), and nailing it to that cross to which he hath nailed that decree of death which in consequence of sin lay against us. (Col. ii. 14.)

In opposition to that cursed train of irregular and malignant affections which are here described as the works of the flesh (the 19, 21
continued indulgence of which is absolutely inconsistent with our 20, 20
hope of inheriting the kingdom of God), let us cultivate those amiable dispositions of mind against which there is no law: and may 22, 23
the Spirit of love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, the Spirit of faith, meekness, and temperance, work them more and more in our souls!

How vain are the cares of the generality of men to adorn their bodies, to improve their estates, to advance their rank; while their minds remain neglected! Yea, how vain are all cares to cultivate the mind with science, when compared with the infinitely more important care of improving it in such habits of goodness, whereby we shall be brought to resemble God, and be fitted for ever

SECT.
x.

ever to enjoy him ! Let this be all our emulation, and in this let us place our glory ; nor let us go about to provoke one another to 26 any thing but this.

25 We profess to live in the Spirit of God, whose gracious influences are indeed the very life of our souls : let us make it our care also to walk in the Spirit, to regulate every action of our lives, every sentiment of our hearts, by a becoming regard to him ; guarding solicitously against any thing that would grieve him, and encouraging those friendly offices of his, whereby we may be trained up in a growing meekness for the society of the blessed spirits above ; and for that world, where the flesh shall be laid aside till all the seeds of corruption are worn out of its composition, and it be raised as pure as it shall be glorious in the image of that Saviour whose discipline has taught us to seek the victory over it, and whose grace enables us to obtain it.

SECT. XI.

The Apostle pursues his practical exhortations, especially enforcing mutual love, and a care of each other, with a zeal in doing good ; and cautions the Galatians against thinking too favourably of their own spiritual state. Gal. VI. 1—10

GALATIANS VI. 1.

SECT.
xi.Gal.
VI. 1.

I HAVE cautioned you against envy and mutual provocation ; but, my brethren, rest not merely in a freedom from such unkind affections towards each other, but labour to be mutually useful, and that in your best interests ; and if a man be overtaken in any fault through his own frailty, or the surprise of a temptation, do ye who are spiritual^a, and, having received the Spirit of God yourselves, are best fitted for such an office, endeavour to restore such an one and to reduce (as it were) that disjointed member, not with a rigorous severity, but in the spirit of meekness, gentleness, and love ; considering

GAL. VI. 1.

BRETHREN, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit a Ye who are spiritual.] Dr. Whitby, and some others, understand this as a charge addressed to ministers, who by the extraordinary gifts they had received were best fitted for this work. But we know that the word spiritual is in the writings of St. Paul sometimes opposed to carnal (Rom. viii. 14 ; viii. 6 ; 1 Cor. iii. 1.) ; and if it should be allowed here to signify such as were endowed with some supernatural gifts, it would not support the limitation proposed, since the apostle speaks of the Galatians in general as having received the Spirit (chap. iii. 2) : I must therefore think, with Mr. Locke, that the expression here signifies such as were eminent for gifts or graces.

rit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted.

2 Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

ing thyself^b, whosoever thou art, lest thou also being still in the body, and liable to the like assaults, shouldst be tempted, and fall as thy brother hath done, so as on this account to stand in need of the same kind office from him which thou art now called to render to him. Be ready then 2 in this and all other respects to bear one another's burthens; and let it be your care with mutual tenderness to comfort and support the weak (compare Rom. xv. 1; and 1 Thess. v. 14); accommodating yourselves to each other in the most engaging and obliging manner, that you may thus make all about you as easy and happy as you can; and so, instead of seeking to impose the heavy burden of the Mosaic law on others, you will fulfil that which is especially the law of Christ, even that law of love which was enjoined by him as his command, and will esteem it as your highest honour to wear that badge of mutual love by which he requires his disciples to be known; (John xiii. 34, 35; xv. 12.) And surely we may willingly receive that law from one who was himself such an unequalled example of love; and who with so gracious a sympathy bore our burdens of sorrow, and carried away the load of our guilt.

3 For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself.

Remember too the caution I have given you 3 against vain-glory (chap. v. 26), and take heed of an over-weening opinion of yourselves: for if any one think himself to be something considerable, when indeed he is nothing like what he apprehends; and in particular, if he be so conceited of his own sufficiency as to imagine he is wise and good enough to resist any temptation that may arise, and please himself that he may glory in the applause of others as secure from danger, he deceiveth himself, and the worst part of the fraud falls on his own head; so that, instead of gaining from others, or securing to himself that honour which he expects and aims at, he only makes himself so much the more contemptible, and his danger is proportionable to the ^b Considering thyself.] It is justly observed by Mr. Blackwall (Sacr. Class. Vol. I. p. 133, 134), that this sudden transition from the plural number to the singular adds a great deal of beauty and force to the caution: for it is as if the apostle should have said, "Let every particular person among you remember that he may also be in danger through his own frailty; and by thus looking to himself he will be induced to carry it with greater tenderness to others, and will be more disposed to pity and assist them."

SECT.
XI.Gal.
VI. 4.

the high conceit which he hath of himself. But to prevent so great an evil, let every one try and examine his own work by the word of God, the great rule to which all our actions and thoughts should be adjusted, and take care that it be such as God and his own conscience may approve; and then he shall have matter of rejoicing in what he finds in himself alone, and not in the applause he receives from another: he shall then have a solid foundation of delight, in reflecting upon the state of his own soul, and what the grace of God has wrought in him and by him, instead of subsisting precariously and meanly on the good opinion or applause of others, who so frequently know not what it is that they commend, and are imposed upon by false appearances, so that their testimony can give but very little solid satisfaction to the mind that thinks justly and seriously. For every one shall finally bear his own burden, and shall be accountable to God, in the great day when he appears before him, for his own behaviour; so that there is but little room to be solicitous about the sentiments of others, in comparison of that care which we ought to take of our own temper and conduct,

6 A farther advice which I would give you is, Let him that is taught and instructed in the word and doctrine of Christianity, liberally communicate in all good things, according to the ability that God hath given him, to the support and maintenance of him that teacheth him; that so the mind of the teacher may not be kept in an anxious state about his own subsistence, but may with greater composure and cheerfulness attend to the cares of his sacred office.

7 It is indeed an easy thing for interested men to find excuses for the neglect of this and other liberalities which are required by the gospel of Christ; but be not deceived, in this or any other respect, by the treachery of your own hearts, which

4 But let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another.

5 For every man shall bear his own burden.

6 Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things.

7 Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for c He shall have matter of rejoicing in himself alone and not in another.] Mr. Locke thinks that the apostle hints here at the same thing which he expresses afterwards more fully concerning the false teachers (ver. 15), that what they had in view was to glory in others, whom they prevailed with to be circumcised; and so would have καυχόμενοι to be rendered glorifying (which is indeed the common meaning of the word), and would consider it as a caution to them to be careful of their own particular actions, that they were such as would afford them matter of glorying in themselves, and not vainly in others. But the word also signifies rejoicing, as our translators often render it elsewhere (2 Cor. i. 14; Phil. i. 26; ii. 16; Heb. iii. 6), which seems sufficiently to express the sense of it, as I have explained it in the paraphrase, and evidently suits the apostle's way of writing.

for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

which may more fatally impose upon yourselves than upon any others; for though men know not what to answer to some artful pleas which may be invented as an excuse from duty, the blessed God, who penetrates all hearts, as well as sees all external circumstances, is not to be mocked by these vain pretences; for whatsoever a man soweth, whether it be good or bad, whether he be liberal or sparing in it, that shall he also reap^d, and the return shall be answerable to it, both with respect to the kind and degree of it. So that on the one hand, he that soweth ⁸ to his flesh, he that employs his substance, time, and thoughts, merely or chiefly in gratifying and indulging the flesh, or for the satisfaction of his own bodily necessities, conveniences, or pleasures, shall of the flesh reap nothing better than corruption: and as the flesh itself shall soon corrupt in the grave, so will he utterly lose all the fruits of his labour and expence in its service: but, on the other hand, he that soweth to the Spirit, he that under the influences of the Spirit of God employs his capacities, abilities, and possessions, to promote the interests of religion in his own mind and in the world about him, shall, as the fruit of what is thus sown by the continued assistance and grace of the Spirit, reap life everlasting; when he shall leave the world, his immortal spirit shall inherit eternal glory, and whatsoever be his portion now, he shall be fully recompensed at the resurrection of the just (Luke xiv. 14), when all the hope of the sinner is perished.

ser.
xi.
Gal.
VI. 7.

⁹ And let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.

And, having such a prospect then before us, ⁹ let us not be weary or discouraged, in all the labour and fatigue, in all the expence and difficulty of well-doing; for in due season, or in that proper time which the wisdom and goodness of God hath appointed (even when the harvest is come, for which it is best that we should now wait,) we shall reap an abundant and ample reward, if we do not faint, and suffer our hands to hang down, either through sloth or fear. ¹⁰ As

¹⁰ As we have therefore

^d Be not deceived, &c.] The apostle here with great propriety and force exposes the evasions some would make use of to excuse themselves from acts of liberality; by which, however they might impose on others, they would egregiously deceive themselves, as every circumstance lies open to an all-seeing God, and they assuredly should reap according as they sowed; a metaphor which he employs elsewhere to excite to liberality (2 Cor. ix. 6); the thought of which most silence every vain pretence that may be brought at most so plain a duty, and is most admirably suited to regulate and heighten the proportion, as well as to enforce the practice of it.

SECT.
xi.Gal.
VI. 10.

long therefore as we have opportunity, as long as life continues, and Providence puts power in our hands, let us endeavour to do good to all men, to strangers and enemies, as well as brethren and friends, but especially to them who are of the household of faith, to them who are united to us in the bonds of Christian faith and love, and who on that account, as belonging to one family, and heirs of the same hope, have a peculiar claim to our regard.

fore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. THESE exhortations of the apostle cannot be expressed in more lively terms, and it is scarce possible to represent them in clearer and plainer language. The great difficulty here, and in other such instances, is to bring our hearts to submit to what our understanding must so readily apprehend and approve. Let us earnestly pray that God would diffuse more of his Spirit on all professing Christians, that, beholding each other with undissembled and fervent love, every one may affectionately endeavour to advance the happiness of all; and, instead of severely censuring one another, let us endeavour mutual reformation, by such exhortations and advices as different circumstances may require: doing all in the spirit of Christian meekness, and in an humble sense of our own infirmities. Let us pray that the law of Christ, the new commandment he has given us to love one another, may in all its extent be ever sacred to us, and that in consequence of the regard we owe to so benevolent a Master, there may be a constant readiness in us to assist each other under every burden, to relieve according to our ability every want, and to do good to all as we have opportunity, but especially to those of the household of faith, who as belonging to that household, whatever their station or circumstance in life may be, ought to be dear to every member of the family.

Let us remember that there is as certain connection between our conduct here and our state hereafter, as there is between the kind of grain sown and the harvest to be reaped from it. The generality, alas, are sowing to the flesh, and the harvest to such will be shame and corruption: but for our parts, let us sow to the Spirit liberally and largely, and have our fruit unto holiness, that we may thus inherit everlasting life (Rom. vi. 22). And when we are ready to faint, let us encourage ourselves and each other with the prospect of that blessed day, when, though the seed-time may be attended with tears, we shall come again rejoicing, bringing our sheaves of honour and joy with us (Psal. cxxvi. 5, 6.) It is in due

due season, it is at the time God has wisely appointed, that we shall receive this reward of grace; let us wait for it, as we well may, with patience and humility. SECT. XI.

The day is coming when every one shall bear his own burden,⁵ and each of us shall answer for himself; that awful day, when every one shall reap the fruit of his own way, and shall receive according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad (2 Cor. v. 10.) Let us see to it, therefore, not to deceive ourselves with a vain imagination that we are something, when we are nothing; and not be satisfied to rest in the good opinion which others have of us, so as to have our rejoicing in them. And, whatsoever duty⁴ be required of us, let us not amuse ourselves with trifling excuses, which never can deceive that God who is not to be mocked; but⁷ let us set ourselves in earnest, ever to cultivate true inward religion, even that of the heart, in the sight of him who searcheth it, then will the testimony of our conscience be a source of joy, and we shall find that joy solid and permanent.

Ver.

And if God bless the ministers of his gospel, as the instruments of bringing this joy to the soul, it will be attended with that readiness which the apostle requires to communicate to them in all good things, while, if they understand their character and office,⁶ there will be in them that moderation of desire on the one hand, and that zeal and love for souls on the other, which will make it a thousand times more pleasant to communicate spirituals than to receive temporals, even from those who give with the most willing mind, and so double the gift, whether it be greater or less.

SECT. XII.

The Apostle concludes his epistle, with cautioning them against the attacks of Judaizing teachers, declaring the indifference of circumcision or uncircumcision, and pressing them strictly to adhere to that gospel for which he had himself suffered so much.

Gal. VI. 11, to the end.

GAL. VI. 11.

YE see how large a letter I have written

GALATIANS VI. 11.

YOU see, my brethren, with what large letters² I have written this epistle to you with my own Gal. VI. 11.

SECT. XII.

a You see with what large letters.] Dr. Whitby remarks in his note on this place, "that St. Paul never uses the word γραμματα when he speaks of his epistles; and that σηλικως γραμματα may therefore refer, not to the largeness or the length of this epistle, but to the largeness or inelegancy of the characters in which it was written."

So too Theophylact and some others understand it, of the apostle's urging it as a proof of his affection for them, as it must shew he was no ready writer, to see in what kind of letters he had written to them. He might not be well versed in the Greek characters; or this inaccuracy of his writing might perhaps be owing to the infirmity or weakness

SECT.
xii.Gal.
VI. 11.

own hand^b, not being willing to omit this opportunity of testifying the affection and concern which I have for you, not choosing, as I mostly do on such occasions, to employ the pen of another who might be more used to the Greek character than myself.

- 12 The sum of all is this; that as many as desire to make a fair appearance in the flesh, and to set themselves off by standing up for the observance of the Jewish rites and ceremonies, these would constrain you Gentile converts to be circumcised, and to be subject with them to the carnal ordinances of the law, only lest they should suffer persecution^c, which the profession of the Christian faith would otherwise bring upon them, for owning their dependance for salvation, not on the law, but on the cross of Christ^d; as it is plainly a regard to this which so much incenses the unbelieving Jews, and engages them to raise so many tumults against us, wherever they have

an

ten unto you with mine own hand.

12 As many as desire to make a fair shew in the flesh, they constrain you to be circumcised; only lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ.

weakness of his nerves, which he had hinted at before. (See note ^b on Gal. iv. 14, p. 278.) I have therefore altered the translation here, and given what appears to be the literal sense.

^b I have written to you with my own hand.] This might be well considered as an argument of his more than ordinary concern for them; for it was usual with St. Paul, as we have observed elsewhere, to dictate his epistles, and to employ a person as an amanuensis to write them from his mouth: (see note ^c on Rom. xvi. 22, Vol. III. p. 546.) And perhaps his own inaccuracy in forming the Greek characters, which he refers to in the words before, may suggest one reason among several others for his doing it. Compare 1 Cor. xvi. 21; Col. iv. 18; 2 Thess. iii. 17; and see the note on this last text.

^c Only lest they should suffer persecution.] This seems to open the main secret spring of that zeal for the Jewish ceremonies, in some that professed themselves Christians, which occasioned so much uneasiness in the apostolic churches. The persecuting edicts of the Jewish sanhedrim, the influence of which extended to remote synagogues, had induced many who secretly believed in Christ to decline an open acknowledgment of him (John ix. 22; xii. 42, xix. 38), which yet our Lord himself had so expressly required, that their consciences, during this state of disimulation, must be in great anxiety. (See Mark viii. 38.) But afterwards, when a scheme arose of blending Judaism with Christianity, it may be supposed that this would abate the edge of persecution against those who fell in with it, and especially against those who urged the Gentile converts to such complete proselytism, though it might sharpen it against other Christians: and this might perhaps weigh more with some than they themselves were aware, in concurrence with the desire of making disciples, and the prejudices of education, which must naturally be supposed to have their share. Compare chap. v. 11.

^d For the cross of Christ.] It is observed by Jerom on this text, "that Tiberius and Caius Cæsar made laws to authorize the Jews who were dispersed throughout the Roman empire to follow the rites of their religion and the ceremonies which had been transmitted to them from their fathers?" To which he adds, "that circumcised Christians were by the Pagans looked upon as Jews, while those who made profession of the gospel and were uncircumcised were violently persecuted both by the Jews and Pagans; on which account some early teachers of the church, to be delivered from the fear of persecution, submitted to be circumcised themselves, and also recommended it to their disciples." Both Archbishop Tillotson (Vol. II. p. 567), and Mons. Saurin, (Serm. Vol. XI. p. 49, 50) agree in expounding this text with a reference to these edicts: but I think it best illustrated by the observation in the preceding note, as the apostle seems to speak of an attempt to escape persecution, not by receiving circumcision, but by imposing or urging it.

13 For neither they themselves who are circumcised keep the law; but desire to have you circumcised that they may glory in your flesh.

an opportunity of doing it; and these half Christians aim at appeasing them by a zeal to spread the Mosaic institutions among the Gentiles. This is the point they have in view, and whatsoever they pretend, it is not any real veneration for the law that prompts them to be zealous for it; for neither they themselves who are circumcised, and so are solemnly obliged to observe the whole of it, shew a concern to keep the law, or manifest a true esteem for it as a spiritual and Divine institution; nor is it from any truly religious principle that they labour to proselyte you to it; but they desire to have you circumcised, to make their boast of you among the Jews; that they may glory in this mark fixed in your flesh, and may avail themselves of the many converts to Judaism, which they have the interest and address to make.

scrip.
N. 11.
Gal.
VI. 13.

14 But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world.

But, for my part, I have no such selfish ¹⁴ worldly views, and God forbid that I should glory, either in my descent or circumcision, in my abilities or interest in making converts, or indeed in any thing else, unless it be in the regard I have been brought to pay to the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the reliance which I have for justification on his death and sufferings; by the believing views of which I am made indifferent to all things here, and the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world: so that I view the world, as little impressed by all its charms as a spectator would be by any thing which had been graceful in the countenance of a crucified person when he beholds it blackened in the agonies of death; and am no more affected by the objects round me than one that is expiring would be struck with any of those prospects which his dying eyes might view from the cross on which he was suspended. And well indeed it may ¹⁵ be expected that it should be so; for as to those who have truly believed in Christ Jesus, all things are counted loss and dung for him, the whole dependance of the soul for righteousness and life is built on him, and the whole heart centers in him; and where this is the case, neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision neither can the one profit, nor the other hurt, but [there is] actually a new creation: old things are passed away, and new views and dispositions are introduced under the regenerating influences of the Spirit of God, in consequence of which 15 For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing nor uncircumcision but a new-creature.

believers

SECT.
xii.Gal.
VI. 15.

believers are (as it were) brought into a new world, and, being created in Christ Jesus unto good works, are formed to a life of holiness, and quickened to the exercise of that faith which operates by love. (Compare 1 Cor. vii. 19; 2 Cor. v. 17; Gal. v. 6; Eph. ii. 10; and Phil. 16 iii. 8.) And as many as shall walk according to this rule, and govern themselves by such maxims, [may] peace and mercy [be] upon them! May that peace which arises from a sense of the pardoning mercy and free grace of God, ever rest upon them, even upon the whole Israel of God every where; for persons of such a character, and not the natural descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, are the true Israelites.

17 Now therefore, for the future, let no man trouble me with reflections on my character, or with disputes concerning the necessity of circumcision, and grieve my heart with additional sorrows, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus^c; marks of far more importance than circumcision, and on which, whatever your Judaizing teachers may think, I value myself much more; even the scars which I have received by stripes and chains and other means, in the service of Christ, amidst the various hardships which I have borne for him, and which ought to render me venerable in the eyes of all who have a due regard to him.

18 And thus, brethren, I conclude with my sincere and earnest prayer for you, that the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, in all its sanctifying and comforting influences, may, [bc] with your spirit, to direct you into the ways of truth and peace, of holiness and comfort. Amen.

16 And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God.

17 From hence-forth let no man trouble me; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.

18 Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. 12, 13 the generality of mankind are so apt to glory! How little satisfaction

^c I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.] Dr. Potter thinks, (Gr. Antiq. Vol. II. p. 7) that the apostle here alludes to the Στυγμάτα, or brands, with which the Greeks used to mark those that were appointed to serve in the wars, lest they should attempt to make their escape. (See Lipsius, de Milit. Rom. Lib. i. Dial. 9.) But perhaps the reference may be to those marks by which the votaries of particular deities were distinguished. See my Sermons to young Persons, Number iv. at the beginning.—Mr. Blackwall, (in his Sacr. Class. Vol. II. p. 66, 67,) considers it as an allusion to an Egyptian custom, according to which any man's servant who fled to the temple of Hercules, and had the sacred brands or marks of that deity impressed upon him, was supposed to be under his immediate care and protection, and by that to be privileged from all violence and harsh treatment. And in this view he forms a large and beautiful paraphrase on this verse.

faction can there be in making proselytes to a party, and spreading forms and notions, when compared with the joy of promoting true religion in the hearts of men, and thereby advancing the glory of God and the salvation of immortal souls? And of what service will it be to make a fair appearance, and to be zealous for the externals of religion, so as to gain the applause of men, and to have many followers, if at the same time we have so little veneration for the cross of Christ as to be afraid or ashamed of owning the necessity of relying on his righteousness alone for justification, lest we should suffer persecution upon that account, or be exposed to the reproaches of the world about us!

May divine grace teach us to esteem the cross of Christ more highly, and to glory in nothing but our knowledge of it, and our hopes and expectations from it! May we all feel its vital efficacy, to crucify us to the world, and the world to us; that we may look upon the world but as a dead and worthless thing, which neither can afford us any advantage, nor yield us any pleasure, to engage our hearts to choose it for our portion: and, being crucified, and dead to all things in it, may we be so entirely weaned from all affection to it, as not to make it any more our principal design and study to pursue it; but, being indifferent both to its smiles and frowns, as to the influence which once they had upon us, may we be neither moved by any prospect of self-interest on the one hand, nor terrified by the fear of persecution on the other!

Let us not lay the stress of our religion on the name we bear, or ground the hope of our acceptance on being of this or that denomination of Christians; but let it be our chief concern to have experience of a thorough change of heart and life, and to obtain that renovation of soul, that new creation without which neither circumcision nor uncircumcision can avail any thing, and with which the one, as well as the other, will be accepted of God.

It is the written word of God that is the rule we are to go by, both in the doctrines and the precepts of it; let us be careful that we walk according to it, and regulate our principles and conduct by it; then will God own us as his true Israel, and then shall peace and mercy be upon us. And surely, how diligently soever we observe this rule, how exactly soever we conform to it, and how much soever we may suffer for our adherence to it, we depend upon mercy for the communication of peace, and must ascribe all our hopes of happiness to pardoning clemency and free grace. May that grace be with our spirit, to sanctify, to quicken, and to cheer us; and may we always be ready to maintain the honour of that, which is indeed our very life! Amen.

THE
FAMILY EXPOSITOR :

OR, A PARAPHRASE

ON THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE EPHESIANS.

WITH CRITICAL NOTES, AND A PRACTICAL IMPROVEMENT OF EACH SECTION.

A

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO THE
PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON
THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

THE apostle Paul is universally allowed to be the author of this excellent epistle: but Dr. Mill and others have contended that it was written, not to the church of Ephesus, but to that of Laodicea. This they would argue from some passages of this epistle, (chap. i. 15; iii. 2; and iv. 21,) which seem more suitable to persons whom he had never seen, which was the case of them at Laodicea, (Col. ii. 1,) than to the Ephesians, with whom he had been conversant about three years; Acts xx. 31. (See note^m on that text, (Vol. III. section xlvi. p. 211.) But what is principally urged for this opinion, is the direction given by the apostle at the close of his epistle to the Colossians, (Col. iv. 16,) “that they should cause the epistle which he wrote to them to be read also in the church of the Laodiceans, and they should likewise read the epistle from Laodicea.” From whence it is inferred that the epistle now before us must be that which is intended there, and was originally written to the Laodiceans.

These several objections will be obviated in the notes upon those places on which they are grounded, and can be no sufficient warrant, in opposition to the first verse of this epistle, in which it is addressed expressly to the saints at Ephesus, to introduce an alteration in the text which hath not the authority of any single manuscript in being, or any ancient version, to support it.

We are told, indeed, it was affirmed by Marcion, an early heretic of the second century, that what is called the epistle to the Ephesians was inscribed to the Laodiceans: but he is censured upon this account by Tertullian *, (who wrote against him in the beginning

* Tertull. contra Marcion. lib. v. cap. 11, 17.

* Basii.

beginning of the third century), as setting up an interpolation of his own in opposition to the true testimony of the church. And though Basil * and Jerom † in the latter part of the fourth century, speak of some copies in which the words ἐν Ἐφέσῳ were omitted, yet they allow at the same time that this epistle was written to the saints at Ephesus; whom, by a strange interpretation, in allusion to the name by which the Lord revealed himself, Exod. iii. 14, some would suppose, the apostle calls in a peculiar sense the saints who are, as being united unto Him who is. But this omission evidently makes but a very odd reading, unless we admit of the conjecture of Archbishop Usher ‡, that a void space was left after the saints who are,—and this might be intended for a circular epistle to any of the churches of the Lesser Asia, whose name might be occasionally inserted to fill up the blank.

There is however no sufficient reason for departing from the common established reading, which inscribes this epistle to the saints at Ephesus, especially when we find in the most early times, that Ignatius, one of the apostolical fathers, (who lived at the time when this epistle was written, in the smaller copy of his own epistle to the Ephesians, sect. xii. speaks to them of St. Paul “as making mention of them in a whole epistle, which Cotelerius says, it is in vain to understand of any other epistle than this, and Dr. Lardner observes, must plainly mean the epistle of Paul to the Ephesians §. And in the larger copy of the same epistle, sect. vi. he declares to the Ephesians, “Ye are, as Paul wrote to you, “one body and one spirit,” where it is manifest there is a reference to the very words of St. Paul in this epistle, chap. iv. 4. So that the testimony of Ignatius, is expressed in both the copies, which ever be received as genuine, to which indeed the smaller has apparently the better title. The same is also still more clear with respect to Irenæus, and Clement of Alexandria, who were both fathers of the second century, and have both quoted this epistle in express terms under the title of the epistle to the Ephesians ||. No further testimony therefore can be needful to make it manifest that this epistle was received in the first ages of the church, as written by St. Paul to the Ephesians.

It is well known that Ephesus was the chief city of the Proconsular Asia, which was a part of what was called the Lesser Asia. It was particularly famous for the temple of Diana, a most magnificent and stately structure, which was reputed one of the seven wonders of the world: and its inhabitants were noted in their Gentile state for their idolatry and skill in magic, and for their luxury and lasciviousness. The apostle Paul, at his first coming to them in the year of our Lord 54, according to his usual custom, preaching to the Jews there in their synagogues, many of whom were settled in that city and the neighbouring parts: but, as he then was hastening to the passover at Jerusalem, he only spent

one

* Basil. adv. Furor. lib. ii. p. 733.

† Jerom. Comment. in Ephesus, init.

‡ Usher. Annal. ad. A.C. LXIV. p. 686.

§ Lardner. Credul. part. ii. Vol. I. p. 157.

|| Iren. lib. v. cap. 2. § 3. & Clem. Alex. Strom. lib. p. 409.

one sabbath there, and left them with a promise to return to them again, (Acts xviii. 19—21.) Accordingly he came again to Ephesus the following year, (Acts xix. 1, & seq.) and preached the word with such success, and wrought such extraordinary miracles among them, that a numerous church was formed there, chiefly made up of Gentile converts, whose piety and zeal were so remarkable, that many of them, in abhorrence of the curious arts which they had used, burnt their magical books to a great value; (Acts xix. 19.) And such was the concern of the apostle for their spiritual advantage, that he did not leave them till the year 57, when he had been about three years among them; (Acts xx. 31.) After this he spent some time in Macedonia and Achaia, and in his return to Jerusalem in the year 58, he sent for the elders of the church of Ephesus to Miletus, and most affectionately took his leave of them, as one that should see them no more; appealing to them with what faithfulness he had discharged his ministry among them, and solemnly exhorting them to lock well to the flock committed to their care, lest they should be corrupted by seducing teachers, who would arise among themselves, and artfully endeavour to pervert them; (Acts xx. 17, to the end.) And we see afterwards, from the coolness and declension they are charged with in the epistle to the angel of the church of Ephesus (Rev. ii. 4, 5,) how just and reasonable was this caution that he gave them at his parting from them.

From what the apostle says of himself in this epistle, it appears that it was written by him while he was a prisoner (chap. iii. 1; iv. 1; vi. 20;) as he was likewise when he wrote to the Colossians; (Col. iv. 18.) And there is such a manifest correspondence between these two epistles, both in their subject-matter, and in the very form of the expressions, that it may justly be concluded they were written at the same time, and sent together by Tychicus; who was intrusted with the care of both (Eph. vi. 21, 22; and Col. iv. 7, 8.) but was attended by Onesimus when he delivered that to the Colossians (Col. iv. 9.) Now, as it is not to be thought the apostle Paul would have employed Onesimus in such a service till after he had been with his master Philemon, it appears highly probable from hence, that the apostle sent him first with his epistle to Philemon, by whom he was received (agreeably to his request) not as a servant but as a brother, (Philem. ver. 16,) and had his freedom given him; and, from the confidence the apostle had in the obedience of Philemon, and in his readiness to do even more than he said (ver. 21,) he might well take this opportunity of his going with Tychicus to recommend Onesimus to the Colossians, by joining him in his message to that church. Since then the apostle was in expectation of being soon released from his confinement when he wrote to Philemon, and trusting he should shortly visit him, desires him to prepare a lodging for him (ver. 22,) this may induce us to conclude that he wrote that epistle towards the close of his first imprisonment at Rome: and as the epistles to the Ephesians and Colossians appear to have been sent at the same time with that to Philemon, it may be inferred that he wrote these not long before, and sent them all together in the year of our Lord 63, which was the 9th of the Emperor Nero. (See Vol. III. sect. lx. note 5, p. 305.)

The design of the apostle Paul in this epistle (the former part of which is doctrinal, and the latter practical) was “to establish the Ephesians in the faith; and to this end, to give them more exalted views of the eternal love of God, and of the glorious excellence and dignity of Christ; to shew them they were saved by grace, and, howsoever wretched they were once, the Gentiles now have equal privileges with the Jews; to encourage them, by declaring with what stedfastness he suffered for the truth, and with what earnestness he prayed for their establishment and perseverance in it; and finally in consequence of their profession, to engage them to the practice of those duties that became their character as Christians.”

The doctrinal part of this epistle is contained in the three first chapters: in which the apostle introduces several important truths for the instruction of the Ephesians in the great doctrines of the gospel, that they might be well grounded in the faith; and, for the encouragement of the Gentile converts, acquaints them with the Christian privileges to which they were entitled. And here,

I. After saluting the Ephesians with an acknowledgment of their faith (chap. i. 1, 2,) the apostle testifies his thankfulness to God for his distinguishing love and favour to them, in calling them to be partakers of the blessings of the gospel, in consequence of his eternal purpose to glorify his grace in their sanctification and salvation, through the blood of his Son and the communication of his Spirit; (ver. 3—14.)

II. He assures them of the fervency of his prayers for them, that they might have a clearer knowledge of the great objects of their hope and expectation; and, from an experimental sense of the exceeding greatness of the power of God, might have a fixed regard to the supreme authority and dignity of Christ, who by that power is raised from the dead, and exalted to be Head over all things to the church; (ver. 15, to the end.)

III. To magnify the riches of Divine grace, and to affect them with a more grateful sense of their obligations to it, the apostle leads them to reflect upon that wretched state of moral death in which the gospel found them; and shews them it was owing to the rich mercy and the great love of God that they were raised in Christ from death to life, and in the whole of their salvation it was evident that they were saved by grace, and not by works, or any righteousness of their own; (chap. ii. 1—10.)

IV. He represents the happy change that was thus made in their condition; that they who once were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and afar off from God, were now received into his church, and had an equal right to all the privileges of it with the Jewish converts; the middle wall of partition having been broken down by Christ in favour of the believing Gentiles, who being reconciled

conciled to God were no more strangers as they had been formerly, but were united in one body under Christ the common Head of all believers, and, being animated by one Spirit, and built upon the same foundation, were made an holy temple in the Lord; (ver. 11, to the end.)

V. To encourage and confirm the Gentile converts in their adherence to the gospel, and recommend it more to their regard, the apostle in the strongest terms expresses the sense he had of the Divine goodness in appointing him to be the apostle of the Gentiles, and authorising him to preach among them the unsearchable riches of Christ; and declares how great an honour he esteemed it to be employed in making known the calling of the Gentiles to be joint-heirs with the Jews in all the blessings of the Messiah's kingdom, though he had suffered greatly for it, and was now in bonds on this account; (chap. iii. 12.) And then,

VI. He entreats them not to be discouraged at the sufferings he underwent for his regard to the Gentiles, but rather to consider it as an honour to them, that in the steadfastness with which he suffered, they had such a confirmation of the truth of his doctrine, and of the sincerity of his concern for their spiritual advantage; in proof of which he closes this part of his epistle with a most affectionate and earnest prayer, for their establishment in the Christian faith, and their advancement in the knowledge and experience of the love of Christ, of which he speaks in the most lofty and exalted terms as far surpassing all conception, concluding in the warmth of his devotion with a grand and suitable doxology; (ver. 13, to the end.) And now,

The other part of this epistle, which is practical, is contained in the three remaining chapters: in which the apostle gives them several weighty exhortations and advices, for the direction of their lives and manners, that they might be regular in their practice; and tells them of the Christian duties that were required of them, to which the consideration of their privileges should engage them, pointing out to them the means and motives that were proper to promote the observance of them, and urging the great care and caution they should use to behave suitably to the profession which they made and to the character they bore. And here,

I. The apostle, from the consideration of his own sufferings, as well as of the many important respects in which all true Christians are united, after a general exhortation to them to walk worthy of the excellency of their calling, particularly urges them to mutual forbearance and unity of Spirit, as being joined together in one church, and called to partake of the same privileges in Christ, without distinction either of Jew or Gentile; and, as a powerful inducement to their cultivating such a disposition, he represents the glorious foundation which Christ as the great Head of the church has laid for it in the variety of gifts and graces he has bestowed, and in the sacred offices he has appointed; which being all derived from the same Spirit, and designed for the same end, were all to be employed for the advancement of his interest and kingdom, kingdom, and for the better edification of the whole church, till in the unity of the faith they should grow up into one perfect body under Christ their Head; and so must have a tendency to promote their present union, and to inspire them with the most endearing affection to each other; (chap. iv. 1—16.)

II. He presses them, as having learned Christ, and been enlightened by the gospel, to shew the difference there was between them and the unconverted Gentiles, by an unspotted purity and holiness of behaviour, and not to walk like those from whom they were so happily distinguished by knowledge and grace; and cautions them in particular against lying, excess of anger, and stealing, and that corrupt communication to which the heathens were notoriously addicted, but which were inconsistent with the character of Christians, and grievous to the Holy Spirit: (ver. 17—30.)

III. He further cautions them against all malice, and urges them to mutual love and readiness to forgive, in consideration of the Divine compassions manifested in the gospel; and then pursues his exhortations to abstain from all inordinate desires, and from all manner of uncleanness and immodesty, as well in words as actions; in which, however they had shamefully indulged themselves in the darkness of heathenism, the light of Christianity displayed them in such odious colours as plainly shewed them to be unbecoming their profession, and no way reconcilable with the obligation they were under to walk as children of the light; (ver. 31, to the end; and chap. v. 1—14.)

IV. He recommends it to them, in consideration of their character and circumstances, to be prudent and circumspect in their whole conversation, as those who were instructed in the will of God; and not to seek for pleasure in a dissolute excess, but, guarding against all intemperance, to make it the delightful business of their lives to express their gratitude to God, under the influences of his Spirit, by praising him for all his mercies in pious and devout thanksgivings; and while they were thus careful of their duty to God, he also urges them not to be negligent of the duties which they owed to one another as members of society, but to behave with due submission to each other in their several stations; (ver. 15—21.) And then,

V. Having hinted at the relative duties of society in general, he descends to particulars, and, beginning with the duties of husbands and wives, he recommends it to husbands to love their wives, in imitation of the love which Christ bears to the church, and presses upon wives the correspondent duty of conjugal subjection, in imitation of the subjection which the church pays to Christ the Head of it; (ver. 22, to the end.) From whence he passes on to the mutual duties of children and parents, and of servants and masters, giving suitable admonitions to each, and adding proper arguments to enforce them; (chap. vi. 1—9.) And after this, for a conclusion of the whole,

VI. He gives a general exhortation to them all, of whatever condition or relation in life, to prepare for a strenuous combat with their their spiritual enemies, by putting on the whole armour of God, and living in the exercise of those Christian graces that were necessary for their defence and safety: and having among other things exhorted them to fervency in prayer, he particularly recommends himself to their remembrance at the throne of grace, that he might carry on the important work in which he was engaged with freedom and fidelity, whatever he might suffer, for it; and, leaving it to Tychicus (by whom he sent this epistle) more fully to inform them of every circumstance relating to him, he closes his epistle with an apostolical benediction, not only to themselves, but to all that love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity; (ver. 10, to the end)

A

PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

THE EPHESIANS.

SECTION I.

The apostle Paul begins the epistle with testifying, in the strongest terms, his joy that the believing Ephesians were called to the participation of Christian privileges in consequence of God's eternal purpose of glorifying his grace in their sanctification and salvation, through the blood of his Son, and the communication of his Spirit. Eph. I. 1—14.

EPHES. I. 1.

PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus.

EPHESIANS I. 1.

PAUL, who had the honour to be an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, sent forth with a special commission from him to publish his gospel and attest his resurrection to the world, and set apart to this important office by the sovereign and gracious will of God, who hath interposed in so extraordinary a manner to form him for it and to employ him in it, addresseth this epistle to the saints who are at Ephesus, even to the faithful in Christ Jesus^a, who believe in him as the only Saviour, and in consequence of their persuasion of the truth of his gospel, are solemnly and

SECT.
I.

Ephes.
I. 1.

^a To the faithful in Christ Jesus.] Some have understood this as an intimation that the Christians at Ephesus were remarkably faithful to Christ in relying on him alone for salvation, without that attachment to the Mosaic law which was to be found in some other churches, and particularly among the Galatians. But as he uses the same title when addressing the Colossians, (Col. i. 2,) whom yet he reproves on this very account, (Col. ii. 16, 20,) I can lay no stress upon that criticism.

^b Blessed

SECT.

i.

Ephes.

1. 2.

and truly devoted to the service of God. This is the character in which he looks upon you, and with the most affectionate concern and value for you, it is his ardent wish and most sincere and hearty prayer, that the richest abundance of Divine grace and favour may [be] communicated to you, with all the happiness and peace attending it, from God our Father, who is the great original of all desirable blessings, and [from] the Lord Jesus Christ, through whom they flow down to us sinful creatures.

- 3 At the first turning of my thoughts towards you as converts to the gospel, when I set myself to think of the happy state into which you are brought, as true believers in the Son of God, by this glorious dispensation of Divine grace, with whatever personal sorrows and afflictions I may be pressed, I cannot forbear bursting out into songs of praise. Join with me therefore, my dear Christian brethren, and let us all say from our hearts, Blessed [be] the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ^b, who is now through him become our God and Father, and hath blessed us^c, even all that are partakers of his grace, whether Jews or Gentiles, with every spiritual blessing in heavenly things in Christ^d, having graciously bestowed

2 Grace be to you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ:

^b Blessed be the God and Father, &c.] The length of periods frequently occurring in the writings of St. Paul is one thing in his style that contributes much to the obscurity of it; of which this sentence, which runs on through twelve verses to the end of this section, is a remarkable instance. But in the paraphrase it is absolutely necessary to break it into many, or otherwise the period would be drawn out to a much more inconvenient length, and the words added to illustrate particular clauses would encumber, deform and obscure the whole.—I have been obliged to take the same method in many other places, and hope I need make no farther apology for doing it.

^c Hath blessed us.] It is evident that the apostle means in the word [us] to include the Ephesians to whom he wrote, the greatest part of whom were Gentile converts, as sharing with him and the Jewish Christians in their evangelical privileges: and by thus beginning his epistle with ascribing thanks to God for his mercies to them, he at once declares his firm persuasion of the calling of the Gentiles, and his hearty joy in it.

^d With every spiritual blessing in heavenly [things] in Christ.] The apostle every where represents the graces of the Spirit as so much preferable to its gifts, that it appears very surprising that Dr. Whitby should expound the blessings here intended as referring entirely to those gifts. They manifestly take in every spiritual blessing (for so it is expressed in the original, ἐν παντί ἐνδοξῶν δωρημάτων.) and principally must refer, not to extraordinary and miraculous gifts, but to the sanctifying and saving graces of the Spirit; such as effectual calling, justification by grace, the adoption of children, the illumination of the Spirit, and all the graces of the Christian life, which are common unto all believers, and are communicated to them in all their several branches. And these are blessings in the heavenlies, ἐν ταῖς οὐρανοῖς or in heavenly things, as I would choose to render it, rather than places,) as they are things that have a manifest relation and respect to heaven, and have a tendency to fit us for it, and to lead us, not to seek after the enjoyments of this present world, but to be conversant about, and to be waiting for, those of the heavenly state.

^e Hath

bestowed upon us, in him, and for his sake, by the operation of his Holy Spirit, whatever may conduce to the happiness of our souls now, whatever may prepare them for eternal glory, and may seal to us the joyful hope and expectation of it.

SECT.
i.
Ephes.
13.

4 According as he hath chosen us in him, before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy, and without blame before him in love :

Now this is all to be considered, not as what 4 we can pretend to have deserved, but as the result of his free grace, and the accomplishment of his eternal purpose of love concerning us, according as he hath chosen us in him^e, even in his well-beloved Son, before the foundation of the world was laid : always intending that we should be in all respects holy and unblameable before him, and especially that we should walk in love^f, that by the exercises of this sacred affection to God and each other, we might be preserved from the evils which abound in the world, and animated to the most worthy, honourable and useful behaviour. To this we know God hath ap- 5 pointed us ; let us therefore, in proportion to the degree in which we find this temper prevail- ing

5 Having predestinated

[e Hath chosen us in him.] I think the apostle here cannot be understood to intimate that every one of the persons who belonged to the church of the Ephesians (or elsewhere to other Christian societies,) in the bond of external communion, was by a particular decree of God personally chosen to eternal life, and to persevering holiness as the way to it. For he could have no evidence that this was the case, with regard to each, without such a revelation as I think none have pretended, and as would very ill agree with other passages relating to the apostacy of some who once made a very forward profession, and with the many exhortations and cautions which every where occur in his writings, or with the declarations Christ had made concerning the final ruin that would in fact attend many who called themselves Christians, and some who bore the highest offices in the church, and wrought the most extraordinary works. (Compare Mat. vii. 22, 23; and Luke xiii. 26, 27.) I conclude therefore, that he speaks of whole societies in general as consisting of saints and believers, because this was the predominant character, and he had reason in the judgment of charity to believe the greater part were such (compare Phil. i. 7.) Nor did he always judge it necessary to make exceptions in reference to a few hypocrites who crept in among them, any more than Christ judged it so to speak of Judas as excluded, when he mentions the twelve thrones of judgment on which the apostles should sit (Mat. xix. 28.) In this view he says of them in general, that whether they were Jews or Gentiles they were indiscriminately chosen, not only to those present privileges which they all as professing Christians enjoyed, but to real holiness and everlasting glory. And, as we are sure there were at Ephesus many Jewish converts who were in full communion with the church, I can see no reason at all, with some commentators of great name, to limit what the apostle says here to the Gentiles. An address to them alone in this epistle would very little suit that candour and love so prevalent in the heart of St. Paul, and so essential to every true Christian. The pious professor Franck thinks the apostle speaks only of the Jews till he come to the 12th verse ; but from note^b below, on ver. 9, it will appear that he must be mistaken in this singularity of interpretation.

[f In love.] This is often insisted upon ; and perhaps the rather, to intimate that, now the middle wall of partition was broken down, it was of the highest importance to cultivate mutual affection without any regard to the singularity of the Jewish or Gentile character.

g I 7

SECT.
Ephes.
1. 5.

ing in us, look back with delight to those gracious purposes which the blessed God formed in his own all comprehending mind concerning us long before we had a being; and let us contemplate and rejoice in him, as having predestinated us to the adoption of children, and fore-ordained us to be received into his family by Jesus Christ, in whom he has chosen us for a peculiar people unto himself, and thereby entitled us, not only to the most valuable privileges by which his church on earth is distinguished, but to an inheritance of eternal glory. And surely when we compare so happy a state and hope with our own temper, character, and deserts, we must acknowledge our appointment to it to have been according to the good pleasure of his will, and ascribe it entirely to the overflowings of his mercy.

6 May we therefore ever acknowledge it to the praise of his glorious grace, which we can never sufficiently admire, and which the whole world should concur to magnify and adore; even that grace, wherein he hath made us accepted, and hath regarded us as the object of his favour and complacency, in the Lord Jesus Christ, as his first and best beloved Son; through whom, though in ourselves we are so unworthy of it, we have received the adoption; And in whom we have redemption from the power of sin, the tyranny of Satan, and the final wrath and displeasure of God, through the pouring forth of his blood upon the cross, when he undertook the great and awful work of making an atonement for us by the sacrifice of himself: for by this precious stream it is, as flowing from his wounded side, the full and free remission of all our most numerous and aggravated sins is happily conveyed unto us on our believing in him, according to the inexhaustible riches of his grace, which reaches even beyond the extent of all our most heinous transgressions, and where our guilt had risen to the most fearful height hath its superior triumphs. In the displays of which grace, we must also acknowledge that he hath abounded towards us in all wisdom and prudence^g; having with infinite wisdom contrived a way to glorify all nated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ himself, according to the good pleasure of his will.

6 To the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved:

7 In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace;

8 Wherein he hath abounded towards us in all

^g In all wisdom and prudence.] To understand this as a very celebrated commentator does, of their own prudent return to be made to the Divine goodness, seems a sense much below the apostle's meaning.

all wisdom and prudence,

all his attributes in the salvation of men, even those which seemed to have the most different claims, dispensing mercy in a way of judgment, and awakening an humble awe and reverence in the soul by the very method which is used for granting pardon and peace.

SECT.
i.
Ephes.
I. 8.

9 Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself :

All these admirable and gracious purposes hath God been pleased to unite, and to discover in the way of our salvation ; having made known unto us, by the revelation of that gospel of which I have the honour and happiness of being an apostle, the long concealed mystery of his will^b, according to his own sovereign good pleasure and free grace, which he had before purposed in himself, even the important design of gathering to himself, out of all nations, Jews and Gentiles, one holy and glorious church. This was his 10 grand design, which all his other dispensations of providence and grace in former ages were intended more properly to introduce ; that in the economy of the fulness of the times, or when that time was fully come which he in his wise appointment and distribution of things had judged most suitable and eligible, he might reunite under one head all things in Christ, whom he hath constituted sovereign of angels and men, and of all his dominions and subjects, both which are in heaven, and which are on earthⁱ, that for his glory and the good of the whole society he should with supreme authority preside over all. And thus in Christ hath he united all things, [even] in him who is the head f all 11 in whom also we have obtained an inheritance k, and

10 That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him :

11 In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being pre-destinated

^h The mystery of his will.] It is so called, as having long been kept a secret, of which neither Jews nor Gentiles had any conception till it was revealed by the Holy Spirit to the apostles. I think this plainly proves that Professor Franckius is mistaken in referring the word [us] to the Jews ; for the mystery of calling the Gentiles was not for a considerable time made known to the converted Jews, and when it was declared by the apostles, it was difficult for them fully to submit to it.

ⁱ Both in heaven and on earth.] This is considered by some as a Jewish phrase to express the whole world ; and Mr. Locke thinks it may be equivalent to Jews and Gentiles (compare Dan. viii. 10.) But it seems more reasonable to understand it of bringing angels as well as men under the government of Christ. (Compare Col. i. 16, 20 ; Eph iii. 10 ; Phil. ii. 10.) The word ἀνωκεφαλῶτα must, in its most literal signification, express uniting again under one Head. Both angels and men were at first in sweet and harmonious subjection to the Son of God, the great Creator of both ; but man having broke himself off from the society, the Son of man by his humiliation and sufferings recovers all who believe in him, and in his human nature presides over the Kingdom to which in the world of glory they and his angels belong. This interpretation presents so noble a view, that no other will bear a comparison.

^k We have obtained an inheritance.] Mr. Locke would render κληρονομία, are become his inheritance (alluding to Dent. xcvii. 9, The Lord's portion is his people, Jacob

SECT.
i.
Ephes.
I. 11.

- and the hope of complete and everlasting felicity; *having been graciously predestinated to it according to the purpose of him, who by an efficacious, though gentle and often imperceptible influence, worketh all things agreeably to the counsel of his own will*¹; and, having formed all his schemes with infinite wisdom, takes the most sure and suitable means to execute them, and to subdue in the minds of men, as he has subdued in mine, the strongest prejudices against them.
- 12 And not I alone, but all who of Jews are become believers in Christ, must acknowledge this to have been the case, and must consider it as laying us under the highest obligations, that we should be entirely devoted to the praise of his glory, and to the purposes of his service for ever; even we, who first trusted in the power and promise of Christ^m for salvation, and many of us ventured our souls upon him, when his name was unknown to the Gentile nations, and to most of our own countrymen was the object of contempt and abhorrence.
- 13 The powerful efficacy of the same grace hath likewise been displayed in you, and hath given you a title to the same inheritance in Christ; in whom ye also, who were once sinners of the Gentiles, even ye Ephesians, who were particularly devoted to idolatry and superstition (compare Acts xix. 19, 35), to a degree which distinguished you from many of your heathen neighbours, [trusted] and believed as we had done, when ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation, which brings the good tidings of salvation to you as well as others, and gives destinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will:

12 That we should be to the praise of his glory who first trusted in Christ.

13 In whom ye also trusted after that ye heard the word of truth the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after Jacob is the lot of his inheritance); and interprets it as referring to the admission of the Gentiles into the church, which is God's heritage: but, as [we] in this and the next verse seems opposed to [you] in the thirteenth, it must signify the Jews who first trusted in Christ, or the body of the Christian church, who were incorporated long before the Ephesians were brought into it.

[Who worketh all things agreeably to the counsel of his own will.] This does indeed express God's taking such methods to answer his purposes as he knows will in fact be successful. But it does not prove any thing like an overbearing impulse on men's minds to determine them in such a manner as to destroy the natural freedom of their volitions, and so to prevent their being justly accountable to God for such actions.

[Who first trusted in Christ.] I think it strange that Mr. Locke should urge this as an argument to prove that the apostle speaks of the Gentiles; since it is so evident that the grand harvest of believing Jews was gathered into the church before Christ was preached to any of the Gentiles. To interpret the word προηλπικηται as signifying that they first began to hope in Christ, or had first entertained hope through him, whereas before they had no hope (Eph. ii. 12), loses the force of the expression, and sinks the sense of the Greek language.

after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise.

gives the most convincing demonstration of your being called to share in all the blessings that are bestowed in Christ: in whom also, having believed and made profession of your faith, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, descending upon you, not only in miraculous gifts, but in its sanctifying graces, to attest that you belong to the family of God, and are heirs of the promises made to Abraham and his seed. 11^b speak of that blessed and gracious Spirit *who is the earnest of our inheritance*ⁿ, in whom you have a certain pledge and token of your being by special adoption entitled to it, to encourage and animate you under all the difficulties of your way, while you continue waiting till you receive the complete redemption of the people he hath so dearly purchased for his possession ^o: to them he hath promised everlasting life and happiness, and he will certainly bestow it upon them in the day of his final appearance, which will at length open with a lustre that shall fully repay so long an expectation, and will abundantly conduce to the praise of his glory, or to the illustration of that wisdom and love which hath wrought in every previous dispensation, to lead on by the properest degrees towards that most illustrious one which was to close the whole.

SECT.
I.
Ephes.
I. 13.

14 Which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory.

IMPROVEMENT.

ARE we not by Divine grace and mercy partakers of those Ver. blessings which Paul here celebrates with so much delight, and ³ in the review of which, familiar as they were to his thoughts and discourses, he breaks forth as it were into a rapturous anthem in ⁿ The earnest of our inheritance.] It seems very unnatural to explain this as Mr. Locke does, of our being God's inheritance, for the earnest must certainly refer to future blessings, and be intended as a pledge and token of our right and title to them.

^o Till the redemption of the purchased possession.] Dr. Whitby would render this clause, ἕως ἀπολύσεως τῆς ἀποκτηθείσης, till the redemption of life: and brings many texts out of the Septuagint, where ἀπολύω signifies to save alive. To illustrate this he observes, there are two redemptions or grand deliverances (for that is plainly his idea of redemption): the one, that of justification, consequent upon believing, the other, that by which we are delivered from death, and all the other penal consequences of sin, in the redemption of the body from corruption, that it may partake of eternal life. (Compare Rom. viii. 23.) This nearly coincides with Beza's interpretation, who would translate it, till the redemption of vindication, that is, till we are set entirely at liberty, and receive complete deliverance and salvation. But I rather conclude that ἀπολύσεως here signifies the people whom Christ has purchased to be his peculiar property; which is very agreeable to the signification of the word elsewhere. Compare Mal. iii. 17, Septuag. (where it answers to סגולה, Segullah.) Acts x. 45; 1 Tim. iii. 13; and 1 Pet. ii. 9.

SECT.
i.

- in the very beginning of this epistle, as he likewise does in so many others? Ought not our hearts to be as warm in such devout acknowledgments? Are spiritual blessings in heavenly things or places in Christ Jesus less valuable now than they were seventeen hundred years ago? Are not the necessities of our souls the same? Is not their immortality the same? Let us then join with the most grateful sentiments in the acclamation; and, in proportion to the degree in which we feel the importance of what God hath already done, and is doing for our souls, let us go back with
- Ver. 4 unutterable pleasure to the gracious purpose which he was pleased to form in his own compassionate breast, when he chose us in Christ 5 before the foundation of the world, when he predestinated us through him to the adoption of children. Let us acknowledge the freedom 11 of his grace in it, that we are thus predestinated according to the purpose of him who, with proper regard to the nature of his intelligent and free creatures, worketh all things agreeably to the good 6 pleasure of his will, and maketh us accepted in the Beloved, that we may be to the praise of the glory of his grace.
- 8 Let these united displays of wisdom and love affect our hearts; for he hath indeed abounded towards us in all wisdom and prudence. And let that holiness which mingles its glories in the whole scheme be also remembered. Let it never be forgotten that we 4 are predestinated to be holy and without blame before him in love, that we might attain to that blameless temper which love alone can inspire and support.
- 9 For this purpose the mystery of his will is made known to us, and that grand illustrious plan is displayed, which is so well worthy of all the perfections of a God; even his design to gather 10 together all things in one in Christ, to unite all good and happy spirits under him as the common Head, and to make him the bond of their eternal union to God and to each other. What are we sinful creatures, that we should be received into such an association? Let us never forget it on earth, as we shall for ever commemorate it in heaven, that it is through his blood that we have redemption; eternal redemption, which he who has begun the happy 7 work will certainly complete, in favour of those whom he hath purchased to be an everlasting possession unto himself.
- 14 In the mean time, may his Spirit be given us as the seal of the 15 promises, and the earnest of our inheritance! And by more abundant communications of his sanctifying influences, may he raise our souls to a blessed anticipation of those enjoyments which will endure for ever, and will be for ever new and delightful.

SECT. II.

The Apostle assures the Ephesians of the fervency with which he was offering his prayers to God on their account, that they might have still higher and worthier conceptions of the gospel, and of its glorious Author as raised from the dead, and exalted to supreme dominion in the heavenly world. Eph. I. 15, to the end.

Ephes. I. 15.

WHEREFORE I also, after I heard your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints,

16 Cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers;

17 That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation, in the knowledge of him:

a Having heard of the faith you have, &c. ἀκούσας τὴν καὶ εὐχὰς ὑμῶν πρὸς τὸν κύριον] Some have argued from hence, that this epistle, if directed to the Ephesians, must have been written before Paul's long abode at Ephesus, since he would not have spoken of their faith as only known by report, if he had for two years and an half been conversant with them, and seen the effects of it. To this some have answered, by pleading that ἀκούω signifies, not only to hear, but to understand, by whatever means the knowledge be attained; and others have said that this epistle was in-

EPHESIANS I. 15.

I HAVE mentioned the invaluable blessings of which as Christians we have the privilege to be partakers, whether Jews or Gentiles; and for this cause, knowing the extensive views on which the Christian church is formed, in the affectionate remembrance which I have of all the faithful, I also bear you on my heart, both in the praises and the prayers which I offer up to God; having in this my confinement heard of your steadfastness in the faith you have in the Lord Jesus^a, whom we adore as our common Saviour and of the love [you bear] to all the saints, whether circumcised or uncircumcised: On which account I cease not daily to give thanks for you, that you are brought by Divine grace into this happy state, and am making mention of you always in my prayers, which I am continually presenting to heaven for my brethren in every place.

And it is my constant request for you, that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is also the Father of glory, of which he is eternally and immutably possessed, from whom all glory proceeds, and to whom it returns, would give you more abundant supplies of the spirit of wisdom and revelation, to fill you with a more enlarged knowledge of his will, and animate you tended, not only for the church of Ephesus but for other Asian churches in the neighbourhood. But perhaps the easiest and most solid answer is, that as it was now five or six years since Paul quitted Ephesus, he might judge it proper thus to express his complacency on hearing that they continued, in the midst of so many circumstances of temptation, to behave in a manner so worthy what he had personally observed among them. In this sense Mr. Locke understands these words; and it is illustrated by comparing Phil. i. 3. 27: and 1 Thess. i. 5, 6; iii. 6.

SECT.
II.
I. h. s.
I. 1. 1.

SECT.
ii.Ephes.
1. 18.

you to the further exercise of every grace in the acknowledgment of him: And in particular, that by his influence and teaching he [would give you] to have the eyes of your understanding enlightened still more and more^b; that, being thus illuminated, ye may know, in a more comprehensive manner than you now do, what is the great and important hope of his calling, what are the high conceptions you should have of that excellent Object which the gospel proposes to your pursuit, and with what certainty and delight you should look forward to it, and may discern more fully what are the inexpressible advantages, and what the glorious riches and inestimable treasures, of his inheritance in the saints, which he distributes with so liberal a hand among them in the blessings of his grace at present, in consequence of having adopted them to himself, and which hereafter they shall possess in perfect happiness and glory, and shall

19 for ever enjoy with him and with each other: And that you may be thus more thoroughly sensible what [is] the exceeding greatness of his power which he hath manifested in the operations of his grace towards us who cordially believe his gospel, according to the energy of the power of his might^c, influencing our hearts in such a manner, as effectually to conquer all our prejudices against Christianity, and against true religion in every form.

20 This is indeed a power, like that which is the confirmation of our faith, as being the authentic seal of the gospel, set to it by that energy which he exerted in his Son Jesus Christ, when he lay a cold and mangled corpse in the sepulchre, in raising him from the dead, and thus declaring him to be the Son of God with power (Rom. i. 4); and by which too he seated [him] at his own right-hand in heavenly [places], in the possession of the highest dignity and glory;
Having

18 The eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints,

19 And what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power;

20 Which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right-hand in the heavenly places.

^b The eyes of your understanding enlightened.] Our translation here, though it express the sense, departs from the construction of the original, in which these words are in the accusative case, πεφωτισμενες, &c. and appear to be governed by the verb δωη in the preceding verse. And therefore, to preserve the same construction, I have repeated here the words [would give you,] which are inserted as a supplement.

^c The exceeding greatness of his power, &c.] The admirable beauty of this passage, and the strong emphasis and force of the expressions in the original, are well set forth by Bishop Pearson (on the Creed, p. 519), as scarcely to be paralleled in any author, and superior to what our language can reach. See also Blackwall's Sacred Classics, Vol. I. p. 307.

21 Far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come :

22 And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the Head over all things to the church,

23 Which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all.

Having exalted him far above all the ranks in the angelic world, even above every principality and power, and might, and dominion, however they are distinguished in the celestial hierarchy, and above every name, how honourable soever, that is named, or had in any account, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come; so that there never has been, and never shall be, among all the inhabitants of heaven and earth, any one so dear and excellent, so high and honourable, in the sight of God as he is. And it is delightful to pursue the meditation; reflecting farther, that the Divine power hath not only invested our ascended Saviour with supreme dignity, but likewise with universal authority; and hath subjected all things whatsoever under his feet, that he may over-rule and manage them as he will, and given him [to be] supreme Head over all things to the church, for its protection, benefit, and advantage: Even that church which is his body, and which as such is ever dear and precious to him, and being made complete in him, is regarded as the fulness of him who filleth all persons in all places^d with all kind of good things which they possess, and yet delights in this as his chosen dwelling, even as an holy temple which he hath consecrated to himself.

SECT.
ii.
Ephes.
I. 21.

IMPROVEMENT.

FAITH in Christ, and love to all the saints, are here with great Ver- propriety put by the apostle for the whole of a Christian temper. 15 May they be more apparent and operative in all who call themselves by the Christian name! Even a firm and active faith, a warm and unbounded love, which shall forget every thing that would alienate our hearts from our brethren; and only remember, that they are saints, consecrated to God, and sanctified by him; that they are believers in Christ Jesus, and therefore one with him, 22 who is our Head, and our All; whose love hath given to us, and to them, whatever is lovely in either; who will save the whole body, and make it so happy together, that the very thought of that happiness

^d The fulness of him who filleth all in all] Mr. Locke understands this as if it were said, which is completed, or completely filled by him, &c. and I think the texts he refers to in confirmation of this sense are of great weight, and have paraphrased the text acordingly; though it is certain that the word πληρωμα has sometimes another sense; as when we are said to receive from Christ's fulness, John i. 16, and Christ is declared to have all the fulness of Deity dwelling in him. Col. ii. 9.

^{SECT.}
^{ii.} happiness should cause our hearts to overflow with every benevolent affection, as well as with perpetual gratitude, to our Divine Ver. Deliverer, who is the source of it.

Let us learn by this excellent and pathetic prayer of the apostle what are the most important petitions we can offer for ourselves and our Christian friends. Surely this must be numbered among 18 them, that the eyes of our understandings may be enlightened more and more, that so we may more clearly and affectionately know what is the great and glorious hope which our Christian calling sets before us. Alas, as yet we know but little of it! but little of that great and glorious inheritance which God will divide among his saints, and in the enjoyment of which he will for ever unite them all. But adored be his grace if we so know it as deliberately to make choice of it, as to give up every interest and hope inconsistent with it, and determinately to say, This is our rest, we have desired it; (Psal. cxxxii. 14.)

19, 20 He who hath wrought us to the self-same thing, is God; (2 Cor. v. 5.) It is indeed an exertion of a Divine power, that quickened these dead souls of ours; the same, that quickened the dead body of our Redeemer, quickened, exalted, and glorified him. Let our souls, like that of the apostle, presently take the hint, and soar upward, as with an eagle's, or rather an angel's wings; soar to those glorious abodes, where he sits at the right-hand of God, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named. There he reigns, not only as the sovereign Guardian of the universe, but in the more endearing character of the Head of the church, bearing the same tender affection to it, exerting the same care over it, as the head over the members; calling the church, narrow as its boundaries seem, his fulness, though he fills all in all.

21
22, 23 “Blessed Lord! Fill our souls more and more with all the graces of thy Spirit, and extend the boundaries of the church all abroad! Unite us in these dearest bonds; and give us always to act worthy of that honour which thou conferrest upon us, when thou callest us thy body, thy flesh, and thy bones!” (Eph. v. 30.)

SECT. III.

Farther to excite the gratitude of the Ephesians, the Apostle leads them back to that state of moral death in which the gospel found them, and reminds them how entirely they were saved by Divine grace. Eph. II. 1—10.

EPHES. II. 1.

AND you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins.

EPHESIANS II. 1.

UNSPEAKABLE, my brethren, is the happiness of the body of Christ, which I have just been mentioning, the happiness of all who are related to him as their glorious Head: and through Divine grace this happiness is yours; for you, though once sinners of the Gentiles, [hath he] who raised up Christ from the dead [quickened] and raised to life^a, by the effectual working of that mighty power which I have shewn you to have wrought in Christ; even you, who will (as I persuade myself) most readily acknowledge, that you long were dead in trespasses and sins, incapable of any sensations and actions arising from that spiritual and Divine life to which his grace has now awakened you, and liable, as the just desert and consequence of your sins, to a sentence of eternal death. Such, it is manifest, was your wretched state, while you continued in the paths of vanity and guilt, in which ye formerly walked with pleasure^b, according to the course and manner of this present world, in a conformity to the common usage of the age in which you live, and to the fashionable enormities of your heathen neighbours; a course so detestably evil, that I may properly say of it, that

SECT. I.

Ephes. II. 1.

² Wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince

^a You hath he quickened.] Some have observed that the connection here is harsh, the words [hath he quickened] not being in the original, and would therefore suppose the accusative case υμεις (as the grammarians call it) to be governed by the verb επισημα understood, answering to the close of the preceding chapter; and thus would take the sense to be, "He who filleth all his members with all gifts and virtues, hath also filled you among the rest." But the words υμεις ολας νεκροις in the first verse so directly answer to ημεις ολας νεκροις in the fifth, that I think it very plain both must refer to ενσημασθησθε; he hath quickened together with Christ.

This is one instance, among others, of Paul's beginning a sentence and then throwing in a very long parenthesis, and taking up again at a considerable distance the words with which he began, or nearly the same. Compare Eph. iii. 1, 14, with chap. iv. 1; and I Tim. i. 5, with ver. 18.

^b In which ye formerly walked.] Dr. Goodwin very pertinently observes here, that the Ephesians were remarkable, in the midst of all their learning, for a most abandoned character. They banished Hermodorus merely for his virtue, thereby in effect making a law that every modest and temperate man should leave them. See Dr. Goodwin's Works, Vol. I. p. 7.

c The

SECT.
iii.Ephes.
II. 2.

that it was just according to the desire, instigation, and will, of the prince of the power of the air^c, that wicked spirit who commands the legions of fallen angels, that by Divine permission range in the air, and fly from place to place in pursuit of their pernicious purpose of corrupting and destroying mankind. I say it again, your course was formerly according to the dictates and suggestions of that cursed and malignant spirit, who by his influence on the hearts of men has in effect the management, however unscen and unapprehended of the spirit that now operates powerfully in the children of disobedience^d, and prejudices their darkened minds against admitting the evidence and authority of the gospel.

- 3 Amongst whom also we all had formerly, at least in some degree, our course of life and conversation^e, whatever our education or religious profession might have been; walking in many instances in the unbridled lusts of our flesh, to the base appetites of which we were enslaved, so as to forget the true dignity and happiness of a rational and immortal spirit. Thus we went on, fulfilling the dictates of the flesh, and of the inordinate passions^f of the carnal mind, as if we had been altogether destitute of any superior power

c The prince of the power of the air.] This refers to a Jewish tradition that the air was inhabited by evil spirits; a notion which, as Mr. Mede observes (Dial. on 2 Pet. ii. 4), the apostle Paul seems to approve.

d Of the spirit that now operates powerfully in the children of disobedience.] I render it [of the spirit], as this agrees better with the construction of the original κατα τον αχουσα—την ανωμαλιαν, &c. which leads us to refer this latter clause to the prevailing influence of Satan over the vicious spirit or corrupt disposition that is so powerful in sinners, which is thus represented as subject to his management, and actuated by him.—The phrase εργαζομενοι εν τοις υιοις της απειθειας, is very strong and emphatical, both in the denomination it gives to the heathen as children of rebellion and obstinacy, who would yield to no persuasion that would urge them to a better course of life, as the etymology of απειθεια imports; and in the forcible manner in which it expresses the influence of Satan over them, as if they were inspired and possessed by him; for it is well known the word εργαζομενοι among the ancients signified the same with demoniacs.

prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience.

e Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past, in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the e We all had formerly our conversation.] The apostle, changing the expression from [ye] Ephesians to [we], seems plainly to declare that he meant to include himself and all other Christians in what he here says: and it is so professedly the design of the beginning of his epistle to the Romans to prove that the Jews had not, in point of justification, any advantage above the Gentiles (Rom. iii. 9), that it is surprising to me that some very learned and ingenious writers, and Mr. Locke in particular, should contend so strongly for the contrary. As to the argument from Eph. iv. 17—20, see the paraphrase and notes there, in the beginning of sect. viii.

f The dictates of the flesh and of the passions.] The word δουλευσαι, here made use of, expresses a kind of dictatorial power; and the plural δουλουσων, which we render mind, as it cannot here signify its intellectual power, must, I think, denote the various passions, according to the prevalence of which our minds take as it were different colours and forms, and become strangely different from themselves.

the flesh, and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.

power to controul them; and howsoever we might pride ourselves in any distinction of birth or separation by peculiar privileges from the rest of the world, we were indeed by nature, and according to the bias we were naturally under, the children of wrath, and heirs of the curse denounced on sin, even as others round us are: we too, as well as they, were born in sin, and, in consequence of that innate corruption, were early plunged into actual transgressions, and so brought under a sentence of death and destruction by that law which every soul of us had in various instances violated.

SECT.
iii.

Ephes.
11. 3.

4 But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us,

This was the common calamity in which we 4 were all involved; but the blessed God being rich in mercy, and finding the motives of it in himself when there was nothing in us but misery to move him to it, according to his great and free love wherewith he hath loved us, hath been pleased to look upon us with pity, and to contrive a most astonishing and effectual way for our recovery from this deplorable state: And in pro- 5 secution of it, even when we were, as I had before observed, dead in trespasses and sins^h, he hath quickened and enlivened us together with Christ, having constituted by his grace such a near relation between us, that his renewed life should be the source of ours: for it is by that grace, which

5 Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ (by grace ye are saved;)

g Were by nature the children of wrath.] Some think the meaning of this phrase is only that we are so truly and indeed. Compare Gal. iv. 8. (See Linnborch. Theo. lib. iii. cap. 4, § 17.) But, on the whole, I think it much more reasonable to refer it to the original apostacy and corruption, in consequence of which men do, according to the course of nature, fall early into personal guilt, and so become obnoxious to the Divine displeasure. And [we all], in the beginning of this verse, is so plainly opposed to [ye] in the verse before, that it is astonishing Dr. Whitby should maintain that [we] and [ye] are used promiscuously throughout this whole discourse. Monsieur Le Clerc, [Ars Crit. p. 104.] brings many instances from ancient writers to prove that genus signifies genus or disposition; but I think I may venture to say that every one of them signifies a natural disposition, and not merely an acquired habit.

h When we were dead in trespasses and sins.] What is said in Col. ii. 13, does indeed shew that this was eminently the case of the Gentiles; but I have given my reasons above why I think it here to be spoken of what all in general were till the grace of God wrought for their recovery.

i Hath quickened us together with Christ.] This does not merely signify our being raised to the hope of pardon and glory by the resurrection and ascension of Christ; but seems to refer to that union which there is between him and all true believers, by virtue of which they may look on his resurrection, ascension, and glory, as a pledge and security of something quite of a similar nature to be accomplished in due time in and upon them. Thus we are taught to consider Christ as a public person, the elder brother of the family, and the guardian of the younger branches of it, who may, by a very easy and beautiful figure, be said to have received their inheritance in him — It is justly observed by Mr. Locke, that chap. i. 20, and ii. 5, 6, answer to each other; but the apostle's mind being filled with these grand ideas, and transported with love to Christ, lets his pen run loose to enlarge upon them, though with some interruption to the natural construction.

scri-
iii.
Ephes.
ii. 6.

which is bestowed in him, that ye are saved, and made partakers of these invaluable privileges. And in consequence of this I may farther say, that he hath raised [us] up together in him, as our Head and Representative; and by admitting him into heaven as a forerunner, to take possession of those glorious mansions for us, he hath made [us] sit together in those heavenly [places] to which he is exalted, and into which we also may be said to be admitted in Christ Jesus: for by means of that relation between him and us which Divine grace hath established, we may look upon his resurrection and exaltation to the right-hand of God, as the certain pledge and security of ours; and regarding him under the character of a public person, who is thus raised and exalted in our name, we may be said to share in those felicities and dignities which are conferred on him.

7 And this God hath done, that he might shew in the ages to come under the dispensation of the gospel, and might display to all succeeding generations, the exceeding riches of his free and unmerited grace, as manifested both to Jews and Gentiles in [his] kindness towards us in Christ Jesus; for we have received it all by him, and are partakers of it as connected with him, whom God hath appointed a Head and Saviour to us, and taught us to regard him as our great Representative. I repeat it again and again, that I may properly inculcate a doctrine of so great importance: for I would never have any of you forget (that it is by this free grace, which I have so frequently celebrated, and would for ever celebrate, that ye are brought into the happy number of the saved ones, and are delivered from that ruin into which sin hath plunged you, and raised to these glorious hopes of eternal felicity; which inestimable privileges we receive through such a cordial faith in Christ, as is productive of unfeigned love and obedience: and the grace of God appears, not only in constituting this method of salvation through faith, but also in producing this great and Divine principle in our souls; for this very faith is not of yourselves ^k, it

6 And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

7 That in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness towards us, through Christ Jesus:

8 For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves;

^k By grace ye are saved through faith; and this not of yourselves. It is observable, that the apostle speaks of these Christians not only as in the way to salvation, but as already saved (σωσθησιν) by a strong and lively figure expressing their happy selves; it is the gift of God:

is not of your own production, there being such a natural averseness to it in the heart, as that we neither can be said to have wrought it, nor is any praise resulting from it, or any excellence in it, to be ultimately ascribed to us; but [it is] really the gift of God, who by the gracious influences of his Spirit fixes our attention to the great objects of it, subdues our prejudices against it, awakens holy affections in our souls, and, on the whole, enables us to believe, and to persevere in believing, till we receive the great end of our faith in the complete salvation of our souls.

sect. iii.
Ephes. 11. 8.

9 Not of works, lest any man should boast:

And God hath appointed, that salvation should be thus obtained, by that faith which he produces in the heart, and not by works of the Mosaic law, or any other obedience of our own, lest any one should boast, as if he had by his own righteousness obtained salvation, and so should ascribe the glory of it to himself rather than to God. But it cannot be so now: for as all

10 For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained, acts of acceptable obedience proceed from faith and this faith is wrought in our hearts by the gracious influence of the Divine Spirit, it is most evident that we are to acknowledge ourselves to be his workmanship, so far as there is any thing in us agreeable to the nature and will of God; being created in Christ Jesus unto good works, and made able not only to perform them, but to delight in them; even those works of evangelical obedience, to the performance of which (though we obtain the forgiveness of our sins previous to our performing them, on our accepting Christ and believing the grace of the gospel) God hath before prepared [us] by the influences of his Spirit; having fore-ordained and happy security.—Some explain the following clause [and this not of yourselves], as if it were only a repetition of what was said before, that the constitution that made faith the way to salvation was not of their own appointment, but God's. But this is making the apostle guilty of a flat tautology, for which there is no occasion. Taking the clause as we explain it, that is, as asserting the agency of Divine grace, in the production of faith, as well as in the constitution of the method of salvation by it, the thought rises with great spirit. As for the apostle's using the word πίστεως in the neuter gender to signify faith, the thing he had just before been speaking of, there are so many similar instances to be found in scripture, that one would wonder how it were possible for any judicious critics to have laid so much stress on this as they do, in rejecting what seems beyond all comparison the weightiest and most natural interpretation. Compare the original of the following texts, Phil. 1. 28; Eph. vi. 18; Gal. iii. 17; iv. 19. And for the like construction in other Greek authors of undoubted credit, see Elmer's Observ. Vol. I. p. 128; and Raphel's Annot. ex Herod. p. 186.

12 To which God hath before prepared us.] This

SECT.
iii.Ephes.
ii. 10.

and appointed in his eternal counsels, and in the declarations of his word, that we should diligently and constantly walk in them, as ever we would approve ourselves his people, and stand entitled to the promised blessings of the future state, which indeed we can no otherwise in the nature of things be prepared to receive.

dained, that we should walk in them.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. LET us behold with a becoming attention, and with all those emotions of heart which an attentive review of it is capable of exciting, the amazing diversity of these states as represented by the apostle; and remember that they are states, in the one or the other of which we all are. We see what nature and the first Adam have made us; and we see what grace and an interest in the second would make us.

- 1 Daily observation, and, in too many instances our own experience, may have convinced us, that it is not the character of the Gentiles alone to be dead in trespasses and sins. It shews us, that
- 2 to walk according to the general course of this apostate world, is to walk according to the prince of the power of the air; who, when he is most set on our ruin, is most importunate in persuading us to fulfil the desires of the flesh and of the mind.
- 3 Still, alas! till the gospel reaches and renews the heart, doth the same evil spirit, by means of the corrupt and vicious spirit dwelling in them, work in the children of disobedience and wrath, in which number we must acknowledge ourselves by nature to have been. But blessed be God, that grace has its superior triumph over depraved nature; and where sin hath abounded, grace doth much more abound; (Rom. v. 20.)
- 4 The mercy of God is rich, and his love is great; and his powerful
- 5, 6 grace, to which we must ascribe all our hope of salvation, hath quickened us when we were dead in sins, and hath enlivened us with Christ, to whom by faith we are united, and so incorporated with him, that in consequence of it we may not only consider his resurrection and ascension to glory as an emblem, but in some degree as an anticipation, of our own, and may think and speak of ourselves as raised, and exalted, and glorified, with him.

O how blessed and joyful a view is this! and how powerfully ought it to operate upon us, to elevate our minds above this low world

This is plainly the sense of the original, οὐκ ἐκρίθημεν ἁγιοι, which shews, that as we are chosen to be holy, (chap. i. 4,) and called to perform good works, (Tit. iii. 8,) so also God prepares us for, and enables us to, it by his grace.

world, and to animate us to every great and generous sentiment and pursuit! Surely this must illustrate, if any thing can do it, SECT.
iii. the riches and freedom of that grace by which we are saved, and Ver. must engage the generations to come to celebrate his exceeding kindness towards us. Let all boasting in ourselves therefore be entirely given up: let salvation by faith be acknowledged to be of grace; 7 and that faith itself be acknowledged as the gift of God, whose workmanship we are, and by whom we are created to that noble and only acceptable principle of good works. Let not this grace 8, 9 be received in ruin; but let us answer the purposes of this new nature and new life which God hath graciously given us, and shew forth the praises of him from whom it is derived, and in whom in a spiritual as well as a natural sense, we live, and move, and exist. 10

SECT. V.

The Apostle farther pursues the argument begun in the last section, as representing the happy state into which they were now brought as united to the church of God, and partakers of all its privileges; the middle wall of partition being now removed in favour of believing Gentiles. Eph. II. 11, to the end.

EPHES. II. 11.
WHEREFORE remember that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called uncircumcision by that which

YOU have heard of the glorious privileges SECT.
iv. to which as Christians you are exalted, out of that wretched state of moral death in which the gospel found you: wherefore let me seriously urge it upon you, that you would always remember and bear it in mind how happy a change God hath been pleased by his sovereign grace to make in your state, and would consider what you now are in comparison with what you formerly were. O let it never be forgotten, that ye [were] formerly ignorant, vicious, and idolatrous Gentiles, and in a state wherein the flesh was continually leading you captive, and drawing you to gratify and fulfil its lusts; who being thus abandoned to your own ways, without any sign or token of an interest in God, [were] called, by way of contempt, the uncircumcision, uncircumcised abominable sinners, by that body of men which is called the circumcision, on Ephes.
II. 11. account

^a Called the uncircumcision by that which is called the circumcision.] The terms of circumcision and uncircumcision in the abstract are here plainly put for circumcised and

SECT.
IV.Ephes.
II. 11.

account of their having received that rite which is performed with hands, and imprints a mark in the flesh, of which as you were destitute, they who had received and gloried in it avoided you as unclean. But I am sensible your chief misery did not consist in the want of that ceremony, which can by no means avail to the salvation of the soul, or render it, while the heart continues uncircumcised, in any degree acceptable to God: Your wretchedness was (and see that you remember it with the greatest humility, and with the most affecting sense of the acknowledgments you owe to that free grace which has delivered you from that deplorable condition), that ye were at that time, while you were unregenerate Gentiles, without any knowledge of Christ, or any interest in him, and thus were destitute of all those blessings which he brings to his believing and obedient people: and indeed were without any expectations of the Messiah, and had not those advantages for inquiring after him and embracing him, which the Jews had by virtue of their prophecies, and of the various means ordained to point him out: ye were then aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and had no part in any of the favours granted to them, no claim to their peculiar privileges, nor any right of citizenship with them; not so much as knowing that polity which God had established among his own chosen people, in order to direct their views to the gospel, and to prepare them for the reception of it: and having no communion with the church, ye were then unacquainted with the Divine engagements to it, and strangers to the covenants of promise^b, not having any knowledge of the covenant made with Israel by Moses, or of those better promises on which the covenant with Abraham was established, which is called the circumcision in the flesh made by hands;

^b That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, and uncircumcised; as they are likewise Rom. ii. 26; iii. 30; and iv. 9. Thus also to be made the righteousness of God is put for being made righteous by God, 2 Cor. v. 21.

^b The covenants of promise.] Though the covenant for substance was one and the same, the apostle here speaks of it in the plural number (as he does also Rom. ix. 4), as it was given out at several times, with various explications and enlargements, not only to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Gen. xii. 2, 3; xvii. 7, 8; xxii.

17, 18; xxvi. 3, 4; xxviii. 13, 14), but afterwards to the whole church of Israel. (Exod. xxiv. 7, 8; Deut. xviii. 15, 18; xxix. 12, 13; and xxx. 5, 6.) And as the promises it contained centered in the great promise of the Messiah, and of salvation by him, he therefore speaks of them in the singular number, but as one promise, which is agreeable to the scripture-style in other places. Compare Acts ii. 39; xiii. 32; xxvi. 6, 7; Rom. iv. 14, 16; Gal. iii. 17, 23; Eph. iii. 6; and Heb. vi. 17.

promise, having no hope, and without God in the world :

established, and assurance given of the Messiah's coming, and of eternal life through him: so that, in consequence of this, ye were then wholly taken up in the pursuit of earthly things, without any prospect of good things to come, having no well-grounded hope with regard to a future state; no hope of spiritual and eternal blessings, about which, immersed as you were in the cares and pleasures of this lower world, you had indeed but very little thought: and though you had such an infamous herd of imaginary deities, and were so eager in the worship of them, and particularly of your great goddess Diana, and of Jupiter, whose daughter she was supposed to be (Acts xix. 35), yet in reality ye were atheists in the world^c, for ye lived and conversed in the world, ignorant of the one living and true God, its great Original and Support; and worshipping only such as by nature are no gods (Gal. iv. 8), ye had no conception of any being that was truly worthy to be spoken of by any Divine title.

STEP.
iv.
EPIST.
II. 18.

13

But let your hearts reflect with joy and thankfulness on that blessed change which the Divine goodness hath now made in your condition, by bringing you to faith in Christ Jesus; for having cordially embraced him as exhibited in the gospel,

^c 15 But now in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off, are made

[c Having no love.] That the heathens had among them the doctrine of a future state, and that it was popularly taught and generally believed by the common people, must, I think, appear incontestible to any who are at all acquainted with antiquity. But it is as apparent that they reasoned very weakly upon the subject, that they had no well-grounded hope of future happiness, and that they were but very little impressed with it; so that they had no deity to which they prayed for eternal life, as the fathers often remonstrate. And by far the greater part of their most learned philosophers either expressly denied, in private lectures to their pupils, the doctrine of future rewards and punishments, or taught principles quite inconsistent with it: as must, I think, plainly appear to any who will impartially peruse what Mr. Warburton has written upon the subject, so judiciously defended in the Critical Review.

[d Atheists in the world.] Both the Christians and heathens, as Dr. Whitby well observes here, called each other atheists, though both worshipped some deity real or imaginary; because each supposed the other to reject that which was the true object of adoration. But I cannot conceive that the apostle would have given to the heathens the character of atheists, if the worship of the one living and true God had really prevailed among them to that degree which some Christian divines have incautiously maintained that it did. The truth of the matter seems to have been, that though several of them speak of their Jupiter in terms properly applicable to the one Self-existent and Eternal Deity only, yet they taught and believed other things of him quite inconsistent with such perfections: and those who had some knowledge of our Supreme Eternal Cause, yet practically disregarded him; and, however they might reconcile it with the dictates of their consciences worshipped inferior deities, and many of them such as were represented under the most scandalous characters, to the neglect of the Supreme Being, and the destruction of all true religion. Compare Rom. i. 20—26; and consult the notes on these verses, Vol. III. p. 388, 389.

e. 11c

SECT.
iv.Ephes.
II. 13.

gospel, ye who were formerly afar off from God, and from all the hopes and privileges of his people, are now brought near to God and to each other, by the atoning blood of Christ^e, whereby he hath expiated your guilt, and made a free and honourable way for your approach to God, and partaking in all the benefits of his church. For he is the procurer of our peace^f, who hath reconciled us, whether Jews or Gentiles, to God and to each other, and hath so incorporated us into one church, that it may properly be said, he hath made both one, as to an interest in the favour of God and in the privileges of his people; and that no difference might remain between us, he hath thrown down the middle wall of separation, which divided us from each other, as the wall which runs between the court of the Gentiles and that of Israel in the temple at Jerusalem divided the Gentile worshippers from the Jewish^g. This happy union between us the Lord Jesus Christ hath accomplished, having abolished by those sufferings which he endured in his flesh, what was the grand occasion of the enmity and mutual alienation which had so long prevailed; [even] the law of positive commandments and ceremonies, [contained] in the Mosaic ordinances, to which the Jews were so much attached, and to the bondage of which the Gentiles were so irreconcilably averse: but this Christ hath now abrogated and taken out of the way, that so he might form the two opposite parties, by virtue of their union with each other in himself, into one new man, uniting them together as new creatures in one church, under a dispensation very different from the former, in which they both should equally made nigh by the blood of Christ.

14 For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us;

15 Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments, contained in ordinances, for to make in himself, of twain,

^e Are brought near by the blood of Christ.] There seems to be an evident allusion here to the privileges of those Israelites who were not under any ceremonial pollution, or who were cleansed from their guilt by the blood of atonement, and so had free liberty of entering the temple, and conversing with God; upon which account they are called a people near unto him. Psal. cxlviii. 14. Compare Exod. xix. 4, 6; Lev. x. 3; and Psal. lxxv. 4.

^f He is our peace.] This Mr. Locke would have to be the same with your Peace, and to be meant of the Gentile converts, of whom the apostle had been speaking just before: but it is evident the reconciliation as well as the enmity was mutual, and the Jews were at present as strongly prejudiced against the Gentiles as the Gentiles against the Jews; the apostle therefore with consummate propriety goes on to speak in terms which were intended to include all true believers, whether originally belonging to the one or the other.

^g Divided the Gentile worshippers from the Jewish.] This is that wall which was called the Chel, which separated the court of the Gentiles from that into which the Jews only were allowed to enter, of which we have the most authentic account in Josephus (Bell. Jud. lib. v. cap. 5. [al. vi. 6], § 2.) Compare note 1, on Acts xxi. 28. Vol. III. p. 224.

twain, one new man,
so making peace;

16 And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain
the enmity thereby;

17 And came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh.

18 For through him
we both have access
by

equally partake of the same privileges; [so] making an entire peace between them, and laying a foundation not only for peace, but for mutual love, by removing the ground of those prejudices they had entertained against each other, and joining them in bonds of such tenderness as became the members of one living body: And that he might complete this blessed work of making peace, and reconcile them both, as thus united in one body, and animated by one spirit, not merely unto one another, but unto God, he hath took away the guilt of sin, and made atonement for it by the blood of his cross, removing by this means what was the cause of enmity between God and them, as they were all transgressors of his holy law; so that he may be properly considered, on account of what he suffered on the cross, as having slain the enmity by it, as he hath thus made up the breach which sin had made between God and his offending creatures, by means of the atoning sacrifice of himself. (Compare Col. i. 20.) And, having procured this reconciliation by his death, he came to both after his resurrection and ascension, in the person of his authorised ambassadors, to whom he hath committed the important trust of speaking in his name and stead (2 Cor. v. 19, 20), and preached the glad tidings of peace and reconciliation to you that [were] as Gentiles afar off from God, and to them also of the Jewish nation that [were] of old regarded as a people near unto him^h; declaring the foundation he has laid, not only for a sincere reciprocal affection, but for all other most important benefits and blessings. For, as the bappy fruit and consequence of the peace procured by him as well for the believing Gentiles as the Jews, we both are introduced into the Divine presence, and have an equal title to the liberty of a free access to God, as the common Father of the whole familyⁱ, and may draw near to him with acceptance

SECRET.
IV.

1 phes.
II. 15.

16

17

18

^h To you that were afar off, and to them that were near.] It is so natural to refer this to what had been said of the different states of Jews and Gentiles, that one would wonder any should have thought of explaining both these characters of the Jews, as signifying those who lived in distant countries, as well as those who dwelt in or near Jerusalem where our Lord suffered.

ⁱ Access to God the Father.] The word προσπαύω, which we render access, does properly refer to the custom of introducing persons into the presence of some person, or of any other greatly their superior; in which case it is necessary they should be ushered in by one appointed for that purpose, to preserve a becoming decorum.

1 N. S. 1787:3

SECT.
IV.Ephes.
II. 18.

ceptance in the aids of one Spirit, under whose gracious influences we are fitted for the sacred pleasure of conversing with God, and filled with all filial confidence towards him and brotherly affection to each other. (Rom. viii. 15.)

- 19 Now therefore you are no more strangers and foreigners^k, like those who came from distant nations to make a short abode among the Jews without a share in any of their privileges, but fellow-citizens with the saints, intitled to all their glorious immunities, and even the domestics of God, admitted to dwell in his house, and to partake of the honours and blessings of his family ;
- 20 Being built on the foundation^l of the apostles and prophets^m, who in their respective places, by their miraculous works and predictions, as well as by their several ministrations, have testified the kind regard of God to his people, and made provision for the establishment of the church ; Jesus Christ himself being the chief Corner-stone, who holds the several parts together, and supports the whole stress of the edifice : In whom the whole building, harmoniously cemented, in such a manner as to add beauty, strength, and unity

by one Spirit unto the Father.

19 Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God.

20 And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief Corner-stone ;

21 In whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an k Strangers and foreigners.] I know not how far there is room to distinguish nicely between the signification of these two words, ξένοι and παροικιοί. If there be, the latter signifies something more than the former ; and I doubt not but it alludes to the case of sojourning strangers among the Jews, who were not incorporated by complete proselytism into the body of the Jewish people, and made, as such proselytes were, συμπολίται, fellow-citizens with equal privileges. And perhaps when οικεῖν τῷ Θεῷ, domestics of God, is added, it may have some relation to that peculiar nearness to God in which the Jewish priests were, and refer to that great intimacy of unrestrained converse with God to which we as Christians are admitted ; in which respect our privileges seem to resemble not only those of the people praying in the common court of Israel, but of the priests worshipping in the house itself. Nay it is elsewhere added, by a figure which seems beautifully to rise even on this, that we “ have confidence to enter into the holiest of all by the blood of Jesus.” Heb. x. 19.

l Being built on the foundation.] It is observed by Lord Shaftesbury, that the apostle accommodates himself to the taste of the Ephesians, who were extremely fond of architecture, by frequent allusions to building, and to the majesty, order, and beauty, of which their temple consecrated to Diana was so celebrated a masterpiece. (Compare chap. iii. 17, 18 ; and iv. 10, 29.) But it is certain many allusions of this kind are to be met with in other epistles, particularly 1 Cor. iii. 9—17 ; vi. 19 ; 2 Cor. v. 1 ; vi. 16. Compare 1 Pet. ii. 4—8.

m Of the apostles and prophets.] I have often wondered that such sensible writers as the late Lord Barrington and Mr. Jeffery should conclude that the prophets here spoken of are those of the New Testament (Compare Eph. iii. 5 ; iv. 11 ; with Mat. xvi. 18). See Miscell. Sacra, Essay ii. p. 44 ; and Jeffery's Review, p. 88. Their chief argument is, that the Gentile church here spoken of was not built upon the foundation of the Old Testament prophets. But not to insist upon it, that when the converted Gentiles came to consult the Jewish writings, they might derive from them great encouragement in their faith, it is to be considered that the apostle is now speaking, not of the Ephesian or Gentile church in particular, but of the whole Christian church consisting of the aggregate body of converted Gentiles and Jews, as appears farther from what is said in the close of this verse, of Christ's being the chief Corner-stone.

an holy temple in the Lord :

22 In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.

unity to the whole, groweth by the continual accession of new converts, and the advancing graces of those already converted, into an holy temple in the Lord, fitly consecrated to him, as being raised and supported by him. In whom you also, my dear brethren, believing in him as the great Lord of the church, are built up together with all true believers for an habitation of God, who by the Spirit of his grace takes up his residence among you, and publicly owns his relation to you in consequence of your union with his beloved Son.

ECT.
iv.
Ephes.
11. 13.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET the apostle's remonstrance to these Ephesians remind us ^{Ver.} of our obligations to the Divine goodness, that we are not left in the sad state of our heathen ancestors; that we are not without the knowledge of Christ, in all the darkness of the Gentile world; that we are not aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and stran- 12
gers to the covenants of promise; that we are not destitute of any well-grounded foundation of future hope, and without God in the world. But how unhappy is the case of many, who, though they are called Christians, yet have no saving interest in that Redeemer whose name they bear, in consequence of their being strangers to the obedience of faith, and a vital subjection of heart to his gospel! Let all that name the name of Christ, all that profess to know him, acknowledge, with a view to his atoning sacrifice, that if they are brought near to God it is by his blood. To this we owe the external 13 privilege of a people nigh unto God; and to the effectual application of it we owe the blessings of that nearness which the heart feels as the earnest of its eternal happiness.

If Christ, according to the principles of the apostle's reasonings 14, 16 hath made peace by the blood of his cross between Jews and Gentiles, whose manner of living was so widely different from each other; if he hath broken down the middle wall of partition between them, and of two made one new man; how much more apparently reasonable is it that smaller differences should give way to the engagements of so endearing a band! Have we not all one Father? 18
And have we not all access to him through one Saviour, by one Spirit? 19
Let us then consider ourselves as fellow-citizens with the saints; and maintain that most cordial affection to all of this household, which becomes those that are of one family, and are named from one Lord.

And, as a great security of this union, let us be concerned to maintain 20

SECT. iv. maintain a due regard to the apostles and prophets on whom we are built, whose writings, if perused with diligence and attention, sub-
 Ver. serve so much to the purposes of Christian edification. But, above all, let us fix our regards upon Christ, as the chief Corner-stone; by a union with whom we are united to each other, and the whole 21 stress of our eternal hopes is supported. In him the whole building is fitly framed together; and it is by his operative influence that it groweth up to a holy temple in the Lord. Let us consider ourselves as designed for this use, to be an habitation of God
 22 through the Spirit; and be concerned to cultivate that purity and sanctity which suits so excellent a relation and so high a dignity. Let us lift up the everlasting gates of our souls to admit that blessed Inhabitant, that he may come and dwell in us, and consecrate us more and more unto himself.

SECT. V.

Farther to recommend the gospel to the regard of these Gentile converts, the Apostle strongly expresses the sense he had of the Divine goodness in committing it to his trust, though he was called to sacrifice his liberty in its defence. Eph. III. 1—12.

EPHESIANS III. 1.

EPHES. III. 1.

SECT. v.
 Ephes. III. 1.

FOR this cause, and for my faithful testimony to this glorious gospel, the plan of which is so extensive, so wise, and so benevolent, how little soever it may suit the narrow minds of my bigotted countrymen, I Paul [am] the prisoner of Jesus Christ^b; being brought under this calamity, the loss of my liberty, for the sake of you Gentiles, and in consequence of that firm attachment which I am known to have to your cause
 2 and interest. For this I am persuaded you will consider as the occasion of my bonds, since I well

FOR this cause, I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles;

2 If ye have heard of a I Paul [am] the prisoner, &c.] This is often alledged as an instance of an extraordinary length of sentence in the original, supposing that what begins the first verse of this chapter is resumed again at ver. 14, and not ended till the close of chap. iv. 3. So that the sense runs, "For this cause, I Paul, the prisoner of Christ for you Gentiles,—for this cause [I say], I bow my knees, &c."—[even] I the prisoner of the Lord beseech you therefore that ye walk worthy, &c." Yet as the easy supposition that quia is understood would make the construction much more obvious and plain, I have therefore inserted the word [am].

But if I were sure the sentence in the original was of the utmost length that any have maintained, I should think the division of it in any translation very pardonable, especially in a paraphrase. I have often broke one period into many, as being much more concerned to give the true sense as intelligibly as possible, than to preserve the grammatical construction of every word in the version where this might occasion obscurity; and it will not be easy for any who have not been exercised in works of this kind, to imagine the difficulty which this precaution has often brought upon me. Compare note b on chap. i. 3, sect. i. p. 522.

b Since

of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward:

3 How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery (as I wrote afore in few words,

4 Whereby when ye read ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ.)

5 Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed

b Since I well know you have heard, &c.] So I translate the words ἡμεῖς ἠκούσαμεν, for I think it cannot be imagined that they had never heard, during his long abode at Ephesus, from him, and from many others an account of the extraordinary revelation of the gospel which he had received. As for the inference that some would draw from hence, that this epistle (if it was not written to some other church where we had never preached) was written before Paul came to live at Ephesus, I think it absolutely inconclusive; not only considering that the particle ἡμεῖς has often the signification of [forasmuch as] or [since] or [seeing that] but because it is certain he was now a prisoner at Rome, which he never was till long after his abode at Ephesus. (Acts xix. 10, 11.) I may add, that the words ἡμεῖς ἠκούσαμεν τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν are not so properly rendered, We have heard of the dispensation, &c. which determines the sense to what they might have learned by report from others; they may as well express their having heard the dispensation from his own mouth.

well know you have heard, and are acquainted with, the dispensation of the adorable grace of God^b, which by his special favour to myself, and those to whom I am the herald of it, hath been given to me in your behalf: my zeal for which has been the means of stirring up the malice of the Jews against me: And I am confident³ you cannot forget what you have often heard, that to prepare and furnish me for this important work to which the Lord hath called me, he made known to me by immediate revelation, and not by the instrumentality of any human testimony, the great mystery which had so long been concealed; as I have briefly wrote before, and hinted more than once in this epistle, (chap. i. 9, 10; ii. 11, and seq.) in passages which, though they contain not a full illustration of the matter, yet suggest some material hints with regard to it: By which when you read^c, what⁴ I have laid before you, and attentively consider and review [it,] you may observe and form some notion of my understanding in the mystery of Christ^d, which so many still remain ignorant of, and so many others are unwilling to acknowledge and admit.

This I with great propriety call a mystery, it⁵ being a most astonishing and glorious system of Divine truth, which in other preceding generations was not made known to the sons of men^e; having

c By which when you read.] Dr. Whitby would render the phrase ὑποκρίθητε, you review; by attending to which: but as ἀνακρίθητε signifies to read and review, or, (as we vulgarly speak) to con a thing over in the mind, to root it there, which must suppose frequent reading, I chuse to retain the common translation.

d You may observe my understanding in the mystery of Christ.] This Dr. Goodwin thinks to be the highest eulogium made by the apostle on any of his own writings; where he concludes, that this is the richest and noblest of all the epistles, and thinks it was peculiarly intended to be so, to reward the generous zeal of the Ephesians in burning their erroneous books, by a book of Divine knowledge, incomparably more valuable than any or all of them. (See Acts xix. 19.) I pretend not absolutely to decide on the comparative excellency of his epistles, but could not forbear mentioning so remarkable and ingenious a thought. (See Goodwin's Works, Vol. I. p. 2.)

e Which in other generations was not made known

STCI.
v.
1 phes.
III. 2.

sect.
v.

Ephes.
III. 5.

having neither been discovered to the Gentiles, who were wholly strangers to it, nor manifested under any former dispensation to those whom God had taken for his people, with any such perspicuity, as that with which it is now revealed by the Spirit to his holy apostles and prophets of the New Testament dispensation, who have the word of wisdom and of knowledge given to them. (1. Cor. xii. 8.) And what I chiefly have in view, as one very material part of it, is this, that the Gentiles should be joint-heirs with the Jews in spiritual privileges, and should be members of the same body with them, and partakers together of his promise in Christ; particularly of the communication of the Holy Spirit, in token of their sharing in all the other blessings of the Messiah's kingdom, which the Jews have fondly imagined to be peculiar to themselves, but which are now freely proposed to the Gentile nations by the gospel which we are commissioned every where to preach.

7 This is the gospel of which I was made a minister, not of my own motion or seeking, nor at all on account of any worthiness in me, but according to the free gift of the grace of God, which in so extraordinary and remarkable a manner was given to me, calling me forth to the apostleship by the energy of his power, which wrought so great a change in me as to prepare and qualify me for that high and holy office; to the purposes of which no man living can be more averse than I once was. And when I think of this I am covered with confusion, and know not how to speak of myself in any terms of sufficient abasement; for such was the astonishing condescension of the great God, and such his favour to a worthless creature, that unto me, who am so unworthy of the honour of being called an apostle, that I am less than the least of all saints, revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit;

6 That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ, by the gospel:

7 Whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power.

8 Unto me who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable known, &c.] The following verse so plainly determines this passage to the calling of the Gentiles into the church, that I think there can be no controversy as to the general sense of it; though it seemed to me, that the apostle's explaining it in the manner he presently does, rendered it improper to anticipate that explication in the paraphrase. It was indeed known long before, that the Gentiles should be added to the church; but it was not known that they should be heirs of the same inheritance and partakers of the promise of the Spirit. The Jews rather thought of their being slaves to them; and least of all did they imagine, that the middle wall of their ceremonies should be broken down, and the Gentiles admitted to the full privileges of God's people, without circumcision and obedience to the Mosaic law; which the Christian converts among them heard of at first with great amazement. Acts x. 45; xi. 18.

searchable riches of Christ;

saints^f, and look upon myself, on account of what I formerly was, as below the very meanest among them, this grace was given, that I should be employed to preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, which while I am endeavouring to trace out in their particular contents, I am quite lost in rapturous amazement, and all my most elevated conceptions are swallowed up in that unfathomable fulness which can never be exhausted. Yet to this honour-9 able and important office am I graciously appointed to enlighten and instruct as well the Gentiles as the Jews, (Acts xxvi. 18.) and to make all men see, in some affecting measure and degree, what [is] the happiness arising from the communication of the mystery of the calling of the Gentiles to be joint-heirs with the Jews, which from eternal ages was hid, being concealed in the secret counsels of the ever-blessed and incomprehensible God^g, who, as he at first created all things by Jesus Christ, his Divine Son, (John i. 3.) hath new-created also all that are in him by a lively faith, and by him raised them to the prospect of complete holiness and happiness^h. And this is now revealed and set in a new light, 10 after the more imperfect intimations of it that were given before, that the manifold wisdom of God

SECT.
V.
Ephes.
III. 8.

9 And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ:

10 To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly

[Less than the least of all saints.] It has often been observed here, that the apostle makes a new word (which, as grammarians would speak, is the comparative degree of the superlative;) ἀνεξετάστως, which I think no translation can fully equal, or very happily express. No doubt, he refers to what he had been formerly, when he persecuted the church of God: (compare 1 Cor. xv. 9; and 1 Tim. i. 13.) But whether there be (as Dr. Goodwin thinks, Vol. I. p. 3.) any reference to his name Paulus, which in the Roman language signified [little], and at the same time to the lowness of his stature, which occasioned Chrysostom's calling him τριποδύτης, a man three cubits high, I do not pretend to say; and only hint at what Sigonius says, that Emilius Paulus obtained his additional name from his low stature.

g What is the communication of the mystery, &c.] Some would translate the following clause τα ἀποκρυφθέντα ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων, which has been hid from the ages, that is, from the former ages of the world: but as in ver. 11. it is called ἀρχαῖα τὰ κειμένα, an eternal purpose, and is here said to be hid in God, I apprehend no need of varying the translation, where the phrase is the same, though to be sure this interpretation includes the sense of the other. It is evident, that here is an allusion to the hiding a treasure in some secret place (compare Josh. vii. 21; and Mat. xiii. 44; where the same word is used;) as there may also be in the word ἀνεξετάστως, ver. 8. which properly signifies what cannot be traced out, and it is certain, that though something is now known concerning this glorious mystery, yet there is an incomparably greater part concerning which we only know in the general that it is a rich treasure, without particularly knowing either what, how much, or where it is.

h Created all things by Jesus Christ.] Mr. Locke pleads, as Diodate had done before, that this refers, not to the creation of the world, but to the renovation of it; and so may be considered as an intimation that God always intended Christ should have the honour of forming all things anew, and therefore concealed the mystery in himself till after he was come. But the words, if taken in the most extensive sense contain both a certain and a pertinent truth.

SECT.
V.Ephes.
III. 10.

God, discovering itself in such a beautiful and well ordered variety of dispensations, might now more fully be made known, and be displayed in all its brightness to the principalities and powers in heavenly [places] even to all the various orders of angelic beings, by means of what is done for the churchⁱ, which is the happy object of a love that hath produced effects beyond what the spirits of heaven could otherwise have conceived or apprehended; and in the contemplation of it they are furnished with new motives to adore that grace, which by the manifestations of it to the church displays new glories unparalleled in all the history of heaven, in the surprising methods taken to complete the

- 11 number of its blessed inhabitants: All which gracious operations proceed in perfect harmony with the original plan adjusted in the Divine Mind: according to the eternal purpose which he formed before all ages in Christ Jesus our Lord^k, both to be executed by him, and to terminate in him; which as his well beloved Son he was appointed to effect, and all the benefits of which he has secured to be communicated to the
- 12 church: Even that blessed Mediator, through whom we have freedom of speech in our approaches to the throne of grace, and have access with confidence of being heard, as being assured of audience and acceptance by the faith of him; in a reliance upon whom we may address ourselves to God with the humble cheerful liberty of children whom he hath adopted into his family, and united to himself in the dearest and most indissoluble bonds.

heavenly places, might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God.

11 According to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord :

12 In whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him.

IMPROVE-

ⁱ Be made known to the principalities and powers in heavenly [places], &c.] The prophecies of the Old Testament gave strong intimations, at least, of the intended calling of the Gentiles into the church; and the angels seem expressly to refer to it in what they said to the shepherds, and in their anthem at the nativity of Christ, (Luke ii. 10, 14.) I apprehend therefore, that the apostle here would lead the thoughts of his readers to the series of Divine dispensations as gradually opening this great discovery, and not merely to what he preached concerning it; though to be sure that greatly illustrated the scheme.—It is strangely unnatural to explain this clause as Mr. Locke would do, of the Jewish principalities and powers; by which he is driven to the hard shift of, connecting αγγέλων αγγέλων with the wisdom of God, which the first reading of the word in the original will shew how little they will bear.

^k According to the eternal purpose, &c.] Mr. Locke would render κατὰ πρόθεσιν αἰώνων, &c. according to that predisposition of the ages, or several dispensations, which he made in Christ Jesus, which by the pre-ordination of God's purpose were all regulated and constituted in him; and Dr. Whitby taking it in the same sense: explains it of his being promised in the first age to Adam, typified in the second to the Jews, and in the last age preached to all the world. But perhaps this interpretation may coincide more with a sense they are so solicitous to avoid, than either of these learned authors were aware.

IMPROVEMENT.

St. Paul's understanding in the mystery of Christ is just matter of perpetual joy to the whole Christian world, and especially to the Gentile churches, which have derived from thence so much of their knowledge and of their hope. Let us congratulate ourselves and each other on the propagation of so glorious a system of Divine truth, which had so long been concealed from ages and generations. The apostles and prophets were raised up by God to receive and reveal it: and we are entered on the blessed fruit of their labours; (John iv. 38.) Let us learn from them to set a due value on our participation in that inheritance, on our union to that body to which by the gospel we are called.

May it particularly teach us that humility which was so conspicuous, so amiable, so admirable in St. Paul. This excellent man, this distinguished favourite of heaven, who stood in the foremost rank of Christians, of ministers, of apostles, yet labours for words to express the sense he had of his own meanness and unworthiness, and commits a kind of solecism in language, that he might lay himself as low as possible; using the most diminutive term that could be, to describe himself as one who in his own esteem was less than the least of all saints! And shall we then exalt ourselves, and be proud of the trifling distinctions that raise our obscure heads a little above some of our brethren?

Let those in particular, who have the honour of being called to the sacred office of the ministry, consider how reasonable it is, that instead of being puffed up with it they should rather be humbled, when they reflect how unworthy the best of men are of it, and in how defective a manner the most faithful discharge it; while yet the grace is given them to preach the riches of Christ, his unsearchable riches. Let these be made the frequent subject of their preaching; and let all the course of it be directed, in a proper manner, to the illustration of that subject. Let the well-chosen phrase which the apostle uses here, teach them and all Christians to search more and more into this unfathomable abyss; as still sure to discover new wonders in the variety and fulness of its inexhaustible contents beyond what they have known before, and to find new pleasures in tracing again those already known.

This glorious theme is worthy of the contemplation of angels; and we are elsewhere told, that these celestial spirits desire to look into it (1 Pet. i. 12), and to learn new displays of the Divine attributes from the church. Let us then hear and worship, as under their inspection; and let not our hearts be cold to these sacred truths

SECT. V. truths which are our own salvation, while they rejoice in them only on the general principles of piety and benevolence.

Ver. All that is done in the prosecution of the glorious design of our 11 redemption now, is the result of those counsels of peace which God from eternal ages formed in his own compassionate mind. To that source, after the example of the apostle, let us frequently trace all with the most exalted gratitude; recollecting that we receive this adoption in Christ, who is the great Mediator of our access unto God. Let us therefore, on the one hand, take all our encouragements in prayer from views to him; and on the other, having such a foundation for it, let us come with an holy boldness to the Divine throne, that so we may obtain the mercy and grace which we daily and hourly need.

SECT. VI.

The Apostle represents the earnestness with which he prayed for their establishment in Christianity, as the best wish the most fervent affection could dictate for them. Eph. III. 13, to the end.

EPHESIANS III. 13.

SECT. VI.
 Ephes. III. 13.

SUCH and so great are the privileges to which the gospel raises us; wherefore, as I have been the happy instrument of bringing it among you, though (as I said before, ver. 1,) I am now a prisoner for you Gentiles, yet I desire, my dear brethren, that ye faint not, or be in any degree discouraged at my affliction for you, which when it is thoroughly considered upon what account I endure these sufferings, must be acknowledged to be so far from any reason to dishearten you, that it may rather serve for the encouragement and confirmation of your faith, and is indeed your glory: for it is really an honour that God does you, in employing his faithful servant to lay out his time and strength, and even to sacrifice his liberty, in your cause; and that courage and cheerfulness in which God is pleased to support me in the midst of all these hardships, shews his farther regard for you, and may justly be esteemed as intended by him, not for my comfort only, but for an additional honour to you.

14 For this cause, that the great work in which I am engaged may more successfully be carried on, and that the purposes of these my sufferings may be answered in your consolation and the Divine glory,

EPHES. III. 13.
 WHEREFORE I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, which is your glory.

14 For this cause I bow my knees unto the the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

15 Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named.

16 That he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man;

17 That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye being rooted and grounded in love, glory, while I am here in the retirement of my prison, I am daily pouring out my soul to God on your account, and with the most affectionate concern for your establishment, I bend my knees to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; Even of that great and glorious Redeemer, of whom the whole family both in heaven and on earth is named^a, by whom angels and men are incorporated into one society, and as well those who are gone before to the possession of the heavenly inheritance, as those who are here on earth, receive a more excellent name than that of children of Abraham, and are united in one happy family, of which he is the Head. And the great petition I am addressing to his Father and ours, is this: that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, out of those redundant stores of goodness in his gracious heart which can never be exhausted, to be mightily strengthened by the effectual operation of his Spirit, invigorating and increasing every grace, and carrying on his work with abundant success, in the inner man, that is, in all the various powers of your souls; so as thereby to fortify you under every trial, and animate you more and more to every good work: And as it is from Christ as our common Head, that all these blessings of the Holy Spirit are imparted, I am daily importunate with God, that Christ may dwell in your hearts, that he may take up his stated residence in your souls, by the continual exercise of a lively faith, by means of which a constant intercourse with him will be maintained, and an assurance given you of your interest in him: being also rooted and grounded in love, stedfastly fixed

HE. T.
VI.
Ephes.
III. 14.
15

^a Of whom the whole family in heaven and on earth is named.] As Christ is the person last mentioned, immediately before the words of whom it seems most reasonable to interpret this clause as referring to him; though others rather choose to understand it of the Father, who is indeed the principal subject of the foregoing sentence, nor would I insist upon the sense here given. Both Mr. Locke and Dodate explain it of God the Father, the Lord of the whole family, including all believers, who are jointly with Christ, who is already in heaven, the sons of God; in confirmation of which sense Mr. Puffendorf observes, that we are said to be κατα Θεον and δυνατα Χριστου; and it is certain Christians are said to belong to the family of God (chap. ii. 19)—Mr. Boyse, also goes into the same interpretations (in his Four last Things, p. 588,) and argues from hence, that departed saints are in heaven before the resurrection, or otherwise according to this distribution, as they are not on earth, they would not belong to God's family. But heaven may here be taken in a great latitude for all the regions of happiness in the invisible world, though the place in which separate spirits dwell should be different from that which they are to inhabit with Christ after the resurrection.—The Jewish writers call heaven the upper, and earth the lower family of God.

b The

SECT.
vi.Ephes.
III. 17.

fixed and settled, not only in the knowledge of his love to you, but in the exercise of a fervent love to him and to each other, which will so greatly tend both to nourish and establish the soul. That, under the influence of these united principles of faith and love, ye may be enabled with all saints in every place, to whom whether known or unknown, I wish this as the most invaluable blessing, to apprehend with great clearness what [is] the breadth, and length, and depth, and height^b of the great mystery of redeeming love, and to survey with a becoming astonishment, and with some suitable conceptions, the vast dimensions of that glorious plan; that in some measure you may see how wide it extends, even to all nations and ages; how far it reaches, even from everlasting to everlasting; from what an abyss of misery it delivers us, and to what a summit of felicity and glory it exalts us.

19 This is my earnest and importunate prayer for you, and for all the rest of my Christian brethren; that ye may thus be enabled with greater admiration to contemplate, and more abundantly to know the love of Christ, which, after all we can say or think of it, surpasses by infinite degrees the most advanced knowledge^c, even of the angels themselves, and how much more of mortal men in this imperfect state: but I wish you more enlarged apprehensions of it, that so ye may be filled with all the fulness of God^d, that

18 May be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height;

19 And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God.

^b The breadth, and length, and depth, and height.] It has often and very justly been observed, that this text is wonderfully emphatical. Bodies are well known to have only three dimensions, length, and breadth, and thickness; but the apostle Paul divides this last into its depth downwards, and its height upwards, measuring from the middle point: and so makes use of it to express the depth of misery from which the love of Christ delivers us, as well as the height of glory to which it exalts us. See Blackwall's Sac. Class. Vol. 1. p. 550.

^c To know the love of Christ which surpasses knowledge.] I can conceive no imaginable reason, with Mr. Locke, to confine the interpretation of this text merely to the love of Christ in calling the Gentiles. Well may we recollect on this occasion all that love which Christ has displayed in redeeming his church out of every nation and kingdom under heaven, Gentiles as well as Jews, from final misery, and exalting it to eternal glory. And this is so remarkable and admirable, that the most extensive explication of this text must certainly be the most proper.—Nor can the phrase of its surpassing knowledge merely signify its exceeding the Jewish dispensation (which is seldom, if ever, called knowledge,) but its exceeding our most elevated conceptions. The catachresis here used greatly enhances the beauty of the expression on this explication, whereas otherwise it must appear very dry and jejune.

^d That ye may be filled with all the fulness of God.] It is rightly observed by the learned and pious Professor, Franchius (Manud. ad. Sac. Script. legend., p. 191.) that there is in these two verses an allusion to the temple; expressing his wish that the foundation might be so extensively and deeply laid, that a superstructure may be raised extending itself to such a magnificent that your expanded hearts, being dilated more and more, may be rendered capable of admitting larger degrees than ever of Divine love, and more ample in-dwellings of Divine consolation; till at length ye arrive at that happy state in which ye shall attain to a full perfection in the knowledge and enjoyment of God, where that which is perfect shall come, and ye shall know even as also ye are known.

SECT.
VI.
Ephes.
III. 19.

20 Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us,

With these prayers am I softening the arrows 20 of my own imprisonment, and endeavouring to do what I can towards supplying to you and other Christians the deficiency of those public services which my present confinement forbids: and I doubt not but these humble petitions will come up in remembrance before God. Methinks I see them even now descending in blessings on my head and on yours, from the adorable Source of all good; and therefore I cannot forbear adding, To him that is able to do all things for us, not only to the utmost extent of our petitions, but abundantly exceeding all that we [can] ask or conceive, according to the power which is already so illustriously displayed, and worketh so efficaciously in us; To him [be] 21 glory in the whole church both of Jews and Gentiles, the happy society which he hath so wonderfully redeemed, and so bountifully enriched by Christ Jesus its glorious head, through whom all his blessings descend to us, and our praises ascend to him: and may they ascend throughout all the most distant ages and periods, while earth with its successive generations continues; and may they resound from all his redeemed in the mansions of glory, far beyond the limits of time, even for ever and ever, Amen. Let your hearts with mine consent to it; and in that consent anticipate something of that pleasure, with which we hope for ever to render these praises.

21 Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

IMPROVE-

cent length, and breadth, and height, as to be fitted to receive and lodge the sacred Guest, that he might dwell as it were uncrowded in their hearts. And in this view it will indeed appear a noble train of thought.

[Throughout all generations for ever and ever.] This is one of St. Paul's self-invented and most expressive phrases; and was a happy way of saying for ever and ever, which a learned critic justly decries any term whatsoever fully to express. (See Bleekwell's Ser. Class. Vol. I. p. 82.)—Throughout all the successions of an endless eternity may come something near it; but even this, emphatical as it may seem, falls vastly short of the sublimity and spirit of the original.

IMPROVEMENT.

SECT.
vi.

Let our eyes be frequently directed to the God and father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our knees be frequently bowed before him, invoking him under this amiable and delightful character as the great Father of that one family which he hath been pleased in infinite mercy to form to himself; a family consisting not only of those who were originally the inhabitants of heaven, who were born in his house, and have never offended him, but of many who have been, and many who are the inhabitants of earth, once the children of the curse, and the heirs of death and destruction.

15 Let us all remember it is now the family of Christ, our great elder Brother, who, though the Lord of heaven, disdains not to own that humble relation while the angels are adoring him as standing at the head of the society, and esteem it their honour to be related to him. Let us be more affected with the grace extended to us, and consider our relation to him as a bond of union among ourselves. While we are of this family, let not the different garbs we wear, or the different apartments in which we are lodged, alienate our affections from each other; but let us often be thinking of that blessed day when the whole family shall meet above, and let us in the mean time endeavour to behave as worthy members of it, and have its common interests at heart.

And from that eminently faithful and honourable branch of the family, the blessed apostle, whose words we have been reading, let us learn what to wish for ourselves and our brethren: even that God, according to the riches of his grace, would strengthen us with might by his spirit in the inner man; that we may attain great degrees of vigour and confirmation in religion, by the vital and powerful operations of the Holy Spirit of God upon our hearts; that we may be strong to discharge every duty, to resist temptations, or to conquer our enemies, to assist our brethren, and to glorify our Father and our Saviour. Let us earnestly desire, that Christ may not only now and then visit our hearts, but by the habitual and lively exercises of faith may even dwell in them; that we may thus be continually conversant with him as our most honoured and beloved Guest; and that love may take deep root in our hearts, and be solidly grounded there. Let us earnestly pray that, under Divine illuminations, we may be enabled to form more exalted and suitable conceptions than we have ever yet attained of the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, of this unfathomable, this inconceivable love of Christ, which surpasses the perfect perfect knowledge even of saints in glory. And O that by these contemplations we may find ourselves daily filled with all the fullness of God, so that our hearts may even overflow with the abundant communication of his gifts and graces!

What shall we say in return for the knowledge he hath already given us, for the love which he hath already wrought in our hearts, if we are so happy as to know the grace of God in truth? What! but that believing his power to out-do all it hath already wrought for us, yea to do for us exceeding abundantly above all we can ask or think, we will still confide in him and call upon him; and will humbly endeavour to bear our part with the whole church, in ascribing to our Redeemer, our Sanctifier, and our Father, glory throughout all ages, and even world without end. Amen.

SECT.
VII.

SECT. VII.

From the consideration of his own sufferings, as well as for the many important respects in which all true Christians are united, the Apostle pathetically exhorts them to mutual love, and to steadiness in religion, by representing to them the glorious foundation which Christ as the great Head of the church hath laid for it. Eph. IV. 1—16.

EPHES. IV. 1.
I THEREFORE the prisoner of the Lord, beseech

EPHESIANS IV. 1.

I HAVE mentioned my bonds but a little while ago, and I shall mention them now again; for nothing can tend so much to soften them as to find them the occasion of honour to Christ, and good to his church; and nothing surely can more powerfully move you to regard the exhortations I would offer to you: I therefore call upon you to consider me while you read this, as in confinement, nor for any crime that hath deserved such treatment, but as the prisoner of the Lord Jesus Christ^a, in bonds of my fidelity to

SECT.
vii.

Ephes.
IV. 1.

^a The prisoner of the Lord.] Some have observed of this epistle, and of the others which were written by the apostle Paul in his imprisonment (namely, those to the Colossians and Philippians, as well as that to Philemon, and the second to Timothy), that they are more especially remarkable for their excellence, and discover a peculiar savour of the things of God: by which it may be seen, that while his sufferings did abound, his consolations also did abound much more. It is however manifest that this epistle, as it sets forth, in the preceding part of it, the gracious design of God in the gospel dispensation, and represents the benefits and privileges that belong to all the faithful in Christ Jesus, as well to Gentiles as to Jews, is cast into a strain of thanksgivings and prayers, and written (as it were) all in a rapture, in a sublime and elevated style, as flowing from a man transported with the consideration of the unsearchable wisdom and goodness of God in the work of redemption, and of the amazing

SECT.
vii.Ephes.
IV. 1.

to that gospel he hath committed to my charge. And I beseech you by the memory of my chains, that ye make it your great care and daily labour, to walk worthy of the high and holy calling wherewith ye are called: let there be nothing in your temper and conduct beneath the dignity to which you are raised, and the illustrious hopes which are set before you; but shew that the crown of glory is ever in your eye, and that

2 your hearts are duly impressed with it: And particularly as you have received the pardon of your sins, and are adopted into the family of God, let the remembrance of it engage you to behave with all humility and lowliness of heart, under a sense of your former guilt and misery, and your unworthiness of that mercy which God hath magnified towards you; and thus to carry it with meekness towards those who may have troubled you by their frowardness, tenderly passing over their infirmities and indiscretions, as sensible what great offences have been forgiven to yourselves. And should you meet with injuries from any of your brethren, as it is to be feared that even among professing Christians this will sometimes happen, do not think much to bear with them; but let me entreat you, that ye endure them with long suffering and patience without seeking revenge, and forbear one another in such circumstances, in the unfeigned

3 exercise of mutual love^b: And not on this occasion only, but with respect to your whole carriage to each other, how different soever your sentiments and practices may be in matters of an indifferent nature, be still endeavouring, so far as in you lies, to keep the unity of the Spirit, that unity of heart and affection which becomes those who are regenerated by one Spirit acting on them all, and forming them into one body; joining them thus together in the bond of peace^c,
and

beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called,

2 With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love;

3 Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

amazing love displayed in Christ towards the Gentile world. And the remaining part of it is no less admirable for the engaging manner in which he improves what he had before delivered, urging the duties which became their character, with the greatest tenderness, in expressions full of love and endearment, adding the strongest arguments to enforce them, and making mention of his bonds to recommend the exhortations that he offered to them.

^b With long suffering, forbear one another in love.] As there is no copulative between meekness and long-suffering, it seems most natural to connect the latter with the following clause: and if the exhortation be thus rendered, it will prevent the solecism which would arise from connecting αγαπησονται with υπαγε; in the verse before, to which we should be led by our translation. See Blackwall's Sacr. Class. Vol. I. p. 98.

^c To keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.] See an excellent discourse on these words, in Mr. Baxter's Practical Works, Vol. IV. p. 628, 87 seq.

4 One

and sweetly engaging them, not only to the most pacific, but to the most affectionate conduct to each other.

1 Pet.
vii.
Ephes.
IV. 4.

4 There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling;

For this is indeed the case with regard to all that have truly and cordially embraced the gospel, and nothing can be stronger than the motives to this union, when it is considered, that with respect to the whole church [there is] only one body, of which ye all are members, and should as such have the same care for one another (1 Cor. xii. 25); and in this body there is one Spirit that enlivens, actuates, and fills it, under whose influence it should be your concern to act in such a way as to resemble him who is the Spirit of love and peace; and there is one inheritance that ye are waiting for, as ye are also called in one blessed hope of your calling, and should live therefore as inspired with the same joyful expectation of being all brought to the same blessed end, to one glorious abode in the heavenly world: There is also *one Lord*⁵

5 One Lord, one faith, one baptism, and Head of all, even Jesus Christ, who hath come down from heaven and died for our salvation; that he might incorporate us all into one society, that he might instruct us all in one faith, and might unite us all in one baptism^d, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost: And thus he introduces us all into the knowledge and favour of the one God and Father of all true believers, who in the infinite perfections of his essence [is] above all, governing all without exception as the supreme Ruler of universal nature; who animates and operates through all, by the diffusive influence of his vital presence; and who is particularly in you all, by that special residence which he holds in those that are the temples of his grace.

6 One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all.

Such are the great engagements we are under to the strictest and most affectionate union; and howsoever we may be distinguished from each other, by the variety of our gifts, or by the difference of our stations, these several distinctions ought to be regarded by us, not as a matter of emulation and contention, but rather as an additional obligation to love, when we consider the

7 But unto every one of us is given grace according d One baptism.] It is more trifling to object from hence against water baptism, since there can be no room to oppose that to the baptism of the spirit; and it is very plain that the apostle, while he declared that there was but one baptism, practised that of water.

e Grace

SECT.
vii.Ephes.
IV. 7.

the great source and design of all; for grace is given and dispensed in different degrees to every one of us in particular, not for the merit of one above another, but according to the measure of the free gift of Christ^e, in such a measure as seems best to him, the great Sovereign of the church, to bestow it; whose distributions we always know to be guided by consummate wisdom and goodness, so that we all have the highest reason entirely to acquiesce in them. For we receive whatever gifts we have from Christ, and they are all bestowed by him; wherefore the words of David may be considered as applicable to this^f, where he says (Psal. lxxviii. 18), "When he ascended on high, he led captivity captive^g, and gave gifts unto men:" for naturally may our devout meditations rise from that glorious pomp with which God went up from mount Sinai, when he had triumphed over the Egyptians, and poured down blessings on his people, to that illustrious ascension of our blessed Redeemer, according to the measure of the gift of Christ.

8 Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men.

c Grace is given to every one of us, &c.] That their differing in some respects, though united in so many, might not be urged as any plea for self-esteem, or neglect of others, who wanted such distinguishing advantages, the apostle properly insists upon it, that all is communicated to us by way of free gift and sovereign liberality.

f The words of David may be considered as applicable to this.] I cannot undertake to prove, that the passage here referred to is, strictly speaking, a prediction of Christ's ascension and of his shedding down the gifts and graces of the Spirit. The Psalmist celebrating a late victory, goes back in rapturous meditation to God's victory over the Egyptians, and the spoils with which he enriched the Israelites, ungrateful and rebellious as they had been, and by which he prepared for himself in the course of his providence a dwelling among them; for the tabernacle was built principally with those spoils. And the apostle beautifully accommodates the words to the triumph of an ascending Saviour, and to the royal donative of the Spirit; which he shed down on his church, into which many who had been once most rebellious were admitted, and whereby it was fitted to be his habitation. We render the clause quoted, Thou hast received gifts for men; but the Hebrew word signifies, Thou hast taken, and may either express taking from the enemy, or taking out of his own royal treasures.

g He led captivity captive.] This is a phrase that signifies the leading on a train of captives, but may with greater emphasis be applied to those who of conquerors and oppressors, are made captives; (compare Judg. v. 12.) And thus it may be properly understood of the triumph of Christ over sin, Satan, the world, and death, by whom such multitudes were conquered and enslaved.—Mr. Pierce indeed has taken great pains to prove that these words are to be interpreted of the good angels, as if the meaning were, "that Christ led in triumph the angels who voluntarily subjected themselves to him, after having been before his fellow-guardians in presiding over their countries, as he was God's Vicegerent in Israel." And to establish this, he largely pleads, that neither the devils, nor the souls of departed saints, ascended with Christ into heaven, and consequently that these words must refer to the train of attendant angels. But Christ might poetically be said to lead captivity captive, when he triumphed over those that had subdued his people, and acquired such a power over the infernal spirits, as a conqueror has over a captive that he drags at his chariot-wheels. In this view it may also be observed, that the Egyptians, over whom God is represented as triumphing in the passage quoted from the lxxviiith Psalm, though they might seem to be taken prisoners in the Red sea (Exod. xiv. 23—28), were not, in strictness of speech, led in triumphant procession, but immediately destroyed by the Divine vengeance.

SECT.
vii.Ephes.
IV. 8.

9 (Now that he ascended, what is it, but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth?)

10 He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.)

11 And he gave some, apostles; and some,

Redeemer, when he had vanquished our enemies on the cross, and returning to his Father, poured down his royal donatives like a triumphant conqueror^b upon his faithful subjects, yea gifts, in which those who had long been rebellious, and had but lately laid down their weapons, were to share. Now this [expression] that he ascended, what is it, or what does it imply, but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth; having come down from heaven and dwelt in this earth of ours, yea and submitted even to lie in the caverns of it for a while under the power of death? For to this low humiliation our thoughts may naturally be conducted, the subject being so familiar to our mind, and the phrase so capable of suggesting these ideas to us. And on the other hand it leads us to reflect, that he who descended to such forms of humble abasement is also the very same glorious and triumphant Person who ascended far above all heavens, beyond the regions of the air, into the heaven of heavens; going up, as the Psalmist elsewhere speaks, with a shout and with the sound of a trumpet (Psal. xlvii. 5), received with the acclamations of all the hierarchy of heaven, and seated on a throne of glory, that he might fill all things with his influence, and direct and over-rule all by his wisdom and power.

Accordingly he hath shed down a rich variety¹¹ of gifts and graces from his triumphal seat at the right-hand of the Father, to qualify and endow his servants for those various offices in the church which he hath wisely and graciously instituted for the advancement of his interest and kingdom: and thus, among the gifts which he bestowed to be employed for the advantage of his people in their respective situations, he gave some to be apostles, whose office should be personal, but should extend in its effects to the remotest generations,

^b His royal donatives like a triumphant conqueror.] Many have observed that here is an allusion to the custom of conquerors, who used to give largesses to their soldiers after a triumph; (see Limborch. Theolog. lib. iii. cap. 25, sect. ii.) And though the Roman instances of this custom are perhaps the most familiar to our minds, yet all who are acquainted with antiquity, know that it was not peculiar to them. Compare Judg. v. 28—30.

ⁱ Into the lower parts of the earth.] Bishop Pearson (on the Creed, p. 229) has shewn how very precariously this is urged as a proof of Christ's descent into hell; the phrase being such as other scriptures plainly lead us to refer, either to his incarnation (Psal. cxxix. 15), or his descent into the grave. Compare Psal. lxxiii. 9, and Matt. xii. 40.

SECT.
vii.Ephes.
IV. 11.

nerations, sending them forth to preach the gospel unto every creature as his special witnesses, and forming them, under the plenary and most abundant influences of his Spirit, to the fullest knowledge of that scheme they were to publish to the world (compare Mark xvi. 15, and 1 Cor. xij. 28); and some he gave to be prophets, who were to explain the mysteries of faith, and to foretell future events, by virtue of the extraordinary revelations made to them; and some to be evangelists, who were to travel from place to place, and to fulfil such particular commissions as the apostles should give, in settling and establishing the churches they had planted (Acts xix. 22), being furnished with such miraculous powers as were necessary for that purpose: and, besides these extraordinary officers, he also gave some to be settled pastors and teachers^k, who were to be of standing use, to preside in the several congregations of the saints, taking the stated oversight of them in the Lord, and to instruct them both in public and private, as their respective circumstances should require; nor were these left destitute of proper assistances, though not distinguished by such eminent endowments as the 12 former. Now the intent of all these institutions, offices, and gifts, was for the perfecting of the saints, or finishing the character of holy men who should be destined to the work of the ministry^l, in subordination to the great view that is still to be maintained some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers;

12 For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry,

^k And some pastors and teachers.] I shall not take upon me to determine whether two different offices are intended here, of which the former were intrusted with the care and oversight of particular churches, whereas the latter only were employed in instructing the people by way of exhortation, without being called to the pastoral office, though, if this were the case, it seems most probable they would have been expressed distinctly as the others are; and some pastor; and some teachers.—But I cannot forbear saying, it has been justly observed, that if Diocesan bishops were the very remedy by which the Holy Ghost designed to prevent, or to heal those schisms of which the Ephesian church was in such apparent danger (Acts xx. 29, 30), it is very strange there should be no mention of them amidst all these exhortations which are here enumerated, though some of them inferior to the supposed bishop in dignity.

^l For the perfecting of the saints to the work of the ministry.] Bishop Burnet understands the former clause, of their being initiated into the church by the holy ordinance of baptism. (See Burnet on the Articles, p. 252.) Others would render $\alpha\sigma\sigma\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ $\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$ $\alpha\lambda\lambda\eta\lambda\epsilon\tau\epsilon\rho\alpha\iota\varsigma$, for the compacting, &c. as if it signified their being brought together and united into one society, whether they had been formerly Jews or Gentiles. But I rather think, with Dr. Marshal, the clauses are to be connected, and may more properly be rendered (as in Blackwall's Sacred Classics, Vol. II. p. 174), For the fitting of holy men to the work of the ministry; which strongly implies by the way, that any other man should be employed in it. And thus there can be no necessity to suppose a transposition of the words with Grotius, as if the meaning were, For the work of the ministry, which is to perfect the saints, and to edify the body of Christ.

SECT.
VII
Ephes.
IV. 13.

istry, for the edifying of the body of Christ :

13 Till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ :

14 That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive ;

15 But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ :

maintained, of building up and edifying of the church, which is the body of Christ, that its numbers may be increased, and each member advanced in knowledge and in grace : Till we all arrive at the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge or acknowledgment of the Son of God, in such entire harmony and agreement as will cement us together in still clearer bonds : and getting above that infant-state in which so many of us now are, we shall grow up to the maturity of a perfect man, even to the full measure of the spiritual stature, so as to reach what may be called the standard of the fulness of Christ, attaining to those eminent degrees of grace and goodness which will fit us to become his stated everlasting residence, and to be filled with the most glorious tokens of his presence and favour.

In the mean time, it is the design of God by 14 these means to give us greater firmness and establishment in religion, that we may be no longer like little children, tossed to and fro as waves of the sea, and borne about as a vapour in the air, with every wind of doctrine, and every vain puff of breath, uttered with violence and eagerness, and as it were mechanically managed by the cheating sleight of designing and interested men, [and] by their various subtlety in every method of deceit, which some insinuating teachers will not fail to exercise upon you, though I hope you will be able to discern and defeat it : But 15 maintaining the truth in love, or stedfastly adhering to the doctrines of the gospel with that candid and charitable temper which it inculcates, and without which our clearest and most extensive

m To the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.] The sense given in the paraphrase is so obvious, and suits and illustrates the peculiarity of the phrase so well, that I cannot but wonder at the impertinence of those who (as Dr. Lightfoot tells us in his Remains, p. 289,) have inferred from this text that the saivts should be raised at the last day exactly of the age of Christ when he died, and that their stature should be just the same with his ; referring to the ambiguity of the word σταυρα, as signifying both stature and age.

n By the cheating sleight of men, [and] by their subtlety in every method of deceit.] The word σταυρα, as many critics have observed properly signifies the artifice of those infamous gamesters who know how to cog the dice. Some would render the last words, αυτωνεργια πασης της μαριτυριαν της σωτηριαν, by craft and doubling according to the subtil method of imposture ; but I think the rendering above is more literal, and am in part obliged to Mr. Blackwall for the version and paraphrase here. See his Sacred Classics, Vol. I. p. 305.

o Maintaining the truth in love.] It is to be hoped that no reader, and especially none of the sacred order, will fail to observe what the apostle here so plainly asserts, namely, that it was the design of the ministry to preserve peace and charity as well as orthodoxy, regularity, and discipline, in the church.

SECT.
vii.

Ephes.
IV. 15.

extensive knowledge will do us but little good, may we grow up in all things, from an infant to an adult state, into him who is the Head [even] the Lord Jesus Christ, the great Centre of union, as well as the original Source of life and motion:

16 And by the constant exercise of mutual affection may we be more and more united to him, from whom, as from the head, conveying influence and nourishment to every member, the whole body of Christians, being harmoniously joined, and strongly cemented together in the closest union, by the supply of every joint through proper channels of communication (as by the veins and arteries, the nerves and sinews, in the natural body,) according to the energy which is proportionable to the necessity of every part, and properly adapted to its respective place and function, makes an uniform and happy increase of the whole body, by the regular growth and nourishment of each member, to the edifying of itself in love; or, in plainer terms, the whole church, by the exercise of faith in Christ as its glorious Head, is edified and supported, and each part of it grows in mutual love, in proportion to the degree of its regard to him.

16 From whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

IMPROVEMENT.

- Ver. 1 If Divine grace have taught us to know the hope of our calling, it will surely add great weight to these pathetic exhortations of this faithful servant and prisoner of Jesus Christ, to walk worthy of it; to walk as it becomes those to do who have been favoured with a call from God, who have received the honour of a call to the blessings of his gospel, to the privileges and hopes of his children. It will teach us that humility, meekness, and long-suffering, of which our Divine Saviour was so glorious an example, which
- 2 will engage us to the exercise of mutual forbearance, and which so well suits those whom he hath brought into so happy a state.
- 3 May we all experimentally know the sweetness which attends a constant care to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace; that we may labour earnestly to maintain it, and with the utmost diligence may guard against those things which might lead us in any degree to violate it!
- 4 To engage us to this, let those arguments which the apostle suggests be familiar to our mind. Do we not all indeed belong to one body, however called by different denominations? Have we not all, so far as we are truly Christians, received one spirit? Is there there not one hope of our common calling, even that of dwelling together in one and the same blissful world, with God, and with each other? Have we not one Lord, even Jesus Christ, to whom we all equally profess subjection? who hath taught us one faith, who hath insinuated one baptism, and who hath introduced and con-5 crated us to one God and Father of all? And what are the considerations which should prevail so far as to divide us, when compared with such bonds of union as these?

Let us all therefore, in the name of this God, who is over all, who operates through all, and in us all, in the name of this one Saviour, and one Spirit, (awful and endearing names, into which we were all baptized,) charge it upon our own souls, that we not only do nothing by a factious and uncharitable temper to divide his church, but that we study what we can do to heal its breaches, 16 and to promote its growth and edification. And let us pray, that God would guide and succeed our endeavours for that purpose, and preserve our hearts in such a situation and temper, that we may stand continually willing to give up every temporal interest that may interfere with such a design; yea, and even to make our own blood if such were the will of God, the cement of those wounds, at which a body so intimately united to Christ has so long been bleeding almost to death.

Were we actually to give such a proof of our regard to it, we could but very imperfectly repay the condescension and love of that Saviour, who for us descended to these low regions of the earth, 9 and dwelt for a while among the dead; and then triumphantly rising, and ascending on high, led those enemies that had before 8 held us in captivity themselves captive, as at his chariot-wheels; and having received gifts for men, scattered them down with such 10 royal munificence, that he might fill all things, and fit his ministers for the offices to which he had destined them.

These his ministers we are taught by this passage to regard as the special gift of his love to the church, and as such let us adore him for them; not only for apostles, prophets, and evangelists, but 11 also for pastors and teachers. And let us earnestly pray, that 12 through the continued influences of that Spirit which he hath sent down from on high, holy men, may in every succeeding age be so perfectly and completely fitted for the work of the ministry, that the body of Christ may be edified; that by this means we may 13 all come to that union, to that strength, to that full maturity, to which by calling us into the fellowship of that gospel he intended to raise us.

In the mean time, while we are advancing towards it, may 14 we rise above that childish weakness, which would make us the SECT. VII. sport of every wind of doctrine, and a prey to every artifice of designing men. Let us ever maintain a due regard to the united interests of truth and love, that our union with Christ may be secured, and our growth in him more happily and abundantly advanced.

SECT. VIII.

The Apostle urges the converted Ephesians to distinguish themselves from the Gentiles, by the holiness of their behaviour, as they were so much distinguished from them by knowledge and grace; and particularly presses upon them the duties of veracity, meekness, and purity. Eph. IV. 17—30.

EPHESIANS IV. 17.

SECT. VIII. THIS I say therefore, for your further instruction how to walk worthy of your calling, and most earnestly and affectionately testify it to you in the name of the Lord, that now you are so happily brought into the Christian church, and made partakers of such privileges and advantages ye no longer walk, as, alas, ye have so long done, and as the rest of the Gentiles, who remain unconverted still continue to walk, in such a course as plainly shews the vanity of their mind, amused with the poor empty trifles of this world, and enslaved to low and mean pursuits, utterly unworthy of their rational nature: Having the understanding darkened with respect to spiritual things, by the influence of the prince of darkness upon them, and being alienated in affection as well as in their practice from the life of God^a, from that noble principle of true religion which is indeed the Divine life in the soul, forming it to the service and imitation of him by whom it is implanted: to which they are wholly strangers, and have indeed an utter aversion to it, by reason of the ignorance of truth and goodness that is in them; yea, because of the absolute blindness and obstinacy of their heart^b, the evil passions of EPHES. IV. 17.

THIS I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind,

18 Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart;

^a The life of God.] I apprehend this does not merely signify a life prescribed by God to his people, as Mr. Locke understands it, but that it intimates a life consisting in a righteous and holy imitation of his perfections, and a constant development to his service; and perhaps it may also intimate its being originally derived from him. Compare ver. 24.

^b Because of the blindness of their heart.] This is explained by Chrysostom, Dr. Whitby, and other commentators of note, both

19 Who being past feeling, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness;

20 But ye have not so learned Christ;

21 If so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him of which turn it into a kind of chaos, which will not admit the rays of Divine truth shining around them in the works of creation and providence, by the observation of which they would be formed to much better notions, even on natural principles, if they would but do justice to themselves. But alas, what can be expected from wretches who have debauched their consciences with such a course of profligate immoralities, as to have lost all sense of shame? who being grown quite callous (as it were) and insensible to all goodness, have abandoned themselves to every kind of enormity, and especially to the grossest lewdness, so as to work all uncleanness with insatiable greediness; transgressing the bounds, not only of virtue and decency, but even of natural appetite, and shamefully soliciting their own lusts, under a sad incapacity of nobler and more rational enjoyments.

Into such profligate and brutal sensualities as these, the heathen world are sunk; but ye have not so learned Christ, as if his religion were a mere system of speculation, that might leave you practically attached to such abominable vices. Its precepts inculcate upon you lessons of the strictest purity, and I am persuaded that you feel the genuine tendency and design of it in your hearts, powerfully inclining you to act upon them; seeing ye have in effect heard him, even the Lord Jesus Christ himself, speaking to you in his word by us his authorised ambassadors, both ancient and modern, as referring to their Gentile state: but though there is no doubt but it refers to that, yet I see no reason to limit such a description only to the dark and ignorant heathens: it is, as Dr. Owen observes, too just a representation of the natural blindness of men in their unregenerate state.—How the words νεφ, εἰσωνια, and καχολα, which all come into this description, are to be distinguished, is matter of much debate. It is certain they are used in different senses, not only by different writers, but by the same writers in different places: but on the whole, it seems most probable to me, that νεφ here signifies the mind in general, comprehending εἰσωνια, the intellectual faculties, and καχολα, the affections and passions; by the irregularity and obstinacy of which the understanding is often obscured, and led into the falsest and most irrational judgments. See below, note h on ver. 25.

c Ye have not so learned Christ.] This may perhaps intimate that there was a manner of learning Christ which might seem more consistent with such irregularities, and may glance on some teachers who called themselves Christians, and yet took very little care to inculcate practical religion. Many passages in the apostle's writings shew this to have been actually the case, though it seems these teachers had not much footing at Ephesus. Compare 2 Tim. iv. 8.

d Seeing ye have heard him.] That the particle αυ may be thus rendered, has been observed before in note b on Eph. iii. 2, p. 347. So that no conclusion can be drawn from hence that this epistle was not written to the Ephesians, with whom he had long been conversant, but to some other church that he had never seen, and with whose circumstances he was not so well acquainted.

SECT.
viii.

Ephes.
IV. 21.

dors, and have been instructed in him and his religion as the uncorrupted truth is in Jesus, and not in that imperfect and adulterated form in which some presume to deliver what they call his gospel.

him as the truth is in Jesus :

- 22 Give me leave therefore to urge and entreat you, according to the many good instructions you have already received, to put off, and entirely to lay aside, with respect to the former conversation^c, or to those sinful habits and practices which were the scandal and dishonour of your Gentile days, the old man^f, which is depraved and corrupt in every part of it, and whose actions are directed, not by the rules of reason, and a regard to the will of God, but according to those deceitful lusts^g which generally prevail in the world, and once prevailed in you likewise and sunk you into so degenerate a state ; lusts, which could lead you to no rational and solid happiness, but deluded you by vain appearances and fallacious hopes, which always ended in
- 23 your disappointment and shame : And labour more and more, by cultivating every motion of the Good Spirit of God upon your hearts, to be renewed in the Spirit of your mind^h, that your rational powers, being duly directed by his illumination, may maintain a proper command over all the inferior faculties of your nature, and unite them in the prosecution of that great end which you ought continually to be proposing to
- 24 yourselves. And thus, let it be your care to put

22 That ye put off concerning the former conversation, the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts ;

23 And be renewed in the spirit of your mind ;

24 And that ye put on

c To put off, &c.] As the verbs ἀποσθῆναι, ἀναρῆσθαι, and ἐκδύσασθαι, are all in the infinitive mood, it shews how they are connected with the preceding words, and that the sense of them is, “Ye have been instructed—to put off the old man, and to be renewed in the spirit of your mind, and to put on the new man :” accordingly I have preserved this connection in the version, but, to avoid such an extensive length in the paraphrase as would have made it both disagreeable and obscure, I have here, as in many other places, broken one sentence into several.

f The old man.] As particular dispositions of mind are sometimes expressed by particular garments when a man appears in them, so the whole of a good or bad character may be represented by a complete dress yea by the body in which he appears : and vice, alas, being too natural, and getting the first possession, whereas goodness, if it ever succeeds at all, is adventitious, the former may well be called the old, and the latter the new man.

g According to the deceitful lusts.] Some have explained this of the lusts into which they were led by the artifices of the heathen priests, who represented them as not disagreeable to their established deities ; or by the sophistry of their philosophers, who found out so many fallacious excuses for the grossest vices. But the sense given in the paraphrase seems most certain, and of the most general importance ; considerations which I have always endeavoured to keep in view in the whole of this work.

h In the spirit of your mind.] The word νῦς seems here to be put for the whole soul, and πνεῦμα, the spirit, for its intellectual and leading faculty, on which the Spirit of God might chiefly operate, yet not exclusive of some influence on the inferior powers. See 1 Thess. v. 23, and compare note d above on ver. 18.

on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.

put on the new man, to clothe yourselves with every habit of virtue and goodness, with every pious principle and disposition, belonging to the character of such as are renewed; even that new man, which is created by Divine grace, according [to the image of] God, the great standard of perfection, and is so formed as to resemble him in universal righteousness and true evangelical holinessⁱ, which, so far as it prevails in the human soul, is indeed the likeness of God, drawn upon it in the most amiable linements. (Compare Col. iii. 10.)

SECT.
vii.
Ephes.
IV. 24.

25 Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour; for we are members one of another.

Wherefore, on these great principles, beware²⁵ of every vice to which you have been formerly addicted; and, in particular, putting away every lie^k, whatever any of the heathens may have taught or practised, speak every one of you with the greatest simplicity and strictness, the exact truth to his neighbour; for we are all (as I observed above), by virtue of our union to Christ our common Head, members one of another, and therefore it would be very indecent and improper, for the sake of any little separate advantage of our own, to injure or deceive a fellow-member, which indeed the common bond of humanity might lead us to detest, if the peculiar engagements of our holy profession were not considered.

26 Be ye angry, and sin not: let not the sun go down upon your wrath:

If any occasion arises which obliges you to be²⁶ angry, which indeed may, and often will be the case, let not your anger discompose your spirits, and sin not in the excessive indulgence of that turbulent and dangerous passion^l; but see that there be a justifiable cause for the resentment ⁱ True holiness.] As $\sigma\iota\tau\eta\varsigma\ \tau\eta\varsigma\ \alpha\lambda\eta\theta\iota\alpha\varsigma$ stands in a beautiful opposition to $\pi\iota\delta\upsilon\mu\iota\alpha\iota\ \tau\eta\varsigma\ \alpha\pi\alpha\tau\eta\varsigma$, deceitful lusts, I have chosen therefore, with our translation, to render it in a similar manner. But Archbishop Tillotson would translate this clause the holiness of truth (Vol. II. p. 349), and Dr. Owen also prefers this rendering, by truth understanding the gospel, and so explaining it of evangelical holiness in opposition to such mere moral virtues as might be found in an heathen. See Dr. Owen on the Spirit, p. 325.

^k Every lie.] This $\tau\epsilon\ \psi\epsilon\upsilon\delta\epsilon\iota\alpha$ seems to express, and lying is so opposite to that sincerity which becomes a Christian, that what is said against it may be best taken in the most extensive sense.—Dr. Whitby has well shewn, in his note on this passage, that several of the best of the heathen moralists thought lying might in many cases be justified; and I wish that none but heathens had ever taught so loose and dangerous a doctrine.

^l Be ye angry, and sin not.] It is evident that this is not a command to be angry, but a concession only, with a caution to beware of sinning in it. (Compare Isa. viii. 9, 10; and Nah. iii. 14, 15.) It must however imply the thing to be possible; for to imagine, as a celebrated divine does, that it is as if it were said, Do if you can be angry without sin, seems beneath the dignity which the apostle always preserves in his writings.

SECT.
viii.
Ephes.
IV. 26.

ment you express, and that your anger do not then rise beyond its proper degree, nor err in its continuance : and in this view, let not the sun, however, go down upon your wrath^m, lest it grow into inveterate malice and habitual spleen :

27 Neither in this respect give place to the devil, who labours as much as possible to possess and inflame the spirits of men with mutual enmity, and to induce them to give ear to slanderous reports and accusations, that he may make their characters deformed, and their state miserable like his own.

28 Let him that, while he was in his heathen condition of ignorance and vice, stole from others what was their just property, or in any other method defrauded his neighbour, steal and defraud *no more*ⁿ, knowing that God is the avenger of all such injuries : (compare I Thess. iv. 6.) But rather let him labour diligently, working with [his] hands in some honest employment that which is good and creditable ; that he may not only support himself, without trespassing upon society, or being in any respect a burden to it, but that he may have [something] to impart to the necessitous, and may be capable of sparing somewhat out of what he gains by industry in his calling, for the relief of such as stand in need of it.

29 Let me exhort you also to take heed that no corrupt discourse, no putrid, filthy, and offensive speech, proceed out of your mouth^o, to debauch the 27 Neither give place to the devil.

28 Let him that stole, steal no more : but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth.

29 Let no corrupt communication proceed

^m Let not the sun go down upon your wrath.] Many have observed that this was agreeable to the Pythagorean practice, who used always, if the members of their particular society had any difference with each other, to give tokens of reconciliation before the sun went down. (See Dr. Scott's Christian Life, Vol. I. p. 326 ; and Dr. Whitby's note on this place.) Were family prayer always practised in the evening, it might have an happy tendency to promote the observation of this excellent precept, intended (no doubt) to prevent persons going to sleep in anger, or being kept wakeful by such thoughts as continued quarrels, especially between near relations and friends, will be apt to occasion. Gloomy meditations in the silence of the night, inflame the sense of the supposed injury, and cherish fiercer resentments, till perhaps at length purposes and counsels of revenge succeed. See Limborch's Theolog. lib. v. cap. 45. sect. vi.

^d Let him that stole steal no more.] Stealing, as Dr. Whitby has well shewn here, was a very common vice among the heathens ; but, how justifiable so ever the Lacedæmonian law relating to it might be in a political view, of which see Rollin's Man. de Etudier, Vol. III. 241, § seg. I fear it tended to okate the horror persons should have of invading, in any respect, the property of each other, and to corrupt the minds of young people, by forming them to a subtle and knavish turn, which, however it might fit them for plundering their enemies in war to which the genius of that commonwealth was too much directed, would certainly tend to make them bad children, servants, and citizens.

^o Let no corrupt discourse, &c.] This undoubtedly refers to obscene talk, which is with great propriety called corrupt or putrid

ceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers.

50 And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.

the minds of those that are about you, and to irritate those irregular dispositions of the heart, which it may, in many instances, even without such incentives, be so difficult to restrain: but embrace every opportunity that may conveniently be taken of introducing any thing that is good^p, and which may tend to useful edification, that you may thus by your discourse promote the spiritual benefit of those that you converse with, and it may rather serve to minister grace to the hearers, than to check any good, or encourage any evil and irregular thoughts.

And on the whole, be very careful that you do not; by any such immoralities as I have cautioned you against, grieve that Holy Spirit of God, and provoke him to withdraw his gracious and comfortable influences from your minds; seeing it is this Spirit by whom ye are sealed unto the day of redemption^q. His operations are the mark of God set upon you, by which you may be known to be his property, and may be assured that he will remember you as such, in that great day when he makes up his jewels; even then, when he completely redeems and delivers all his people: till which blessed time you are preserved in your adherence to religion by this Spirit, in the midst of all the dangers and difficulties which surround you; and consequently are obliged always to conduct yourselves towards him with the greatest respect and veneration.

IMPROVE-

putrid, as the word σαπίζω signifies, in direct opposition to that which is seasoned with salt, and is recommended (Col. iv. 6), as tending to preserve from such putrefaction and rottenness. It is strange that such indecencies as are here censured should ever prevail, especially among persons whose rank in life requires a politeness of behaviour which would engage them to guard against this, much more than against any thing offensive in their person or dress.

[Any thing that is good.] This seems the proper import of τις αγαθη, which is literally, if any thing be good; intimating that if any useful thought arise, on an occasion may be fitly taken to graft an edifying remark on any thing that passes in conversation, there should be a readiness to improve it; that so every one may furnish out his quota, without unprofitable and disagreeable chisms of silence, or the necessity of having recourse to any thing that is ill to prevent them; which, alas, is too often the case.

[By whom ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.] This term of sealing seems to be a metaphor taken from merchants putting some seal or mark upon their commodities, by which they may be known to be there. One of the ancients somewhere says, "Delectata res est Spiritus Dei: 29 There is, if we may so express it, a certain debency in the Spirit of God, which should engage those who desire his influence, solicitously to guard against every approach to what might be grossly offensive to him — The day of redemption in this connection must signify the resurrection (compare Rom. vii. 23); which is here mentioned with the greatest propriety as the time when they, who in consequence of this sealing shall be finally owned as the property of God, shall be gathered into his treasury. — Τις αγαθη τις αγαθη is so emphatical, that it seemed best to render it, that Holy Spirit of God.

SECT.
VIII.
Ephes.
IV. 29.

IMPROVEMENT.

SECT.
viii.

14, 18 THAT we are all naturally so much alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in us, that our minds are naturally so dark, and our hearts so hard, is indeed matter of the justest lamentation. But since we have learned Christ, since the light of his blessed gospel hath been imparted to us, and we are no longer numbered among the heathen nations, let us not abandon ourselves to those irregularities of temper and life, for which even their ignorance will not be a sufficient excuse; since even natural light might teach them to condemn and to abhor such courses.

22 There are deceitful lusts, according to which the old man is corrupt: let us be always on our guard against them, and labour after such a renovation as becomes our profession; and, in order to its being effectual, let us be earnestly solicitous to obtain it in the spirit of our mind; that we may shew its influence upon us, not merely by ceasing to do evil, but by learning to the utmost of our power to do good. Thus let it be our care to put on the new man, to be partakers of a new and holy nature, and to be brought to the whole of that temper in all its branches, by which we shall resemble the blessed God, the bright Original of universal righteousness and holiness, and the great Model of perfection.

25 In consequence of this, remembering our relation to each other, let us speak the truth from our hearts; and upon all occasions let us treat others with the same candor and integrity with which we would ourselves desire to be treated.—If anger rise, let it be on just occasions, and in due proportion; and let us take care that it rest not in our bosoms, lest by indulging it we give place to the devil, and become like that malignant spirit.—Let us be upright in our dealings, and conscientiously avoiding the iniquitous practice of defrauding others, let generous and charitable sentiments always possess us; nor let those whose circumstances in life may constrain them to maintain themselves by their own labour, think they may violate the strictest rules of honesty, or are dispensed with from all obligations to relieve others, more necessitous than themselves.—In short, whenever we engage in conversation, let us avoid every thing that may have the remotest tendency to corrupt discourse; and let us study what may improve and edify the minds of our hearers; embracing every opportunity of suggesting any thing that is good, and that may tend to minister grace, or to promote the more abundant exercise of it in the minds of those in whom it is already implanted.

Thus

Thus will the Spirit of God, that sacred Agent by whom we are sealed to the day of redemption, be delighted, instead of being grieved, as he so frequently is by the vain and foolish discourses of those who would be thought his temples, of those who indeed are so. For his influences let us look, to dispose us to every good word and work, and seasonably to remind us of these plain but weighty admonitions, which, alas, are so little remembered by the generality of Christians, that one would imagine they had scarce eve read them.

SECT.
VIII.
Ver.
30

SECT. IX.

The Apostle pursues the practical exhortations given in the two former sections, and especially insists on those to mutual love, which he enforces by the consideration of the Divine compassion, as displayed in the gospel, and strongly cautions them against the gross impurities of the heathen. Eph. IV. 31, to the end. V. 1—14.

Ephes. IV. 31.

EPHESIANS IV. 31.

LET all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil-speaking, be put away from you, with all malice :

AS I have been exhorting you to take heed that you do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God, I cannot but particularly caution you against those malignant passions which do most directly oppose his benign influences. And therefore let all bitterness, and indignation, and wrath, and clamour, and evil speaking, and all contentious and ungovernable passions, be put away from you, and removed to the greatest distance, together with all malice^a ; do not passionately resent every trifle, nor bitterly inveigh with all the licentiousness and keenness of satire against those who have greatly injured you ; nor let your anger be noisy in its language, venting itself in clamorous reproaches and abusive railings, or be deeply treasured up in the mind to wait for opportunities of revenge ; for all these things are most contrary to the nature of God, the genius of Christianity, and the character of its

SECT.
IX.
Ephes.
IV. 31.

^a Let all bitterness, and indignation, and wrath, &c.] If each different word that is here made use of is to have a different idea annexed to it, I suppose the explication given in the paraphrase may illustrate its signification. But perhaps, after all, it might only be the apostle's design, in amassing so many almost synonymous expressions together, to shew that he would have them be upon their guard against all the malevolent passions, and those outrages of speech and expressions which they tend to produce.—The like remark may be applied to many other passages of scripture, and particularly to those where all kinds of lewdness are forbidden in such a variety of phrase and language.

b Gen.

SECT.
IX.Ephes.
IV. 32.

its great Founder. But, on the contrary, be courteous and obliging to each other in your daily deportment, and tenderly compassionate towards those that are in any affliction and distress; freely forgiving one another whatever imagined or real injury may be in question, even as God in Christ, and for his sake, hath freely forgiven you^b such inexcusable and heinous injuries and affronts, as are infinitely greater than any which it is possible for you to receive from your fellow-creatures.

Chap.
V. 1.

Be ye therefore, in the exercise of kindness and forgiveness towards one another, imitators of that God^c to whom ye are under such unspeakable obligations, as his beloved children, whom he hath not only forgiven after so many and great offences, but adopted into his family, and raised to such glorious privileges: And, as a demonstration of your readiness to please and honour so gracious a Father, see that ye walk in love, and steadily pursue the parts of benevolence and goodness; which ye are under additional engagements to do, as Christ also hath loved us in so wonderful a degree, and hath manifested his love to us at so expensive a rate, that he hath even given himself up for us, voluntarily surrendering himself to those cruel enemies whom he could with infinite ease have destroyed (compare John xviii. 6); and having submitted to become their captive, he yielded up his life upon the cross, and was there made an offering and sacrifice to God^d for it is evident, that in this 32 And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

CHAP. V. 1. Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children;

2 And walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God

^b Even as God in Christ hath freely forgiven you.] This plainly teaches us that the great doctrine of the atonement or satisfaction of our blessed Redeemer is always to be explained in such a manner as may leave room for the honour of God's free grace and mercy, in the pardon of our offences consequent upon it.

^c Be ye therefore imitators of God.] This, as it is an inference from the last verse of the preceding chapter, ought by no means to have been separated from it; and, as the apostle is pursuing here the exhortation which he there began to mutual love and forgiveness, and does not finish it, till the end of the next verse, it had been much more proper that the two first verses of this chapter should have been connected with what goes before, and that this chapter should have begun with ver. 31. of the former.

^d An offering and sacrifice to God.] Dr. Bates (in his Harmony of the Divine Attributes, p. 254) thinks that the different words προσφορά and θυσια, are used in reference to the peace offering and the sin offering, as the truth of both is in the sacrifice of Christ, which appeased God, and obtains the blessings consequent upon his favour. But I cannot lay much stress on this distinction, as προσφορά is used in a multitude of places in the Septuagint for presenting any victim before God, as it is likewise in the New Testament (Matt v. 23, 24), for bringing a gift, and offering it on the altar; and when distinguished from θυσια (Psal. xl. 6, Septuag.) it answers to מנחה, the mincha, or offering of fine flour, with a proper quantity of wine, oil, and frankincense, with which the sacrifices of animals were to be attended, and thus to be presented as an offering made by fire this view his death was intended by himself, and was regarded also by the Father, who was well pleased, not only with the variety of virtues and graces which he exercised in it, but with the atonement that was made by it, and gratefully accepted it for a sweet smelling savour, or as a fragrant odour that was far more delightful than any of the victims, or any of the perfumes, which had been offered of old, whether on the brazen or the golden altar; and through him also will your acts of liberality, beneficence, and goodness, come up before God as a grateful memorial, and draw down upon you the most valuable blessings.

God for a sweet smelling savour:

EPH.
IX.
Ephes.
V. 2.

3 But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named amongst you, as becometh saints:

But, as you expect this, you must make it³ your care to maintain a due consistency of character, avoiding not only all malignant passions but every kind and degree of impurity and licentiousness: and therefore, let not fornication, nor any kind of uncleanness^c or insatiable desire of sensual gratifications or of the means of procuring them^f, be so much as named, or heard of, among you; but abstain from these evils, and whatever might lead to them, as it becometh saints, who are conscious of the sanctity of their name and profession, and dread the thoughts of debasing it. And in this view let there be⁴ neither filthiness, or any shameful indecency in conversation, found among you, nor foolishness of speech, nor, those lewd turns and ambiguities of expression^g, which though they are practised by the heathens, and may not seem so evidently criminal of a sweet savour unto the Lord. (See Lev. ii. 1—9; and Numb. xv. 3—14.)—It may here be used in construction with the former, to signify the completeness of the sacrifice.

4 Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient:

c Nor any kind of uncleanness.] This is beyond all controversy the meaning of και παν ακαθαρσια; and had I been more literal, and rendered it, let not all sort of uncleanness be mentioned, the sense had not been given so exactly, and occasion might be taken for grounding an evasion on it, for which the different genius of the Greek language lays no just foundation. See the original of Acts xx. 25, and note f on that text, Vol. VIII. 209.

f Or insatiable desire, &c.] This is certainly a very literal rendering of the Greek word πλεονεξια, which plainly signifies the desire of having more of any thing whatsoever it be. And as there was nothing indecent in the mention of covetousness, in the usual sense of it, as expressing a greedy desire of riches and gain, many good commentators suppose it refers to that inordinate desire of unnatural lust for which the Gentiles were so infamous, and to which the Ephesians were so much addicted, as being in consequence of their riches a very luxurious and debauched people. Compare Ezek. xvi. 28, 29.

g Nor those lewd turns, &c. This seems the natural import of the word ειρωνια, on which many might value themselves as what they apprehended a delicate turn given to some ambiguous expression; and Aristotle in his Ethicks, using this very word, recommends it as what renders conversation agreeable.—Dr. Lucas thinks it included wantonness, profaneness, and keenness of satire. See his Inquiry after Happiness, Vol. III. p. 207.

b Nor

SECT.
X.
Ephes.
V. 4.

criminal, yet are by no means convenient for Christian converts; but rather abound in the language of thanksgiving and devotion, to which we have so many obligations in every circumstance, and which would give a pleasure so much more sublime than any animal indulgencies and delights.

convenient: but rather giving of thanks.

- 5 See then that you be cautiously and resolutely on your guard against all such enormities; for ye well know, and have been taught this, as ye have learned Christ, that no fornicator, nor unclean person, who habitually gives himself up to any kind of pollution, nor any covetous man, who is greedy of those things which minister to his sensual appetite, and who is therefore an idolater^b of the worst kind, deifying as it were the vilest idols, hath or can have any inheritance in the holy and happy kingdom of Christ and of God. Let no one then, in this respect, amuse and deceive you with vain words and sophistical arguments, by which it is well known that many, and especially some that call themselves philosophers, attempt to vindicate some of these things, or at least to extenuate the evil of them; for I am divinely commissioned to assure you, that on account of these things, and such as these, the wrath of God cometh even on the Gentiles, the children of disobedience and infidelity: now if heathens are punished for them, much less can we suppose that professing Christians, who have so much greater advantages for purity and virtue in all its branches, and are under such peculiar engagements to cultivate it, shall escape with impunity in these shameful practices. Be ye not therefore partakers with them in these abominations now, if ye would not finally partake in that dreadful condemnation and misery which they are bringing on themselves by them.

5 For this ye know, That no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

6 Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience.

- 8 For ye were once indeed in a state of gross and heathenish darkness, in which it is no wonder you were abandoned to such practices, as you had no just discernment of the sinfulness and danger of them; but now [ye are] light in the Lord,

7 Be not ye therefore partakers with them.

8 For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord;

^b Nor covetous man who is an idolater] In whatever sense covetousness is used (see note f above,) it may be called idolatry, as it is setting up something else, and (be it what it will) something comparatively very base and contemptible, and pursuing it, as if it were something that could be to us, as in the place of God, a supreme happiness.

Lord; walk as the children of light.

9 (For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth;)

10 Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord.

11 And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.

Lord, and are brought into a clear evangelical day, as being instructed by the word of God, and savingly illuminated by his Spirit; see therefore that you walk in such a manner as becomes those who are children of light, and desire to do an honour to that light of which they are born, and to that celestial family to which they now belong. For ye cannot pretend to be ignorant of the duties becoming such a birth and relation, as *the fruit of the Holy Spirit*ⁱ, by which you are regenerated [is] most evidently manifested in the practice of all goodness, and righteousness, and truth: the operations of it on the soul being attended with such light and influence, as to teach men of all ranks, orders, and conditions in life, invariably to observe the strictest rules of benevolence in their tempers, integrity in their dealings, and sincerity and veracity in their words. Be careful therefore to cultivate these dispositions, proving thereby what is well-pleasing to the Lord, and making the experiment how happy they are who in all things govern themselves according to his injunctions.

Walk then, as I have said, in such a manner as becomes children of light, and be not joint partakers with any about you in the unfruitful works of darkness^k; works which, far from being in any respect profitable or advantageous, are in their consequences most pernicious, tending to involve the soul in the gloom of guilt, and to lead it down to everlasting darkness; and therefore how excusable soever these things might be accounted in your heathen state, they are apparently most unbecoming in the midst of Christian knowledge and privileges; and as you would not practise them yourselves, see to it that you do not countenance or encourage others in them, or by any means make yourselves accessory to the evil they occasion, but rather reprove them with plainness, though at the same time with all meekness and humility, and more especially express your detestation of them by your ⁱ The fruit of the Spirit.] It may be sufficient briefly to observe, that for φρούματός some copies read φρούς, the fruit of the light. The sense is the same, but the number of varying manuscripts seems not sufficient to confirm that reading. Yet I have had some regard to it in the paraphrase, as in some other instances of a like nature.

^k The unfruitful works of darkness.] It is well known that ἀνευρητός in Greek, and inutilis, in Latin, are sometimes used to express not only unprofitable but misericulous things: and this is undoubtedly the meaning of the original word here. Compare Rom. i. 25, and vi. 21.

SECT.
IX.Ephes.
V. 12.

your good conversation in Christ. There is indeed a great deal you will meet with to reprove, and in some instances the reproof is better given by actions than by words: for it is really a shame even to speak particularly of those things which are done by them in secret, and sometimes in what they call their religious mysteries too¹, many of them being of such a nature, that the very mention of them has a tendency to taint the mind, as well as to shock all chaste and modest ears.

13 But to you that are light in the Lord, the vileness of these works of darkness is abundantly discovered, as all things which are such as ought to be reprov'd have their iniquity laid open, and are made manifest by the light; since where the light of the gospel comes, even though they are not particularly mentioned and described, yet they are exposed and condemned, and the soul which receives it is inspired with an abhorrence for what might any way lead to them; for whatsoever doth make objects manifest in their proper forms and colours, is light; and therefore the gospel well deserves that name, as teaching those who are instructed in it to judge rightly concerning the moral nature of actions, and inculcating such general principles as will be of use to them in every particular case that

14 can possibly arise. Wherefore when God is speaking in the prophecies of the Old Testament of the calling of the Gentiles, and of the light which they should have by Christ, he says in effect to those who are yet in darkness, though not exactly in these words, Awake, thou, that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light^m: and this particularly is the most

12 For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret.

13 But all things that are reprov'd, are made manifest by the light; for whatsoever doth make manifest, is light.

14 Wherefore he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.

¹ A shame to speak of those things which are done by them in secret.] See Dr. Whitby's note on this text, concerning the impure and abominable nature of some religious nocturnal mysteries, of the heathen. The quotations there brought, with many others which might be added to them, plainly prove, that if as the learned Mr. Warburton supposes, the lower sort of mysteries among them were first intended by the magistrates to impress the minds of the people with the belief and sense of future rewards and punishments, and the higher sort of them to instruct persons of more reflection and penetration than the rest in the knowledge of the true God, and the other great principles of natural religion, they were long before the apostle's time greatly corrupted and degraded to the most detestable purposes; so that some persons in public characters, by no means remarkable for the purity of their own morals, thought it absolutely necessary, in order to prevent the most scandalous and profligate disorders, to prohibit the celebration of them.—Mons. Saurin has observed a sarcasm in this clause seldom attended to, as if it were insinuated here, They are called αρνηται, Things not to be spoken of; true, says the apostle, they are properly so; things not too sacred, but too infamous to be mentioned. See his Sermons, Vol. VIII. p. 198.

^m Awake, thou that sleepest, &c.] Some think most natural import of those well-known words in Isaiah (chap. lx. 1), "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee;" that is to say, the Messiah, represented by the glory of the Lord, shines in his church, shines upon the souls of particular persons; and then they arise as from the dead, and shake off their deep sleep; they rejoice in the light, they walk in it, and reflect it all around them, so that many others are awakened and transformed by it.

SECT.
IX.
Ephes.
V. 14.

IMPROVEMENT.

THE obligations which as Christians we lie under to cultivate benevolence and purity, are common to all countries and to all ages. Let us therefore frequently read over these plain exhortations, and solemnly charge our souls with their Divine authority and importance.

Let it not be enough to us that we carefully avoid all bitterness and wrath, clamour and evil-speaking, but let us cherish all the kind affections of mutual love and tenderness, and practise even the most difficult duties of charity, freely forgiving those that have injured us, as sensible how much greater offences God has forgiven us; always remembering whose children we are, and what engagements we are under to imitate our heavenly Father; and always setting before our eyes the love of Christ, who gave himself for us, and thereby offered a most pleasing sacrifice to God.² Through him shall our sacrifices proceeding from the same principle be acceptable also to him, even the sacrifices of alms, of prayer, and of praise.

Chap.
iv. 31.

32

Chap.
v. 1.

Let us not only abstain from the grossest sensual indulgencies,^{3, 4} but from every thing indecent in our words and actions: and, that we may do so, let us make a covenant, not only with our eyes (Job xxxi. 1), but with our hearts; remembering, that it is idolatry in the sight of God to set our hearts upon the gross delights⁵ of animal nature, to the neglect and forgetfulness of his blessed Majesty; remembering also, that the kingdom of Christ and of God
is

think this passage is taken from an apocryphal book ascribed to Jeremiah, which, says the learned and eloquent Mons. Saurin, might really contain some prophecies delivered by him, and so by the way be quoted by Matthew (chap. xxvii. 9), who might know that the prophecy recorded by Zechariah (chap. xi. 12), was originally spoken or written by the elder prophet. (Saurin, Serm. Vol. X. p. 286.) But the sense of the passage before us is so fairly deducible from the words of Isaiah quoted in the paraphrase, that I do not see any necessity of having recourse to this supposition.

SECT.
IX.
— is intended only for those who by purity of heart are qualified to
— see and enjoy him.

Ver Many false and sophistical reasons men have invented to palliate 6 and excuse their vices : but if the wrath of God fall upon the hea- then for these things, let us not imagine that we can practise them with impunity ; and upon no account let us presume to be partakers 7 with them in their sins, that so we may not share with them in their 8 punishment.

We are called from darkness into light, from the darkness of sin into the light of grace ; let us remember then the happy state into which we are brought, and walk as children of light, having our conversation such as may be suitable to the character we bear, and to the obligations we are under by the advantages we enjoy : and 10 searching diligently what is acceptable to the Lord, let us discover and make known to all, that we approve it upon trial, by our conforming to it, and bringing forth the fruits of goodness, righteous- 9 ness, and truth, under the light and influence of the Holy Spirit, as those who have been savingly enlightened by him.

11 Let us avoid the works of darkness, not as unfruitful only, but as mischievous and destructive ; and be careful that we do in no degree partake of them, not even so much as by a sinful silence, when Providence calls us to reprove them : but let us earnestly pray 13 for wisdom and grace, to order these reproofs in the wisest and happiest manner ; that so we may, like that light of which we are the children, not only continue ourselves unsullied in the midst of 12 pollution, but make things manifest in their proper colours, and discountenance those indecencies, the shame of which will make the very mention of them odious to the renewed soul, while those that practise them are so far conscious of their vileness, as to endeavour to conceal them from the light, and draw a veil of darkness over them.

14 And O that the almighty voice of God may rouse up and awaken sinners from their sleep, and engage them to arise from the dead, that Christ may give them, light ! He is the great and only Source of light to sinful creatures, by whom it is sprung up on those who deserved to be consigned over to chains of everlasting darkness.
Let us hail the rays of this Sun of righteousness : let us reflect them to his glory : and let it be our concern, that, being raised by him from the sleep of sin, we may spring up to his service with vigour, and prosecute it through all the remainder of our days with becoming gratitude and zeal.

SECT. X.

The Apostle farther pursues his exhortations to a life of circumspection and usefulness, and to the constant exercise of temperance and devotion. Eph. V. 15—21.

EPHES. V. 15.

SEE then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise.

EPHESIANS V. 15.

I HAVE been urging you to consider yourselves as children of light, and upon this account to have your conversation such as becomes those who have been happily awakened from the sleep of sin by Christ: and to pursue the exhortation, as ye thus are brought from darkness into light, see to it therefore that ye walk as accurately and circumspectly as possible, taking the most attentive heed to every step, and conducting yourselves, not as fools, who consider not what they are doing, but as wise men, who know that they have pressing dangers to avoid, and most important ends to secure. And in particular let your wisdom be discovered in *redeeming the time*¹, endeavouring to recover and buy back as far as possible what has been lost, by diligently making use of what remains, and studying to improve it to the best and most valuable purposes; for which you should be careful to embrace the present opportunity, because the days we live in are evil, in which we are on every side surrounded with persecutions and perils, and God only knows how soon our liberty or our life may be taken away. Wherefore while these blessings are continued, employ them for the honour of God, and the good of mankind; and be not inconsiderate and thoughtless as you formerly were, but be concerned to have a right discernment of your duty, and to be understanding over.

x.
Ephes.
V. 15.

16 Redeeming the time, because the days are evil.

17 Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding

¹ Redeeming the time.] Grotius and many other commentators explain this of the caution to be used in avoiding persecution, that so they might draw out their time as long as possibly they could, and not provoke their enemies to cut them off: compare Dan. ii. 8.—This to be sure was their duty, and it had been well if the zeal of some primitive Christians had regarded the precept in this sense. But I am persuaded this interpretation expresses only a small part of that Christian diligence and prudence to which the apostle meant to direct and exhort us.—Mons. Saurin observes, with his usual accuracy, that the word ἀποκαταλαμβάνω has a peculiar force, and implies (as the French word racheter and the English redeem also does) the recovering what has been lost (compare Gal. iii. 13; iv. 4, 5). And he apprehends there is an allusion to the enormities of their heathen life, in which so much former time had most unhappily been lost and thrown away. See his Sermons, Vol. VIII. p. 196, 197.

standing what the will of the Lord is.

SECT.
X.

Ephes.
V. 17.

ing what [is] the will of the great Lord to whom you are devoted: endeavour to know your duty in all its extent, and knowing it to act agreeably to the obligations of it; declining those unnecessary dangers to which it is not his will that you should expose yourselves (Mat. x. 22), and diligently laying hold on every opportunity of service.

- 18 And, that you may neither be insensible of the calls of duty, nor negligent of a due compliance with them, be continually careful that ye be not, even before you are aware, drunk with wine^b, in which there is so much danger of a dissolute excess^c, considering how grossly many abuse it, and abuse themselves by it, so as to run into all manner of extravagance and outrage, and into all that wild disorder and debauchery, for which the heathens are notorious at their idolatrous festivals: but be ye filled, as becomes your character, with the Spirit of God, and make it your concern to invite the quickening and the cheering influences of his grace, which are of so great moment in your Christian course; but which you will, by an excess of liquor, or any other gross sensualities, drive away from you, as he may be justly displeased with what is so directly opposite to his own pure and holy nature.

18 And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess: but be filled with the Spirit:

- 19 Let it be your endeavour therefore to engage the gracious visits of the Holy Spirit by the exercise of social devotion, in which he will delight to find you employed; and for which he will render you more and more fit, while in your cheerful moments you are speaking to yourselves and to each other in the psalms with which David and other inspired writers have furnished us, and in those new-composed hymns of praise,
and

19 Speaking to yourselves in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs,

^b Be not drunk with wine.] It is highly probable that here may be a particular reference to those dissolute ceremonies called the Bacchanalia, that were celebrated by the heathens in honour of him whom they called the god of wine. While these rites continued, men and women made it a point of religion to intoxicate themselves, and ran about the streets, fields, and vineyards, singing and shouting in a wild and tumultuous manner; in opposition to which extravagant vociferations the use of devout psalmody is with great propriety recommended. Plato somewhere tells us that there was hardly a sober person to be found in the whole Attic territories during the continuance of these detestable solemnities.

^c In which there is excess.] The word αἰσθησις implies, not only exceeding the bounds of temperance, which is the direct import of the English word, but that madness of licentious riot which is often the attendant of drunkenness. Wine is so frequently the cause of this, by the ungrateful abuse of the bounty of providence in giving it, that the enormity is represented by a very strong and beautiful figure, as contained in the very liquor.

songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord :

and other spiritual songs, that is, songs on spiritual subjects, which the spirit of God dictates and animates, with a variety adapted to the several occasions of the Christian life : and let it be your great care, that while you are thus tuning your voices, you be also singing and chanting in your hearts to the Lord, without which no external melody, be it ever so exact and harmonious, can be pleasing, to his ear.

HEB.
x.
Ephes.
V. 19.

20 Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ ;

Yea, let there be a constant disposition for this duty, not only when you engage in social worship, but through the whole course of your lives ; and let the mental songs, if I may so express it, that issue from the grateful sentiments of your hearts, be perpetual and uninterrupted ; maintain a most affecting sense of the abundant matter which you have for praise, that as new mercies are every hour descending upon you, ye may be always giving thanks for all things^d, for all the favours of God imparted to yourselves and others ; and make it your employment at all times, not excepting your most afflicted moments, but filling even these with praise, and taking occasion from the tribulations and distresses with which a wise and gracious providence may exercise you, to acknowledge the Divine goodness which directs all these painful dispensations by views to your truest advantage : and, on the whole, let all your praises, in order to their being acceptable, be offered in the prevailing name of our Lord Jesus Christ, to God even the Father ; who hath appointed him to sustain the character of the great Mediator, and is ready to receive the services we perform only in and through him.

21 Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God.

And, while you are thus careful in the duties of devotion to God, be not negligent in those which you owe to your fellow-creatures ; but in all the various relations in which you stand, and the respective stations in which you are placed, be subject to each other in the fear of God^e : let every

d Giving thanks for all things.] Dr. Barrow has given another important sense to these words, rendering them for all persons ; as if the meaning were, “ Consider yourselves as appointed to return to God the tribute of praise due from the whole human race, and address your daily thanksgivings to him for those blessings he is continually scattering down on your fellow-Christians and fellow-creatures in general.” (See his Works, Vol. I. p. 257.) I have therefore in a few words hinted at this generous and noble thought, which is strongly expressed in that excellent form of general thanksgiving in the English liturgy.

e Be subject to each other in the fear of God.] The apostle offers here a general exhortation to the conscientious discharge of

SECT.
X.Ephes.
V. 21.

every one of you, whether he be a superior or an inferior, endeavour to accommodate himself to the infirmities of those that are about him in a kind and respectful manner, so that if he be a superior he may not oppress, or if an inferior, he may not rebel. This I shall further illustrate by descending more particularly to the duties of husbands and wives, of parents and children, of masters and servants; upon a regular attention to which so much of the order and comfort of society, and so much of the credit of Christianity with respect to its professors, apparently depends.

IMPROVEMENT.

- Ver. WHO can read the exhortation which we first meet within 15 this short but important section, without seeing cause for the deepest humiliation on account of his own careless and inconsiderate behaviour? Alas, the wisest have their intervals of folly; and they who walk the most accurately are not without their heedless steps. In how many instances are our thoughts dissipated, and how frequently are we quite forgetful of ourselves and our God! neither watching for opportunities of doing good, nor guarding against temptations to sin; but suffering the one to pass by us unimproved, and the other to seize us unprovided for resistance.
- 16 That precious time, on the right management of which eternity depends, and in the improvement of every day and hour of which, it is manifest, that at least the degree of our everlasting happiness is interested; that time which thousands on a dying bed, or in the invisible state, would gladly redeem at the price of the whole world; how little do we think of the value of it, and to what trifles are we daily sacrificing it! Yea, to what trifles do we not sacrifice it! In the several divisions of it, when we come seriously
 to

of relative duties, from which he afterwards proceeds to the particular consideration of the several relations of husbands and wives, of parents and children, and of masters and servants; which he might rather choose to insist on, as some were ready to imagine that Christian converts were released from any further obligation to those who still continued in a state of heathenism, and might consider the relation as dissolved between them. (Compare 1 Cor. vii. 10—24, and 1 Tim. vi. 1, 2.) The apostle therefore presses it upon them, in whatever station they were placed, to shew a due regard to relative duties, and to remember, that Christian privileges did by no means excuse them from the duties resulting from natural and civil relations of life, but rather did enforce the obligation they were under to observe them. And if these duties were incumbent upon Christians towards relations of all kinds, even though they bore the character of unbelievers, much more were they engaged to practise them towards such as were related to them, not only by the ties of nature or of civil institution, but by the more endearing bonds of grace.

to reflect on the morning,—the forenoon,—the afternoon,—and the evening,—how remiss are we in the proper business of each! So ^{SECT. X.} that if the great business for which we were sent into the world, to Ver. understand what is the will of the Lord, and act according to it, ¹⁷ be not, as there is reason to conclude in many instances it is, entirely neglected, it is performed in a manner shamefully remiss and indifferent.

If we are not drunk with wine, in which there is an excess (from ¹⁸ which, to the shame of Christianity, the followers of Mahomet totally abstain with resolute self-denial, far more easily than Christians keep themselves within the limits of sober temperance), yet how frequently are we quite intoxicated with pleasure, in which we forget the dignity of our nature, and the rules of our profession! And how seldom are we breathing after that quickening Spirit which alone can effectually remedy these disorders!

If our voices are employed in singing the praises of God in our ¹⁹ public assemblies (where, nevertheless, so many are constantly silent), or if we practise it in our families, how little are our hearts engaged!—How seldom doth God receive any cheerful sacrifice of praise from us, even in our most prosperous circumstances! And how much less in every thing!—Where is the person that can say, ²⁰ “In the night is my song unto thee? amidst the darkness and distress of affliction I still praise thee, though thou correctest me, yea because thou correctest me with such paternal wisdom and love?”

And, to conclude these melancholy reflections, How little sub-21 jection is there to each other in the various relations of human life! and where there is any of it, how much more frequently doth it proceed from other considerations than from the fear of God, and a religious regard to his injunctions! Yet these that have been mentioned are commands established by a Divine authority; and there is not a Christian in any age, country, or station, who is not by his profession solemnly obliged to observe them.

What shall we say then on the whole, but this? We lie down in our shame, and confusion covers us, because we have sinned against the Lord our God; (Jer. iii. 25.) And what counsel can be given to remedy these things, but this? If any man lack wisdom, of which these are some of the most important precepts, let him ask it of God, who giveth to all liberally, and upbraideth none with those instances of former folly which they sincerely lament, and which they labour to amend. (James i. 5.)

SECT. XI.

The Apostle recommends it to husbands to love their wives in imitation of Christ's love to the church, and presses upon wives the correspondent duty of conjugal subjection. Eph. V. 22, to the end.

EPHESIANS V. 22.

SECT.
XI.
Ephes.
V. 22.

I HAVE been recommending to you a mutual subjection to each other in the several relations of life, as a general precept of that holy religion in which you are instructed by the gospel; and I shall now proceed to illustrate it by descending to some particulars. And, to begin with the relation between husbands and wives, I would first exhort you that are wives^a, that ye be subject with all humility and gentleness of submission unto your own husbands, not only from a principle of love and respect to them, but as a proof of your fidelity and regard unto the Lord, who has seen fit to place you in a state of subordination, and commanded you to be under obedience: (1 Cor. xiv. 34.) For the husband is by Divine constitution the head of the wife, and so is invested with the superior character, even as the Lord Jesus Christ is the Head of the church, which is committed to his care and government: and, standing in this near relation to it, he has shewn the greatest concern and affection for it, and is become the Saviour of the body, employing his authority for the most important and benevolent purposes, not only to deliver us from evil, but to supply us with all good, in such a manner as to make it manifest that our salvation and happiness depend upon our union with him and subjection to him. And this may hint at the kind purposes to which the superiority of the husband over the wife should be improved, in manifesting a concern for the defence and safety, and for the benefit and comfort of the wife:

a I would first exhort you that are wives.] It is observable, that in the several exhortations given here to the practice of relative duties (as likewise in Col. iii. 18, to the end, and iv. 1), the apostle first begins with the lower relations of wives, and children, and servants, before he proceeds in each of these instances to those of husbands, and parents, and masters; which

EPHES. V. 22.
WIVES, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord.

23 For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the Head of the church; and he is the Saviour of the body.

24 Therefore as the church

it is probable he might do, because the duties of inferiors are commonly most apt to be objected to, as what are thought most difficult to be complied with; and where these are well and faithfully performed, the correspondent duties of superiors, will be more readily attended to, and more effectually secured.

church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing:

25 Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it :

26 That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water, by the word,

27 That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy

b With the washing of water by the word.] I apprehend here is an allusion to the methods taken in eastern countries to purify the virgins, that were to be presented to the royal embrace; (compare Esth. ii. 3, 9, 12; and Ezek. xvi. 7—14.) And no doubt proper care was also taken to cultivate their minds, and form them to such knowledge as might render them more fit to become the dignity intended for them; which was the more necessary, as some of those who appeared as candidates on such occasions were of low birth and education.

wife: but I now mention it in the former view, and therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, and with a cheerful willingness submits to his authority, so also [let] wives [be] subject to their own husbands in every thing in which their commands are not inconsistent with those of Christ, who is the Head of both.

Yet far be it from me to insinuate any thing that should encourage tyranny and usurpation in the husband; that equitably kind and generous Lord, who ought to be considered as a perfect model, hath by his own example taught a very different lesson. And therefore, on the other hand, I would exhort you that are husbands, that ye be sure to love your wives with constant tenderness and fidelity, even as Christ also hath loved the church: and O how astonishing is that love, and how delightful is it to reflect upon it! For such is the affectionate regard that he hath manifested to the church, that he hath been pleased, when it was in a state of slavery and misery, to purchase it to himself at the most expensive price, and hath even given himself as a ransom for it; That, having paid the price of its redemption by his blood, he might sanctify it by his Spirit, and cleanse it with the washing of water in baptism, and so having purged it from the guilt and pollution of sin, might form it for himself, and train it up in the exercise of every grace, by the discipline of his word: That, being thus purified, educated, and adorned, as a bride prepared and adorned for her husband, (Rev. xxi. 2,) he might in due time receive it up to glory, and place it in his own immediate presence a glorious church, arrayed in perfect righteousness, and free from all remains of sin, not having spot or wrinkle, or any thing of that nature^c which could be called a blemish; but that

c No having spot or wrinkle, or any thing of that nature.] How bright an idea does this give us of the grand plan and design of Christianity, to bring all the millions of which the church consists to such a state of perfect virtue and glory, that when the penetrating eye of Christ, its great and holy Bridegroom, shall survey it, there shall not be one fault or vice, or any thing like it, in the least to impair its beauty or offend his sight! Where is such a severe thought! to be found in the world, but in the New Testament, and these who have been taught by it!

d Sanctifiedly

ECL.
XI.Ephes.
V. 27.

that in every part and member of it it should be holy and without blame, and he might thus survey it completely pure, beautiful, and resplendent, in that great day, when the whole number of his elect shall be gathered together, and the marriage of the Lamb shall be celebrated amidst the acclamations of the heavenly legions to whose blissful world his bride shall be conducted in triumph.

holy and without blame.

28 But to return to the subject from which this pleasing digression hath led me; such is the nearness of the relation I am speaking of, that husbands ought so to love their wives as they love their own bodies: and when we consider that the bond of marriage makes them both one, and remember what an inseparable community of interests it establishes, we may truly say, That he that loveth his wife loveth himself, and he that permits his affections to be alienated from her, knows little of his own true happiness.

28 So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife, loveth himself.

29 And this must surely have its weight with every considerate person; for no man in his senses ever yet hated his own flesh, whatever its infirmities or imperfections were, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, providing not only for the sustenance of it, but for its comfortable accommodation; even as the Lord nourisheth and cherisheth the church, supplying it with all things that may conduce to its welfare and happiness, with a tender concern for its infirmities, looking upon it as one with himself:

29 For no man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church:

30 For it is a most certain, as well as delightful truth that he regards it in this view, and that we are esteemed by him as members of his body, united to him by one spirit, and therefore considered like Eve, when just taken out of Adam's side, (Gen. ii. 23,) as making a part of his flesh, and of his bones; whom therefore he would no more permit to be separated from him, than a man would be willing to lose a vital part of himself.

30 For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones.

31 Now answerably to this^d, it is undoubtedly fit, that (as Adam was divinely inspired to declare^e on the first view of that delightful relation of which I know speak) all other ties should yield to this: so that, according as it follows there, (Gen.

31 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his

^d Answerably to this.] This is the exact import of the phrase ἐκ τῆς τοῦ which might also be rendered [on the other hand,] that is, taking the matter in a different but correspondent view.

^e Adam was divinely inspired to declare.] See note ^d on Matt. xix. 5, Vol. II. 95. as to the reason there is to conclude that Adam spake this in consequence of some extraordinary Divine illumination.
^f This

his wife, and they two shall be one flesh.

(Gen. ii. 24.) "A man shall leave his father and mother, and be inseparably joined to his wife, and they, though originally and naturally two persons, shall for the future be one flesh; shall be considered as one person, and, as it were, one soul in two bodies.

SPIC.
XI.
Ephes.
V. 31.

52 This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the church.

This is indeed a great mystery^f, which was long unknown, and now it is in some measure discovered, is a matter of much admiration; but you will easily perceive, that in saying this, I speak not of the union between a man and his wife, but of that between Christ and the church: for that the Son of God should unite himself to a society of mortal men, and regard them as making a part of himself, on account of the intimacy with which they are joined to him in a community of Spirit and of interest, can indeed never be sufficiently admired. Nevertheless, you will not, I hope forget the occasion which led me to touch upon this pleasing subject: I therefore renew the exhortation, and say, Let every one of you in particular so love his wife, even as himself, with such a cordial and sincere affection as he bears to himself; and let the wife [see] that she reverence [her] husband, and be subject to him, not only as a necessary duty, but as led to it by affectionate choice, regarding him with inward respect and esteem, as well as paying him the honour of external obedience.

53 Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET the love of our blessed Redeemer to his church be daily celebrated with the most cordial gratitude, and that infinite condescension adored, by which he hath been pleased to unite us to himself in such dear and inseparable bonds. He is the Saviour of ^f This is a great mystery. Dr. Whithy thinks this refers to a tradition among the Jews, that the marriage of Adam with Eve was a type of the union between the Messiah and the church; and several remarkable passages of that kind have been produced. Bishop Burnett interprets this expression, as if it were designed to signify, that this was a mystical argument of the main point the apostle was intent upon proving, that is, the union of the Jews and Gentiles in one church, since otherwise Christ being espoused to each, might seem in a state of polygamy. (See Burnett on the articles, p. 264.) But this conceit is so far fetched, and the interpretation given in the paraphrase is so easy, that one would wonder so many difficulties should be raised on so obvious a point. The mystery certainly was, that the eternal Son of God, receiving the degenerate race of men into an union with himself, should have loved them with an affection exceeding that which is to be found among the most intimate human relations. This sublime doctrine had long been concealed, and cannot now be perfectly comprehended; and therefore may, with the greatest propriety be called a mystery in every sense of the word.

SECT.
XI.

of the body : and O, in how wonderful a manner is he become so!
 Ver. He hath given himself for us, hath brought us from servitude and 25 misery at the expence of his own life, and hath washed us from our sins in his own blood, as well as cleansed us in the laver of bap-26 tismal water ; and intending us for the eternal displays of his love, as well as for the participation of his glory, he hath sanctified us by his Spirit, and formed us for it by his word, and thus is preparing us for that blessed day, when the whole body of his elect shall be brought forth, as the bride the Lamb's wife, to those public espousals, which shall have their consummation in complete and everlasting 27 happiness. O what a noble and illustrious day ! when the eye of Christ shall survey all the millions of his people, and placing them in his presence as one with himself, shall look with full complacency and delight on all the various members of that glorious church, and behold neither spot nor wrinkle, nor any such thing, but all comely, fair, and lovely, all answering that perfect idea which he had formed, and that scheme which he had laid for raising them by perfect holiness to perfect felicity. In the mean time, let us think with delight on the proofs that he gives of his constant 29 love. He nourishes and cherishes his church ; and with the most affectionate regard is tender of it, as we are of the members of our 30 own body, of our flesh, and of our bones. O that we may have a more sensible communion with him as our great Head, and may derive more continual influences from him !

For his sake let us love one another ; and let those who are joined in the conjugal relation often consider it in the view in 25 which it is here represented. Let husbands see to it, that their love to their wives bear some resemblance to that which Christ avows to the church : let wives pay a reverence to their husbands ;
 33 like that which the church is to pay to Christ ; and let both take 24 care to maintain that wisdom and sanctity in the whole of their behaviour, which may suit the relation which they bear to each other in their common Head, as well as render their intimate alliance happy, which it can never be but by an union of hearts as well as of hands.—Vain will it be to think of dividing their interests, when their persons are thus joined in such a manner as to 13 become one flesh. And can there be a stronger argument to the most tender love ! He that loveth his wife, loveth himself : she that loveth her husband, and from love obeys him, loveth herself too :
 28 and every instance of unkindness on the one hand, or the other, is but arming the members with weapons against the head, or employing the head in contrivances against the members.

SECT. XII.

The Apostle urges the mutual duties of children and parents, and of servants, and masters, enforcing each of them with proper arguments. Eph. VI. 1—9.

EPHES. VI. 1.

CHILDREN, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right.

EPHESIANS VI. 1.

HAVING spoken of the relative duties of husbands and wives, I now proceed to mention other relations arising from them, and particularly that between parents and children. And here I would exhort you that are children, that with becoming duty and respect ye obey your parents, attending to the instructions of your father, and not forsaking the law of your mother (Prov. i. 8); out of regard to the subjection that you owe them in the Lord, and in compliance with the authority of Christ: for this is right and reasonable in itself, as a just debt to those who are the instruments of your being, and to whose care and kindness you are so much obliged; and will be also beneficial in its consequences, as it is certain that parents in general are more capable of directing their children, than they are of governing themselves. And as it is proper and expedient in itself, so it was also expressly commanded by God in that short summary of moral precepts which he uttered on mount Sinai, and engraved with his own finger on the tables of stone; where you know it was said, Honour thy father and [thy] mother, enjoining you to regard them as your superiors with all duty and obedience, and cheerfully to afford them relief and maintenance if they should stand in need of it; which, by the way you may observe, is the first commandment that is attended with a special promise: For it is added there,

ST. P.
XII.
Eph. VI.
VI. 1.

2 Honour thy Father and mother, (which is the first commandment with promise.)

3 That it may be well

[Which is the first commandment with promise.] The church of Rome would from hence argue, that the second commandment, which forbids the worship of images, having a promise added to it of God's showing mercy to thousands of them that love him, and keep his commandments, can be no longer obligatory under the gospel, since this, which relates to honouring parents, is said to be the first commandment with promise. But it is easy to discern the fallacy and weakness of this argument, as what is annexed to the second commandment apparently relates to the whole law, and is a general declaration of the mercy God would shew to those who kept, not only this, but all his commandments; where this of which the apostle speaks is really the first and only precept of the decalogue that has a particular promise annexed to it, peculiar to itself.

b That

SECT.
xii.Ephes.
VI. 3.

there, that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest be long-lived upon the earth^b; which words express the peculiar care of the Divine Providence for the continuance and comfort of the lives of those who should observe this precept, the benefit of which those children might generally expect who were dutiful to their parents: and though under the gospel the promise of temporal blessings be not so express and peremptory, yet even now it may be cheerfully expected that God will bless such children in a very visible manner; and he assuredly will do it, so far as temporal prosperity may on the whole be subservient to their truest and highest interest.

4 And, on the other hand, ye parents, and, more especially, ye fathers, let me beseech you, that ye provoke not your children by a rigorous severity, and be particularly careful not to exasperate their angry passions by an overbearing and tyrannical behaviour, lest by this means you should excite them to such a secret indignation, as may make it difficult for them to restrain those expressions of wrath which in such a relation would be very indecent; and, among other ill consequences of such a conduct, there is great reason also to conclude that it would naturally prejudice them against Christianity, and thus would bring upon yourselves a share in the guilt of their disobedience and their ruin: but, on the contrary, let me exhort you to educate them in the nurture and admonition of the Lord^c, under such discipline and instruction as may lead them to the knowledge of the religion of Christ, and most effectually dispose them to profess and practise well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth.

4 And, ye, fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

^b That thou mayest be long-lived upon the earth.] It is observed by Dr. Whitby and others, that the apostle does not say,—upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, that he might not encourage a vain hope in the Jews of continuing in the land of Canaan. But when it is considered, that those whom he was writing to were chiefly Gentile converts, the clause would very properly be omitted in this view, as it most better suit the case of the whole church to express the promise in a general way.

^c In the nurture and admonition of the Lord.] By the word παιδεία, which we render nurture, as distinguished from ἐπιτίμησις Kata, the admonition of the Lord, some think may be intended such a knowledge of books, men, and things, as may fit them to appear in life with honour and usefulness. But as they stand connected, and the word Kata may refer to both, it seems more reasonable to explain these terms of such a course of discipline and instruction as properly belongs to a religious education, which ought to be employed in forming them for the Lord, by laying a restraint upon the first appearances of every vicious passion, and nourishing them up in the words of faith and of good doctrine (1 Tim. iv. 6), in which respect I cannot but take this occasion to say catechising has been found to be of excellent use, though it be now so much neglected.

practise it; which it is certainly of great importance that you should attend to in their earliest years, and before ill habits render them stubborn and intractable.

5 Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your hearts, as unto Christ :

There is yet another relation between masters and servants, concerning which I shall proceed to advise you : and as I would not neglect those of the lowest character in life, on whose conduct much of the credit of religion may depend ; I would exhort you therefore who are servants, whether of the meanest rank, such as bondmen and slaves, or in the station only of hired servants, that ye be subject and obedient to those who are [your] masters and proprietors, though they be only so according to the flesh : while there is still a superior Lord of your spirits, whose authority is to set bounds to theirs, and never must in any case be violated to please them, or even to preserve your own lives, when most in their power : but in all lawful things whatever, see that you maintain a becoming subjection to them, performing what they order you with fear and trembling, as those who would be cautious of giving offence, or of bringing a reproach on your profession, by any unfaithfulness or negligence in their affairs ; discharging your duty to them in the simplicity and uprightness of your heart, as unto Christ, with that sincerity and uniformity of conduct which a regard to Christ will require and produce : Acting in all things, not with eye-service only, without attending to their business any further than while their eye is upon you, as if it were your only aim to be men-pleasers^d, and to secure the favour of your masters ; but as those who are the servants of Christ by your Christian profession, and required by him to serve your master with fidelity, doing the will of God from the soul, with a sincere desire above all things of approving yourselves to his all-seeing eye. And thus let it appear that you make conscience of your duty, and apply to it with a willing mind ; performing 6 Not with eye-service, as men-pleasers ; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart.

7 With good-will doing

^d Not with eye-service, as men-pleasers.] Grotius takes notice of the elegance of the compound words made use of here in the original (μη κατ' οφθαλμοειδεναν ω ; ανδραπαριστοι,) which our translators have endeavoured to imitate. But as the Greek abounds more in such compound words than any other language, so the apostle Paul has frequently introduced them in his writings with a peculiar elegance and beauty, of which it is apparent that the best translation must in many instances fall very short. Compare Rom. ii. 14 ; 2 Cor. vi. 14 ; Col. ii. 4 ; 1 Tim. i. 6 ; 2 Tim. i. 6 ; ii. 15, &c. and see Blackwall's Sac. Class. Vol. I. p. 259.

ECT.
VII.
Ephes.
VI. 7.

ing all the business of your station with a cheerful readiness and good-will, and doing service with a benevolent alacrity, in such a manner as to shew that you respect and love your masters, and have their interest at heart, as being ultimately influenced by a view to the approbation and honour of the Lord, and not by a regard to those tokens of favour you may receive from 8 men: Knowing assuredly, and making it the governing maxim of your lives, that whatsoever good any man doth, in one station of life or another, he shall receive a proportionable, though infinitely gracious reward for the same, from the hand of the Lord as his final Judge; and this, whether [he be] a slave, or a freeman, whether he be the meanest servant, or the greatest prince: for he is the universal Guardian and Protector of his people, and esteems men, not according to their stations in the world, but according to their behaviour in those stations, whether high or low.

9 And, on the other hand, ye that are lords and masters, let me exhort you, that ye do the same to them, and always act on the same equitable principles, not only with respect to those who are your hired servants, but even to them that are your slaves, and belong to you as your absolute property, so that according to human laws you may dispose of their persons and their lives as you please: but howsoever mean and low their station be, remember the common bond of humanity, by which you are united to them; remember the peculiar obligations of Christians to distinguished benevolence and goodness, to all with whom you have to do; and therefore govern them with moderation and gentleness of temper, forbearing not only cruel and dangerous blows, but all severe and rigorous threatening's, and every thing of an over-hasty and tyrannical conduct; and treat them in the same generous and upright manner as you would have them act towards you, as knowing that ye yourselves also have a superior Lord and Master in the heavens, whose authority over you is much greater and more absolute, than yours ever any
of

doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men:

8 Knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free.

9 And, ye masters, do the same things unto them, forbearing threatening: knowing that your Master also is in heaven, neither is there

e Forbearing threatening 1 To explain this, as some have done, as if it only signified remitting the evil threatened, falls far short of the apostle's meaning, if I at all understand it; as a charge given to forbear all passionate and menacing expressions towards servants, is of a more extensive nature, and calls for greater generosity and mildness than not to punish them so severely as they before had threatened them.

there respect of persons with him.

of your fellow creatures: and, whatsoever difference there may be in your stations, there is no respect of persons with him! but he will administer the most strict and impartial justice, and shew that he remembers the cry of the oppressed, though men may consider them, on account of the inferiority of their circumstances, as below their regards.

516.
XII.
Ephes.
VI. 9.

IMPROVEMENT.

IT is matter of thankful acknowledgement, that God condescends Ver, in his word to give us particular instructions, suited to the circumstances in which we are respectively placed. Children and servants are not forgotten. Let them attend to those gracious lessons which are here given by the supreme Parent and Master, who while he teaches them, pleads their cause, and interposes his high authority to vindicate them from oppression and abuse.

Much of the happiness of society evidently depends on the temper and conduct of those who are placed in these lower relations. Let children therefore learn to be subject to their parents with all 1, 2 dutiful and humble respect, from a sense of the reasonableness of the command, and of the goodness which has annexed such a promise to it: a promise which shall still be efficacious, so far as long life would be indeed a blessing to a pious child.

Let servants, with all godly simplicity and uprightness of heart, 5 revere the authority of Christ in them that are their masters according to the flesh; and exercise a good conscience towards them upon all occasions, not only when under their eye, but in their 6 absence; well knowing that God is always present, and always attentive to the conduct of every rational creature in whatsoever rank. Let them cherish that inward good-will and benevolence of 7 heart, which renders every act of service uniform and steady, and makes it in a degree obliging, even when performed by those from whom authority might have extorted it. And let the certain and important reward that will assuredly follow every good action, 8 whether great or small, and whether performed by persons in more elevated or inferior stations of life, animate us all to a zealous diligence in well-doing, whatever discouragement may at present attend us.

And as to those who bear the superior relations in life, let them remember, that the command of a much higher parent and lord requires also of them a tender regard to their inferiors. Let pa- 4 rents therefore govern their own passions, that they may not terrify and oppress the tender spirits of their children: or if they are otherwise

SECT.
xii.

otherwise than tender, may not teach them an evil lesson against themselves, and by their own example strengthen them in those Ver. excesses which may be a disgrace and detriment to the family, and may, when age has broken all the vigour of the parents, bring down their grey hairs with sorrow to the grave. A conscientious care to educate and train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, if duly attended to, will teach a better conduct, and the meeckness and gentleness of Christ will have an happy influence on both.

- 9 And, finally, let the thoughts of that great impartial Master in heaven awe masters on earth; and the expectation, the certain expectation of giving an account to him, engage them to make the yoke of servitude, which God has been pleased to lay on those who are nevertheless their brethren, as light and easy as they can; choosing, even when they might command with authority, rather with love to entreat; not doing or saying any thing unnecessarily rigorous or severe, not threatening, reviling or reproaching, but treating their servants as those whom they consider as partakers with them in the same hope, or whom they earnestly desire by all prudent condescension and tenderness to lead into the way of salvation.

SECT. XIII.

The Apostle concludes the epistle with urging them to prepare for a strenuous combat with their spiritual enemies, by putting on the whole armour of God; and earnestly exhorting them to fervency in prayer, he recommends himself to their remembrance at the throne of grace. Eph. VI. 10, to the end.

EPHESIANS VI. 10.

EPHES. VI. 10.

SECT.
xiii.Ephes.
VI. 10

I HAVE been exhorting you to a faithful performance of relative duties, and as to what remains, my brethren, since every relation in life brings along with it correspondent duties, and will require vigour and resolution in the discharge of them, whatever therefore be the circumstance or situation you are in, let me beseech you, not to rely on your own strength, but be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, confide in his omnipotent protection, and fix your dependance on the grace he is so ready to communicate to us, to support us in every service and struggle to which we are called.

FINALLY, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.

11 And since it is a strenuous warfare in which you are 11 Put on the whole armour

armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.

are engaged, put on the complete armour of God, that glorious dress so necessary for you, and so conducive to your ornament and safety; that ye may, in consequence of it, be able to stand against all the subtle methods and artifices of the devil, against all the ambushes he may lay for you, and all the rage and fury with which he may attack you.

1 PET.
III.
13.

12 For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.

For, in the warfare we are carrying on, our struggle and contention is not with flesh and blood alone; not merely with human adversaries, however powerful, subtle, and cruel; not only with the remaining corruptions of animal nature, which often give us such painful exercise: but we are called to wrestle and contend with sagacious and mighty spirits, once ranked among celestial principalities, though now degraded by their apostacy to be chiefs in hell; and with powers, that employ their utmost strength to ruin us, and that still keep their regular subordination, that their efforts of mischief may be more effectual: we contend with those who are the rulers of the darkness of this age and world, who have long usurped a dominion over it, and who in the present age hold men in the chains of hereditary superstition and destructive errors, which have been delivered down to them through many succeeding generations; and with spirits who became authors and abettors of wickedness even while they abode in heavenly [places], where a The complete armour of God.] The word in the original is πνευματικα, which includes all sorts of armour, whether offensive or defensive; consisting in the exercise of all those Christian graces which we are furnished with by God, to be made use of in his strength, as well to annoy the enemy as to defend ourselves: and it appears by the particular description which the apostle here proceeds to give of it, to be a suit of armour every way complete, and properly adapted to the defence of every part; though, as some observe, none is provided for the back, as we must always face the enemy, or we shall presently lie open and have no defence from danger.

b The rulers of the darkness of this world.] This and the following clause Dr. Whitby explains in his paraphrase, "of those evil spirits that rule in the heathen nations which are yet in darkness," and "of those that have their abodes in the regions of the air." But I do not see any foundation for such a distinction, and therefore have not intimated it in the paraphrase.

c Spirits of wickedness in heavenly [places].] There is something peculiar in the form of the expression in the original, πνευματικα των εχθρων του βασιλευς του θεου, which Mr. Locke has paraphrased, "the spiritual managers of the opposition to the kingdom of God." There is no doubt but it refers to those revolted wicked spirits who are continually employed in propagating wickedness. But Dr. Godwin would render the last words, επι των ουρανων, about heavenly things, as signifying, that we wrestle with them to secure to ourselves those spiritual and eternal blessings of which they would endeavour to deprive us. (See his Work, Vol. I. p. 57.) I have hinted at this, but cannot think it a proper translation: the connection and reason I have followed seem much more natural and

SECT.
xiii.Ephes.
VI. 12.

where they rebelled against the God of heaven, and drew in multitudes, who were before holy and happy spirits, to take part with them in their ungrateful and impious revolt. With these are we struggling for that great celestial prize which they have for ever lost: and their nature, experience, and situation, give them most formidable advantages against the weak children of men, surrounded with so many examples of evil, and with such powerful temptations to it. On this account then let me pursue my exhortation, that ye would take unto you the complete armour of God, that so ye may be able to withstand all these strong and malicious enemies in the evil day of extremest danger; and having done all, having exerted yourselves to the utmost, which indeed it will be absolutely necessary for you to do, ye may be found at last, when your warfare is accomplished, to stand victorious and triumphant.

14 Stand therefore in a constant readiness for the encounter, as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, having your loins girded about with the strictest truth^d, uprightness and sincerity of heart, which will give a steadiness and uniformity to your conduct, and serve, as a girdle does, to brace on the other parts of your armour, and keep them all in their proper places: and putting on the breast-plate of universal righteousness, or a constant regard to the practice of holiness in the sight of God, and of justice and integrity in the whole of your dealings with your fellow-creatures, which, like a breast-plate, will defend your vitals against many a dangerous thrust of the enemy: And having your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace^e, with that peaceful

13 Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand.

14 Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast-plate of righteousness

15 And your feet shod with the preparation and easy: "They were wicked in heaven, and by that wickedness fell from thence."

^d Having your loins girded about with truth.] It has often been observed, that the military girdle was not only an ornament but a defence; as it hid the gaping joints of the armour, and kept them close and steady, as well as fortified the loins of those that wore it, and rendered them more vigorous and fit for action.—The chief difficulty here is to know, whether truth refers to the true principles of religion, or to integrity in our conduct; and how, on the latter interpretation to keep it distinct from the breast-plate of righteousness, or on the former from the shield of faith. But it seems probable to me, that it may rather signify some virtue of the mind, as all the other parts of the armour enumerated do; and then it must refer to that uprightness and sincerity of intention, which produces righteousness, or an holy and equitable conduct, as its proper fruit.

^e The preparation of the gospel of peace.] Mr. Locke understands by this, "an habitual readiness to walk in the way of the gospel of peace," as if it were intended as a general injunction to obey all its precepts. But to me it evidently appears to be designed in a particular manner to point out the preparation which the gospel makes for our defence, by that peaceful temper which it so often teaches and inculcates; of which, as I take it to be the sense of ration of the gospel of peace;

16 Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked.

17 And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God:

18 Praying always with all prayer and supplication peaceful and benevolent temper which is so much recommended by the gospel as an essential part of the Christian character, and which like the boots worn by soldiers, will bear you unhurt through the many difficulties and trials which like sharp pointed thorns, may lie in your way, and dangerously obstruct your progress: And upon all [these] taking to yourselves the impenetrable shield of a steady faith in the great promises and principles of the gospel^g, whereby if it be kept in lively exercise, ye shall be able effectually to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked one^h; those furious suggestions which he may sometimes discharge into the mind, like so many envenomed arrows or darts, which kindle by the swiftness of their passage; And take also the helmet of salvation that cheerful hope of complete deliverance and eternal happiness, which will cover your head in the day of battle, and give you a well-grounded boldness and confidence, which will greatly conduce to your success; and brandish in your hands the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, those declarations of his word and gospel which his Spirit has inspired, and by a firm confidence in which you will be able, not only to defend yourselves, but to repel your adversaries.

And, finally, to add efficacy to all these, be continually praying; make it a constant part of your daily work, and be frequently amidst all your

of the place, I have explained it in the paraphrase; though others choose to understand it of that confidence which is inspired by the gospel in consequence of the peace it establishes between God and the soul.

f Upon all [these] taking the shield of faith. Our translators render it [above all] but as [upon] answers best to the particle ἐν: here used, so it best expresses the allusion to the situation of the shield as covering the other pieces of armour; which has here a beautiful propriety, as truth, righteousness, and peace, are sheltered (as τ were) by faith, from the assaults which otherwise might overbear them.

g To quench all the fiery darts of the wicked one. Dr. Goodwin, and many others, suppose that the apostle here refers to an ancient custom still prevailing among the Indians and other barbarous nations, to dip their arrows in the blood or gall of asps and vipers, or other poisonous preparations, which fire the blood of those who are wounded with them, occasion exquisite pain, and make the least wound mortal; and some Greek writers tell us, that it was usual for soldiers to have shields made of raw hides, which immediately quenched them. (See Goodwin's Child of Light, p. 101.)—It is also certain, that some arrows were discharged with so great a velocity that they fired in their passage: but though in common cases this could seldom happen, nor would there thus be much probability of their reaching the mark, yet I have hinted at it in the paraphrase in allusion to the sudden and surprising violence of Satanical suggestions.—Missile weapons, with burning flux wrapped about them, were likewise sometimes used (see Raphael, ex Herod, in loc.); but this was chiefly to fire places, and not in the attack of persons alone.

ST. CT.
xiii.Ephes.
VI. 18.

your labours and cares lifting up your hearts to God in holy ejaculations, joined with all kind of prayer and supplication in the fervency of your own spirits, under the influence of that Divine Spirit which resides in you, to quicken your hearts, and which will engage you never to rest contented in outward forms of unmeaning and hypocritical devotion; and as you desire it may be effectual, be still watching thereunto with all perseverance^b, and importunate ardor of mind, joining to these petitions such earnest intercession and affectionate supplication for all the saints, as the principles of our religion dictate, and as may suit the relations, in which we respectively stand.

- 19 And particularly let me entreat your prayers for meⁱ, your faithful minister and apostle, that being loosed from my bonds, a door of utterance may be opened, and free liberty of expression given to me^k, that I may open my mouth with all confidence and boldness in that important cause wherein I am engaged, so as to make known in the most effectual manner the mystery of the gospel, by going on to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, and stedfastly maintaining what I before have taught, of the Gentiles being called to all the privileges of the gospel-covenant; For which, through the resentment of the Jewish zealots, I am now a prisoner at Rome, where I discharge my embassy in a chain^l; that, howsoever I may seem to be entirely in the power of my enemies, and have already suffered so much for my zeal for the truth, I may have farther opportunity to speak boldly therein

supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance, and supplication for all saints;

19 And for me that utterance may be given me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel:

20 For which I am an ambassador in bonds, that therein I may

^b Watching thereunto with all perseverance.] Bishop Wilkins explains this (in his Treatise on Prayer, p. 39,) of improving the gift of prayer by continual exercise, and gathering up fit materials for addresses to God by reading, conversation, meditation, &c.—Compare note d on Phil. iv. 6.

ⁱ And particularly for me.] Mr. Blackwall observes, that the particule mei sometimes signifies particularly or especially; and he produces passages to this purpose from proper authorities. Sacred Classics, Vol. I. p. 145.

^k That utterance may be given to me.] This may perhaps refer to some impediment in his speech, or other imperfection in the manner of his address, which might be a discouragement to Paul in his preaching, and seem to have an ill aspect on the success of it. Compare note f on 2 Cor. xii. 7, p. 215, and note k on Gal. iv. 14, p. 278.

^l I discharge my embassy in a chain.] Some would render πρωτεύω εν αλυσσι, I grew old in a chain, (compare Philen. ver. 9, where πρωτός πρωτεύων signifies Paul the aged); but it is certain that the common version of this passage may be justified.—Few need to be told, that it was usual among the Romans to chain the prisoner's right-arm to the left-arm of the soldier that guarded him; but as the persons of ambassadors were always sacred, the apostle seems to refer to the outrage that was done to his Divine Master in this violation of his liberty.

may speak boldly, as I ought to speak.

21 But that ye also may know my affairs, and how I do, Tychicus, a beloved brother, and faithful minister in the Lord, shall make known to you all things:

22 Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts.

23 Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

24 Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Amen.

therein, as I ought to speak, in order to approve my fidelity to God, and my sincere affection to the souls of men. (Compare Col. iv. 3, 4.)

But I will not insist largely on my own personal concerns; for that ye also may know the things that relate to me, [and] what I am doing here at Rome, Tychicus, a beloved brother, and faithful minister and fellow-servant in the work of the Lord^m, shall by my direction fully inform you: Whom indeed I have sent with this 22 epistle to you for this very purpose, that ye might more particularly know from him what relates to us, and that, by the report which through the Divine goodness he will be able to make, he may comfort your hearts as to the grief and trouble you are under for me, and may encourage you to steadfastness in the gospel.

I conclude with my most affectionate and 23 ardent prayers, that peace and all prosperity in soul and body may [be] with all the brethren that are with you; and that the love of God in Christ, attended with a fervent love to one another, may be shed abroad in your hearts, together with a plentiful increase and confirmation of faith and every other grace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. And may this grace, with all the blessed fruits of it, not only [be] with you, but may it richly abound to all in every place that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and incorruption of heartⁿ, that are inspired with a true affection to him, and from that love desire faithfully to serve him. Amen.

IMPROVE-

^m Tychicus, a beloved brother, &c.] He was one of Paul's friends and fellow-labourers, and had been his companion in the last interview he had with the elders of Ephesus, when he sent for them to come to him at Miletus. See Acts xx. 4, 17, and note d on ver. 4, Vol. III. p. 208.

ⁿ That love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.] Mr. Locke explains the word ἀσμενία of such a love as would prevent men's mixing any thing with the gospel which was not genuine, and might render it ineffectual. (Compare Gal. v. 1, 4.) But it seems rather to express that uprightness of heart which is opposed to putting on false pretences; and may with great propriety be understood as a general description of a true Christian. And it is manifest indeed, that wheresoever this unfeigned love to Christ prevails, there will of course be all the other essential parts of the Christian character.

SPER.
XIII.
Ephes.
VI. 21.

IMPROVEMENT.

SECT.
XIII.

LET the heart of every Christian soldier, be at once awakened and animated, by the important charge which the apostle here is (as it were) still sounding in our ears. He knew the weakness of the Christian, and the dangers of his way; how insufficient for the spiritual warfare we are in ourselves, and that our only Ver. strength is in the Lord, and in the power of his might, by whom 10 alone we can be kept in safety, and may be made even more than conquerors in all things: and therefore pointing us to this, at the same time that he sets forth the difficulty of the combat and sounds a charge to the battle, he shews us the provision made for our 11, 13 defence, and calls us to put on the whole armour of God; an armour that will serve for every part, that will supply us both with offensive and defensive weapons, and help us to withstand, and even to surmount, the greatest opposition. Let us see to it then that we put on, and that we use it all.

And have we not enough to engage us to it, when we consider 12 that our enemies are great and many, that they are restless and unwearied in their malice, and that their subtilty is inconceivable? Flesh and blood have too frequently worsted us: how then shall we stand against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world and against spirits of wickedness who make it still their business to draw others into that spiritual wickedness which they were first so daring as to shew in heavenly places? It will be impossible we should at any time be safe from danger, if every direction here given be not diligently attended to; and having such a numerous and mighty host of enemies combined against us, we never shall be able to withstand and overcome
 14 them, if the girdle of truth be loosened, if the breast-plate of righteousness be not put on, if the preparation of the gospel of peace do not secure our steps, if the helmet of salvation do not guard our head, if the shield of faith be not our shelter, and the sword of the spirit our weapon. And vainly shall we labour to obtain this 17 armour by any other method, if fervent prayer and supplication in 18 the Spirit, under the aids and influences of his grace, be not addressed to the God of heaven, whose work and whose gift this celestial armour is: so that if ever we would have it, and would use it right, let us persist in seeking it with holy importunity and and perseverance, and the desired answer shall not always be denied.

20 To conclude, Let us often think of the apostle Paul, as discharging his embassy in a chain, that we may learn to submit to whatever affronts and injuries, whatever hardships and sufferings we may be called to endure on the account of religion, concerned about nothing so much as that we may approve our fidelity in the sight of God, and loving the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, may be partakers of the blessings of his grace, with all that have a true affection to him. All that appear to be of such a character, let us ever most affectionately love, whatever their particular sentiments or forms of worship may be; and a share of this mercy and favour, with all the blessed fruits of peace and prosperity, of love and faith, shall be infallibly our own, and be communicated in a rich abundance to us from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

SECT.
XIII.

Ver.
23, 24

THE END OF THE FAMILY EXPOSITOR ON THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

THE
FAMILY EXPOSITOR;

OR, A

PARAPHRASE

ON

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

PHILIPPIANS.

WITH

CRITICAL NOTES, AND A PRACTICAL IMPROVEMENT OF EACH SECTION.

A

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO THE

PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON

THE EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

THE Christian religion was first planted at Philippi by the apostle Paul, about the year of our Lord 51: who, having (as the history of the Acts informs us, chap. xvi.) made a progress through Galatia and Phrygia, and intending to pursue his tour through Bithynia, was admonished in a vision to go over to Macedonia. And being arrived at Philippi, which was a city in the first part of that province, and a Roman colony (see Vol. III. § 36, note ^a and ^b, p. 142), he, with his companions, Timothy, Luke, and Silas, spent some days there in preaching the gospel. During his stay here, he converted Lydia, and cast out a spirit of divination from a damsel; which so enraged her masters, who made a considerable advantage of it, that they stirred up the inhabitants, and threw Paul and Silas into prison; from whence however they were miraculously delivered, and the jailor with all his house converted to the Christian faith. Though the apostle soon after left the city, Luke and Timothy continued there some time longer, to carry on the work he had so successfully begun: and this no doubt was one reason that induced him to fix upon the latter, as the most proper person to visit the Philippians in his absence, of whose affection for them, and concern for their interests, he takes particular notice (chap. ii. 19—22.)

That the apostle himself made these Christians a second visit, is plain from Acts xx. 6, though we are not informed of any particulars relating to it; and it is at least highly probable (for reasons to be given below), that he saw them again after this epistle was sent: indeed the peculiar affection and respect they seem to have discovered for the apostle, as well as the sufferings to which they had been exposed, by their faithful adherence to the gospel (chap. i. 28, 29, 30), entitled them to some distinguished regard; for besides the present he acknowledges to have received from them by the hands of Epaphroditus (chap. iv. 18), they had more than once before generously contributed to his support, even during his residence amongst larger and richer societies, (ib. v. 15, 16.) And from some hints that are dropt in this epistle we may gather, that they had taken an opportunity of expressing, in the strongest and most affectionate terms, their sympathy with the apostle under his confinement, and their concern lest it should affect the interest of religion, and prevent the spread of the gospel. It is no wonder if such proofs of the sincerest friendship, and the discovery of so excellent a temper, should deeply affect so pious and benevolent a heart as St. Paul's; and accordingly his epistle breathes throughout, the warmest gratitude and most disinterested affection.

once

As to the date of this epistle, it appears from the apostle's own words (chap. i. 7, 13; iv. 22), that it was wrote while he was a prisoner at Rome; and, from the expectation he discovers (chap. ii. 24) of being shortly released and restored to them again, compared with Philem. ver. 22, and Heb. xiii. 23, where he expresses a like expectation in yet stronger terms, it is extremely probable that this epistle was wrote towards the close of his first imprisonment, and sent about the same time with the epistles to the Colossians, the Ephesians, and Philemon, which (as has been already shown in the Introduction to the Ephesians, p. 315) was in the year of our Lord 63, and the 9th of the Emperor Nero. (See also Vol. III. § 60, note^s, p. 305.)

The apostle's design in this epistle (which is quite of the practical kind), seems to be, "to comfort the Philippians, under the concern they had expressed at the news of his imprisonment; to check a party spirit that appears to have broke out among them, and to promote, on the contrary, an entire union and harmony of affection; to guard them against being seduced from the purity of the Christian faith, by Judaizing teachers; to support them under the trials with which they struggled; and, above all, to inspire them with a concern to adorn their profession, by the most eminent attainments in the divine life."

The apostle, after his usual salutation (in which he joins Timothy's name with his own), begins with assuring the Philippians, in the most expressive language, of his affectionate regard for them, and solicitous concern for their religious interests; acknowledging, with the utmost gratitude, the goodness of God in calling them to partake with him in the blessings of the gospel, and praying for their farther improvement in knowledge and holiness; chap. i. 1—11. And, to remove the apprehensions they were under from the news of his imprisonment at Rome, which seemed to wear so fatal an aspect on the interest of religion, he informs them, that even this event had, under the direction of Providence, been over-ruled for the service of the gospel; while the honest zeal of some, and the envious, contentious spirit of others, both concurred in advancing the same cause: and, notwithstanding all the opposition that was made to him, he declares his cheerful hope and confidence, that in every situation in life, and even in death itself, he should still be honoured as the instrument of promoting this this great object of his wishes; ver. 12—20. In this connection it was natural for him to express the strong desire he felt of being with Christ in that better world, where he should receive the blessed fruits of his labours: and, after describing the struggle he found within himself, between his earnest longing after that felicity, and his solicitude for their farther establishment in religion, he declares his readiness to continue here for the service of his Master, and their spiritual advantage; and entreats them, that, while he did so, he might have the joy to hear, that though he was absent, they maintained the honour of their Christian character, both for piety and courage: ver. 21—30.

The apostle, having given the Philippians these general admonitions to maintain a conduct worthy of the gospel, proceeds to exhort them, in the most solemn and pathetic manner, to the particular exercises of unanimity and candor, and a tender care for the interests of each other; which he enforces by the generous and condescending love of our blessed Redeemer; on whose humiliation and exalted state he expatiates with great warmth and energy, urging them to a due improvement of these sublime discoveries by a holy caution and circumspection in their whole deportment, and a life of the most exemplary virtue: which, as it would most evidently conduce to their own happiness, and the honour of their religion, would also make a glorious addition to his joy and triumph at the great day, by affording so convincing a proof of the success of his labours; chap. ii. 1—16. And as a farther instance of the strength of his affection and concern for their happiness, he assures them, that he should even rejoice in the view of sacrificing his life for their advantage: and since, for the present, his circumstances would not allow him to gratify the earnest desire he felt of administering personal consolation and instruction to them, he promises to send Timothy very soon to supply his place; who, on account of the particular affection he had discovered for that church, and the assiduity with which he assisted the apostle in his first preaching the gospel there, was of all others the most proper to be employed in such an office. Yet he intimates a strong persuasion, that he should himself be soon released from his imprisonment, and have the pleasure of seeing them once again; however, as they stood in need of present support, and Timothy could not immediately undertake the journey, he tells them he had commissioned Epaphroditus, by whom he sent this letter, to assure them of his kind remembrance; and, to induce them to pay the greater regard to his messenger, he gives an affecting account of his late sickness, and ardent love to the brethren; ver. 17, to the end.

Having thus sufficiently testified the sincerity of his regards for them, the apostle goes on to guard them against the influence of some factious, turbulent persons, who had disturbed the peace of the church by their furious zeal for the observance of the Jewish ritual; and exhorts them, in opposition to all such pretences, to fix their whole dependance on Christ and his gospel; which he assures

assures them he himself had done, though he had more to glory in with respect to Jewish privileges and advantages, than most of these who valued themselves so highly upon them, animating them from his own example, continually to aspire after higher attainments in piety and virtue, as the only means of securing that complete felicity which the gospel promises to all its sincere votaries: chap. iii. 1—14. And, as they had not yet attained to the perfection of the Christian character, he urges upon them, from the glorious hope of the resurrection, a holy and blameless temper, and heavenly conversation; cautioning them against the bad example even of some professing Christians, who brought destruction on themselves and reproach on religion, by the unsuitable manner in which they acted, ver. 15, to the end; iv. 1.

The apostle, having in the former part of the epistle recommended mutual forbearance, peace, and concord, now descends to some particular charges relating to the same subject; and then proceeds to give more general exhortations to Christian cheerfulness, moderation, prayer, a behaviour universally amiable and praise-worthy, and an imitation of the good example he had endeavoured to set before them; ver. 2—9.

Towards the close of the epistle, he makes his acknowledgments to the Philippians for the seasonable and liberal supply they had sent him; which he declares he rejoiced in principally on their account, as it was so convincing a proof of their affection for him, and their concern for the support of the gospel, which he preferred far above any private secular interest of his own; expressly disclaiming all selfish, mercenary views, and assuring them, with a noble simplicity, that he was able upon all occasions to accommodate his temper to his circumstances, and had learnt, under the teachings of Divine grace, in whatever station Providence might see fit to place him, therewith to be content. After which, the apostle, having encouraged them to expect a rich supply of all their wants from their God and Father, to whom he devoutly ascribes the honour of all, concludes with salutations from himself and his friends at Rome to the whole church, and a solemn benediction; ver. 10, to the end.

A

PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

THE PHILIPPIANS.

SECTION I.

The introduction with the general salutation, suited to the views with which the apostle wrote. Phil. I. 1—11.

PHIL. I. 1.

PAUL and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus, which are at Philippi, with

PHILIPPIANS I. 1.

PAUL and Timothy^a, being now providentially together at Rome, both through Divine grace the faithful servants of Jesus Christ^b, and desirous to promote his interest by their writings, where their other labours cannot reach, do hereby send their most affectionate Christian salutations to all the saints, their holy brethren, in Christ Jesus, which are at Philippi, whom God hath united to them in the bonds of one common faith. And they greet with particular respect

SECT.
I.

Phil.
I. 1.

^a Paul and Timothy.] Paul might here choose to join Timothy with him, as he not only had attended the apostle in his general travels into these parts, but had assisted in preaching the gospel at Philippi. Compare Acts xvi. 1, 3, 12.

^b The servants of Jesus Christ.] Some have inquired why Paul does not style himself an apostle here, and in his two epistles to the Thessalonians, and that to Philemon, as he does in all the other epistles that bear his name; and have accounted for it, by observing that no objection had been made to his character at Thessalonica or Philippi; and that having received a present from them, he might not seem to be burdensome as an apostle of Christ. Perhaps it rather was because Timothy or Silas, who were neither of them apostles are joined with him here and in the epistles to the Thessalonians. But I think the question seems to have its foundation in curiosity rather than use. See Pierce in loc.

c The

- sect. 1. respect the bishops and deacons of the society, to whom the oversight of it in the Lord is so peculiarly committed; wishing abundant success to their labours in their respective and important offices:
- Phil. 1. 1. 2 And wishing to every private Christian under their care, whether personally known or unknown, grace even to you all, and perpetual peace, with every attendant blessing from God, who is now become our covenant-God and reconciled Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, though whose blood, righteousness, and intercession, we are brought into so happy a relation to him.
- 3 When I Paul am addressing a church dear to me by so many bonds, and to whom I am under so many distinguished obligations, it is fit I should assure you, that I give thanks unto my God, for such he is, and I recollect it with unspeakable delight, in every mention of you; whether before the throne of grace, or when conversing
- 4 with my fellow-Christians. And the former occasion of mentioning you often occurs: for I am always in every prayer of mine making humble supplication for you all, and mingling those intercessions with joy and praise, when I reflect on that honourable profession which you make, and that steady and exemplary conduct by which you support and adorn it.
- 5 Yes my brethren, though several years are since passed, I think myself obliged to bless God with all the united powers of my soul, for your participation in the blessings of the gospel^d, from the first day of my preaching it among you, though soon attended with menaces and insults; scourging and imprisonment; and to praise him for

with the bishops and deacons:

2 Grace be unto you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 I thank my God upon every remembrance of you,

4 (Always in every prayer of mine for you all, making request with joy;)

5 For your fellowship in the gospel from the first day until now:

e The bishops and deacons] As this proves there must have been more than one bishop at Philippi, it has been apprehended, by many pious and learned men, to be an intimation that there was then no difference between bishops and presbyters, all the presbyters of this church having as they suppose the title given them here of bishops, overseers, or superintendants; for this is what the word ἐπισκοποι beyond all controversy imports. Dr. Whitby (in his note on this place) solidly asserts this interpretation, and confutes that which would give the words a contrary, and I think a very unnatural, turn. Some think the deacons are mentioned as having been particularly concerned in the liberal supply that was sent from this church to the apostle, which had been probably collected by them.

d Participation in the gospel.] Some by κοινωνία εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον understand their communicating something to the support of the gospel, and particularly to the supply of the apostle's necessities, referred to chap. iv. 16, and 2 Cor. xi. 9; but to partake, and to communicate, are words of different signification, and it is evident that the original word generally signifies the former rather than the latter. Compare 1 Cor. i. 9; 2 Cor. viii. 4; xiii. 13; Phil. iii. 10; Pluſem. ver. 6; 1 John i. 3, 6; 7.

6 Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you, will perform it unto the day of Jesus Christ:

7 Even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, because I have you in my heart; inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the gospel, ye all are partakers of my grace.

8 For God is my record, how greatly I long after you all, in the bowels of Jesus Christ.

9 And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment;

* As ye are all partakers with me.] Perhaps the grammar of this sentence would have been better expressed, if I had rendered it pretty agreeably to what Dr. Whitby would propose, "You who are all partakers of grace with me in my bonds, for that establishment and increase which he hath been pleased to give to the seed that was sown, and which his grace maintains even until now. And he will still maintain it, for [I am] confident of this very thing, that he who hath begun a good work in and upon you, and which I have now the pleasure of seeing so far advanced, will not finally forsake the production of his own grace, but will finish [it] in your souls, until he raise it to full perfection, in the day of Jesus Christ, when he shall appear in all his glory.

Such are the sentiments of my heart with respect to you, and such the concern I have upon your account; as it is indeed just in me to be thus affected towards you all, because I know you have me in your hearts, both in these my bonds for the sake of Christ, and in my defence and confirmation of the gospel, while I am pleading its cause in the midst of so much opposition and danger: as you are all partakers with me in the grace of that gospel ^e which establishes a community of interests between us; and, as you so tenderly and faithfully shew your sense of it, I cannot but return it. Thus I say it ought to be, and thus it is, for God, who discerns all the secret recesses of my heart, is my witness, how earnestly I long for you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ. He knows that I long to see you, with that peculiar tenderness of affection which nothing but these bonds of mutual faith and love, centering in him, can be capable of producing, and which greatly resembles the compassion which Christ himself feels for those whom his grace has made the members of his body. And, in the mean time, this I continue to pray for in your behalf, as the best blessing I can ask of God for you, that your love to one another, and to all the saints, may abound yet more and more: and that it may be a rational and truly Christian affection, founded in a thorough knowledge of the principles which tend so much to endear us to each other, and in all that inward for the defence and confirmation of the gospel." But the sense is nearly the same, and the order in which the words lie in the original is much more convenient for the paraphrasing than that to which they would be reduced by such a transposition.

1 Pet.
1. 6.

ward feeling and perception of these sacred ties which nothing but true experimental religion can give ^f. So as to prove by experience things which differ ^g, and know by trial, how incomparably excellent the Christian character is beyond any other; that ye may be found not only sincere and cordial, but altogether inoffensive through the whole of your Christian course, 11 even until the great day of Christ: Being filled with all the genuine fruits and effects of righteousness^h which are produced by virtue of a vital faith in Jesus Christ, and by strength and influence derived from him, to the glory and praise of God; for that great end of the gospel-revelation is never more effectually answered than when the temper and conduct of those who profess it, is agreeable to its sacred dictates.

10 That ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere, and without offence till the day of Christ;

11 Being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. 1. AMIDST the numberless mercies with which, through the indulgence of our heavenly Father, we are daily surrounded, what can demand our humble and grateful acknowledgments more than our participation of the gospel? To whatever afflictions it may expose us, or whatever we may be called so sacrifice to its interests, every day, in which we share its comforts and supports, 3 calls aloud for our praises, both in the enjoyment and in the recollection. And whilst we look back with these sentiments of gratitude, let us look forwards with cheerful confidence. It is to God's having begun a good work in us, that we are to ascribe it, that the glorious gospel of his Son is our joy and our wonder, rather 6 than our aversion and our scorn. We may therefore be humbly confident, that he will not forsake the work of his own hands, but will finish it, so that it shall appear worthy of himself in the great day of the Lord.

No

[^f All knowledge and perception.] We render it knowledge and judgment, and the former is explained of speculative, and the latter of practical knowledge: but I think the distinction between the ideas suggested by the original is much better preserved, by rendering the word αἰσθησις, perception, or inward sensation. He wishes they might not only know the principles which recommend candor and benevolence, but feel their influence on their hearts; which a daily experience and observation shew us, in some great pretenders to this kind of knowledge, is a very different thing.

[^g Things which differ.] Mr. Howe justly asserts this translation, as well as that preferred in the preceding note, and introduces this text, to shew that we need the light of the Spirit to hold us to apprehend, to consider, to judge, and determine our actions agreeably to that judgment. Howe on the Spirit, Vol. I. p. 271.

[^h Fruits of righteousness.] If this have, as some imagine, a more peculiar reference to liberality, yet I see no reason for confining it to that interpretation; nor do I think it can properly be said, that every liberal and generous man is filled with all the fruits of righteousness, unless there be a prevailing uniformity of character, which is not always to be found.

No wonder that where this blessed work is begun, there is a great ^{sect.} affection between those who were the instruments of producing it, ^{1.} and those in whom it is produced. No wonder if Paul made mention of these his Christian converts at Philippi, in every prayer of ^{Ver.} his, offering up requests for them, and for the increase of their hope and love. No wonder, on the other side, if their hearts were tenderly set upon him, and that distant as he was, he seemed to lodge there, and their tender care followed him through every circumstance of his bonds and apology; so that his sufferings and dangers were even more painful to them than their own: while he on his part longed for them all in the bowels of the Lord, and could conceive of no greater charm in liberty itself than that it might give him an opportunity of cultivating so endearing a friendship by personal converse.

The increase of love founded on knowledge, and attended with other sentiments of experimental religion, is to be numbered among the best of apostolic blessings. Every experience of these things will confirm our resolution of maintaining that godly sincerity, which will render our conversation unblameable, and our account in the day of the Lord comfortable. To glorify God by the fruits of righteousness, is the great end for which these rational natures were given us; and it is by the exercise of lively faith in Christ that these dispositions are cultivated, and these fruits rendered most abundant.

SECT. II.

The Apostle informs the Philippians how his imprisonment at Rome had been providentially over-ruled for the service of the gospel; and strongly declares his cheerful hope and confidence, that this great object of his wishes should still be promoted, whatever events might be allotted to him. Phil. I. 12—20.

PHIL. I. 12.

BUT I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me, have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel:

PHILIPPIANS I. 12.

MY dear friends, I am fully convinced of the tenderness of your affection for me; and, as I have declared above, I do you the justice to believe, that you have me in your heart, while I continue under this confinement for the testimony of Jesus. ^{sect.} ^{ii.} ^{Phil.} ^{I. 12.} But I would have you to know, my much beloved brethren, that the things relating to me, some of which have given you so much concern, on the most friendly and generous principles, have been so over-ruled by the Divine wisdom and goodness, that indeed they have serm.

ii.

Phil.
I. 13.

have fallen out rather to the advancement than hindrance of the gospel, which ye were ready to fear. So that my bonds in Christ are manifest^d, and taken notice of in all the palace of Cæsar, and all other [places] in and about the city, and have seemed so remarkable, that many have been excited to inquire, much to their own satisfaction and advantage, what there was in this new and unknown religion, that could animate me so cheerfully to endure so much hardship and persecution in its defence; for they soon traced up my sufferings to this as their only 14 cause. And this had so happy an effect, that many of the brethren in the Lord, instead of being discouraged, were emboldened by my bonds, when they saw my firmness and constancy under them, so as to venture with much more undaunted courage to preach the word of the gospel, which our enemies thought, by their persecution of me, to have discountenanced and silenced.

15 Indeed I cannot say, that all who have engaged in this work have acted upon the noblest principles; for some preach Christ even from envy and contention, desirous to maintain in the church a party that shall oppose me, and willing to add as many abettors to it as they possibly can; while others do it out of [sincere] affection, faithfully intending the honour of God, the interest of the Redeemer, and the advancement of human happiness, which is so inseparably connected with the success of Christianity in the world.

16 The first indeed preach Christ out of strife, and not with purity and simplicity of intention, but on the contrary, from the unkindest and unworthiest motive, as desirous to add yet more affliction to my bonds, by strengthening the cause of those, who, while they call themselves Christians, seem to place a point of honour and conscience in hurting my reputation, and abetting unreasonable prejudices, which have been so eagerly raised and propagated, to the disadvantage of my character.

17 Whereas others [preach] him out of cordial love, and, amidst the many other

13 So that my bonds in Christ are manifest in all the palace, and in all other places;

14 And many of the brethren in the Lord waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear.

15 Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will.

16 The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds:

17 But the other of love, knowing that I am

^a So that my bonds in Christ are manifest.] Mr. Pierce would render it, so that it is manifest, both in the praetorium and elsewhere, that my bonds are for Christ, i. e. that I suffer only for the sake of Christianity, and not for any real crime; and he argues from the order of the words, φανερὸν ἐστὶν φανερὸν γίνεσθαι; but I think this interpretation would require γίνεσθαι to be read twice, which would be a much greater difficulty in the construction than the latter translation he would avoid. Nevertheless, in the close of the paraphrase, I have included this thought, am set for the defence of the gospel.

18 What then; notwithstanding every way, whether in pretence or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice.

19 For I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ.

20 According to my earnest expectation, and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness, as always, so now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death.

b I am set.] Some would render κωλύω, I lie, i. e. in bonds for the gospel, in order to make an apology for it.

c My salvation.] Mr. Pierce explains σωτηρία as signifying deliverance from prison, and thinks, that as they that preached Christ out of love made more friends for other noble and benevolent views on which they act, have some regard to that comfort which they are sure it will administer to me, as they know that I am raised up, and set^b in the place in which I appear for the defence of the gospel; and that nothing can make my sorrows and distresses sit so light upon me as to see that this blessed cause is in some measure promoted by them. What then is the result of these attempts, proceeding from such different principles? It is, that I am, in one view or another, pleased with them both: for though I could inwardly wish that all, engaged in so honourable a work, were pursuing it from the most worthy and generous motives, yet every way, whether it be only in pretence of pious zeal, or in the truth of it, Christ is however preached, and the great doctrine of salvation by him has something of a wider spread. And in this I heartily rejoice, yea, and I will continue to rejoice: for I had much rather that some, who are converted to Christianity by my enemies, should think as ill of me as they themselves do, than that they should remain ignorant of those fundamental truths, on the knowledge of which their eternal happiness depends. Nor do I much regard the opposition which may arise against me from the ill-designing teachers, or their misguided followers: for I well know, that, disagreeable as its present effects are, even this shall issue in promoting my salvation, by your continued prayer to God for me, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, which shall be liberally dealt out in answer to it: According to my earnest expectation, and cheerful hope, that I shall in nothing be ashamed, whatever injurious reflections may be made upon my conduct; but [that], by all the freedom of speech which I am still determined to use, as it hath always been hitherto [so] now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether by its liberty or confinement, whether in life or in death. When I consider all possible contingencies that can arise in this view, I find my 11.

12.
13.
14.
15.
16.
17.

the apostle, so they that preached him out of envy gave his friends an opportunity of representing his persecutions as proceeding upon principles of malice. But, to wave other remarks, I cannot think that such an event could be said to proceed from the supply of the Spirit of Christ.

SECT.
ii.
Phil.
I. 20.

my heart most cheerfully reconciled to them all, and, instead of trembling at the thought of martyrdom itself, I rather rejoice in it.

IMPROVEMENT.

How admirable is the conduct of Divine Providence! and in how beautiful a manner does it often work the purposes it wisely and graciously determines, by events which seem to have the most contrary tendency! Who could have imagined that the imprisonment of St. Paul should have been effectual to the advancement of Christianity? Thus can God animate and encourage his servants, by the extremity which their brethren suffer in his cause; so that they shall wax confident by their bonds and their martyrdom. Let this then reconcile us to all the allotments of Providence, and establish us in an earnest expectation and hope that Christ will be glorified in all things by us, whether by our life or death: and who, that knows the grace of God in truth, would not rejoice even in death itself, if the gracious Redeemer, who gave his own life for us, may thereby be magnified?

15 How execrable the temper of those who preached Christ out of envy and contention, and managed a ministry which should have breathed nothing but love, in a view of adding affliction to those bonds that oppressed this best of men! But how generous and amiable the disposition which the apostle expresses when he rejoices in this, that Christ was preached, though the purposes with regard to him were so unkind! These are the wonders which the love of Jesus produces in the soul; thus doth it empty us of every malignant passion, and reconcile us to the most disagreeable events, that may advance his interests. Where such principles inspire the breast, the faithful servants of Jesus will find their own account, while they are wholly intent on his honour. All these events shall turn to their salvation; but let it be remembered, that it is through the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ which sanctifies to us every circumstance through which we pass. That these supplies may be imparted, let us unite our prayers in favour of all who love our common Lord in sincerity. (Eph. vi. 24.)

SECT. III.

Paul freely lays open to the Philippians the sentiments of his heart as to life and death, declaring his desire to be with Christ in a better world, but his readiness to continue here for his Lord's service; and entreats them, that, while he did so, he might have the joy to hear that, though he were absent, they maintained the honour of their Christian character, both for piety and courage. Phil. I. 21—30.

PHIL. I. 21.

FOR me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.

PHILIPPIANS I. 21.

I HAVE expressed my expectation and my hope that Christ will be glorified in me, whether by life or by death, and it is a hope which I am encouraged to form by a consciousness of the temper I feel in my heart. For to me to live [is] Christ^a; he is the supreme end of my life, and I value it only, as it is capable of being referred to the purposes of his honour. And, in consequence of this, to die [is] gain; for as this temper argues my interest in the friendship of that Redeemer, who is the Lord of the invisible as well as the visible world, I am well satisfied that he will make ample provision for my happiness when I quit this transitory life, and surround me with far more important blessings than any which I must then resign. And if he determines that I live longer in the infirmities and sorrows of mortal flesh, I desire to acquiesce; for this [is] what I esteem the great fruit of my life and labour, and an ample equivalent for all its fatigues, that I may be capable in some measure of promoting the great end which engaged him for a while to make his abode here in this humble form of human nature. And thus, on the whole, which I should choose, if it were entirely referred to myself, I know not: For I am, as it were, borne two different ways^b; having, on the one hand, a more

SECT.

III.

Phil.

I. 21.

22 But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour: yet what I shall choose I wot not.

23 For I am in a strait betwixt two, having

^a To me to live is Christ, &c.] Mr. Pierce would translate this clause, This is gain to me living or dying. But the paraphrase shews how it stands connected on a haunting our version. Nor can I think the other version natural, as it quite destroys the antithesis in those members of the sentence which are opposed to each other.

^b Borne to different ways; εναντιον εν ταυτοις.] The εναντιον is very emphatical; and it seems (according to the turn I have given to the προτιμω) to be an allusion

SECT.
iii.
Phil.
I. 23.

more earnest desire, out of regard to my own immediate happiness, to be unbound; to weigh anchor, as it were, and, quitting these mortal shores, set sail for that happy world, where I shall be immediately with Christ, which is better beyond all comparison and expression, than a longer abode here would be, where I to regard only my own immediate comfort and happiness:

24 But to abide in the flesh [is] I know more expedient and necessary for you and my fellow-

25 Christians, who need my farther assistance. And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide, and I am heartily willing, though my own personal glory be delayed, to continue with you all, in order to the advancement of your faith, and

26 of that joy which is supported by it: That your boasting and rejoicing in me may in and through Christ Jesus be more abundant, and your Christian consolation greatly increased, by my coming among you again to make you another visit, when I am enlarged from my present confinement; as, when it has answered the schemes of Providence with respect to it, I hope I shall be.

27 Only, let me always urge this upon you, that your conversation may be such as becomes the gospel having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better:

24 Nevertheless, to abide in the flesh is more needful for you.

25 And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all, for your furtherance and joy of faith;

26 That your rejoicing may be more abundant in Jesus Christ for me, by my coming to you again.

27 Only let your conversation be as it becometh allusion to a ship stationed at a particular place, and riding at anchor, and at the same time likely to be forced to sea by the violence of the winds; which presents us with a lively representation of the apostle's attachment to his situation in the Christian church, and the vehemence of his desire to be unbound, as I have rendered αποδεσσαι, that is, to weigh anchor and set sail for the heavenly country.

c Be immediately with Christ.] This plainly proves that the separate spirits of good men are with Christ in such a manner, as that their state is far better than while they continue in this present world; which a state of insensibility cannot possibly be. But Mr. Fleeming very justly observes, that it will not at all disprove that large accession of happiness after the resurrection which other scriptures plainly declare. Flem. Christ. Vol. III. p. 550. Compare 2 Cor. v. 5-10. The original phrase, πάλω μάλλον κτιστων, which we render far better, is so very emphatical, that I cannot translate it literally, and I know not how better to imitate the sense, than by rendering it better beyond all expression; for indeed the apostle seems to labour for expression here as much as in any part of his writings.

d I know I shall abide.] Probably, as Mr. Howe conjectures (Vol. II. p. 89), he had some particular revelation to ground this confidence upon. I can by no means think he refers to any intimation from the palace how it was likely to go with him. He must have known little of princes and courtiers (especially in Nero's reign), to build so confidently on such a foundation.

e The advancement of your faith and joy.] Your furtherance and joy of faith is a more literal translation; but as it expresses nothing more than that here given, which is rather plainer and easier to be understood, I hope I need make no apology for such a liberty here and in several other places.

f Let your conversation.] The learned Professor Franckius thinks a parenthesis begins with these words, which is continued to the end of the 16th verse of the next chapter; but it appears to me neither necessary nor natural to allow it. The word πολιτευεσθε signifies, most literally, to behave as denizens of some city or corporation; but to render it, as Dr. Scott proposes (Christian Life, Vol. I. p. 42), citizen it as becomes, &c. is making a great deal too free with the English language.

becometh the gospel of Christ: that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel;

28 And in nothing terrified by your adversaries, which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God.

29 For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake;

30 Having the same conflict which ye saw in gospel of Christ, and may do an honour to your profession of his religion; that so whether I come to visit you, or be long absent from you, I may see and hear concerning you, that ye stand fast in one Spirit, striving together as with one soul, and in the most vigorous united efforts, for the faith of the gospel; which it will be your interest to contend for, how violently soever your mightiest adversaries may attempt to wrest it out of your hands. And indeed I hope it will appear, 28 that you are not in any degree terrified; by all the rage and fury of your enemies, which, when duly considered, is to them an evident token of surely and quickly approaching destruction^b, as nothing can be a more certain sign that they are ripe for it, than the prevalency of such a persecuting spirit among them; but to you it is a sure evidence of complete salvation, quickly to be revealed, and that from God himself, who will reward your pious fortitude with blessings proportionably distinguished. And in this view, 29 I would have you to look upon these trials, and, instead of dreading them, to be thankful for them. For it is granted to you as a favour on the part of Christ, our great Lord, not only to believe in him, but also that you should have the distinguished honour to suffer for his sake; in consequence of which you will be entitled to the peculiar rewards of those who have been martyrs and confessors in the cause of his truth. (Compare Acts v. 41.) Having in a great 30 measure the same struggle with the adversaries of the gospel, who labour to overbear it by brutal

HEB.
III.

Phil.
I. 27.

g Not in any degree terrified, &c.] It evidently appears from hence, and from several other passages in this epistle, that the Philippians were now in a suffering state, which is a circumstance to be borne in mind as we go on, as it illustrates several masterly strokes in the apostle's address to them.

h Evident token of destruction.] Mr. Pierce, by interpreting it, "they think it a proof of your being obstinately bent on your own ruin," loses the true sense and spirit of the passage.

i Suffer for his sake.] From this text and some parallel passages, such as 1 Thess. xi. 14; 2 Tim. iii. 2; Heb. x. 32; 1 Pet. i. 6; some may object to what Dr. Lardner has asserted, when he says, that most of the first persecutions which the Christians suffered came from the Jews. It is no wonder if that obstinate and cruel people were peculiarly enraged against the disciples of Jesus, who so expressly contradicted many of their favourite maxims and tenets. And though, to be sure, their greatest influence was in Judæa, yet it is well known that in other places they had a power of imprisoning and scourging in the synagogues, and it is highly probable that many of the severities inflicted by Gentile magistrates on the first preachers of the gospel were at the instigation of the Jews who dwelt in the cities over which these magistrates presided. Compare Acts xii. 3; xiii. 50; xiv. 19; xvii. 5, 19; xviii. 12; xix. 9. See Dr. Lardner's Creed. Vol. 1. p. 417. &c.

L. 260

SECT.
iii.Phil.
I. 30.

tal violence, as ye saw to be in me^k when I was among you at Philippi, and was stripped and scourged, and laid in the dungeon and in the stocks, and which you now hear [to be] in me at Rome; whither you know I was sent in bonds as an evil doer, having been obliged to appeal to Cæsar for the preservation of my life, when attempted by enemies who would be contented with nothing less than my blood, which they had solemnly bound themselves to shed.

in me, and now hear to be in me.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. How happy must that man be, who can truly say that to him
 21 to live is Christ, and to die gain! What a blessed alternative is before him, and how cheerfully may he leave it to Providence to decide which of the two shall be appointed for him! And yet how vain must life be, and how miserable death, to that man who cannot say it! He that gathereth not with Christ, scattereth abroad (Mat. xii. 30); and when death comes to such an one, it is the loss of all, attended with the final, and alas! the eternal 23 loss of himself. While the good man pronounces it better, beyond all comparison, to depart, that he may be with Christ, and submits only to continue in life, as the part in which self-denying duty
 24, 25 requires him to acquiesce. But, O! how unworthy the Christian character, to be averse to so advantageous a remove! To be un-
 22 willing, and that even on such terms, to depart and to be with Christ! As if any converse, any friendship, any enjoyment, any hope here, were comparable; yea, as if it were preferable to serving him in his immediate presence, under the everlasting tokens of his acceptance and delight.

But if that Master, whom we have the honour to serve, determine to us an abode here for months and years to come, and his 25 church may receive advantage by it, ill shall we requite his love, who quitted heaven for this sinful and wretched earth of ours, if we are unwilling for a while to wait till he shall call us up to himself. Very deficient shall we be in that gratitude and zeal which we owe him if we find not something of a heaven begun even below, in doing what may be pleasing to him, in managing his interest, with such degrees of ability as he shall be pleased to honour us with, and so training up others to a meetness for those

^k Saw to be in me.] I see not why this should be explained as referring only, or chiefly, to his conflicts with judaizing teachers, concerning which at Philippi we read nothing. This seems one of the many texts which may be expounded in a greater latitude than that in which some late learned commentators and critics have taken it. It would be tedious to mark all instances of a like kind.

those enjoyments which he hath taught us by his grace to expect and pursue.

Whatever our stations may be, whether in public or private life, let it be our care, in every circumstance and relation, that our conversation may be as becometh the gospel; that we may adorn so holy a profession, and answer so glorious a hope. If opposition arise, let it not terrify us. It will, if well supported, be a token of salvation, and that of God. Let us account it an honour, and the gift of the Divine favour to us, to be called and strengthened to suffer for his sake. So were the prophets, so were the apostles, dignified. We have heard of their noble contentions, that we might emulate them; and well may we do it, since we have the same Author, Finisher, and Support of our faith, and hope to partake of the same exceeding and eternal weight of glory. (2 Cor. iv. 17.)

SECT. IV.

The Apostle exhorts the Philippians to unanimity and candour, and a tender care for the interest of each other; which he enforces by the generous and condescending love of our blessed Redeemer: of whose humiliation and exalted estate he discourses in a very affectionate manner; pressing them to a due improvement of it, as what would most highly conduce to their own happiness and his comfort. Phil. II. 1—16.

Phil. II. 1.

IF there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies;

PHILIPPIANS II. 1.

I HAVE been expressing my concern, that your conversation might be worthy of the gospel; and, as nothing can conduce more to it than the exercise of mutual love, permit me, my dear brethren, to enforce farther upon you, by every pathetic consideration which our common faith and most holy religion can suggest: and particularly by the affectionate remembrance of my sufferings and your own. Compare i. 30. If therefore [there be] any consolation in Christ himself, the great Source of all our enjoyments and hopes, for whose sake we have endured so many extremities; if there be any comfort and delight in the exercise of the most tender and endeared love; if there be any communion of hearts, founded upon the communication of one and the same Spirit, working in all our souls; if there be on the whole any bowels in human nature, and any compassions, either manifested

by

SECT.
iv.
Phil.
II. 2.

by God to us, or wrought into the constitution of our being by the great Author of it: In a word, if there be any affectionate bond, by which you are united to me, who have been by Divine grace made your spiritual father, and by whose ministry you have been made acquainted with these engaging views; complete ye my joy, and endeavour to fill my heart with the most exalted pleasure, while I lie in these bonds, for my fidelity to God and to you. Now in this view I am desirous, beyond expression, that ye may all be unanimous^a, maintaining the same love, however your sentiments, and, in some instances, your practice may be divided; still having your souls joined together, and all their ardour combined in attending to the one great thing, which ought to be the leading concern of every Christian, the advancement of vital, practical holiness: by attending diligently to which, you will be diverted from those undue attachments to smaller matters, which so often divide the affection of Christians, and take them off from the pursuit of the noblest objects.

- 3 And in this view especially guard against pride, and [let] nothing [be done] or said, out of a spirit of contradiction and contention, or from vain-glory, to draw the eyes of others upon you, and make yourselves the subjects of discourse and admiration; but in unaffected simplicity and lowliness of mind, esteeming others as more excellent than yourselves; which, on one account or another, you may know almost every 4 one to be. Do not every one aim at his own separate interests, profits and conveniences, but aim each of you also at promoting the interests of others: be always ready to deny yourselves for the general good, and to condescend to one another, as the happiness of every particular brother and friend may require.

2 Fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind.

3 Let nothing be done through strife, or vain glory, but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than themselves.

4 Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.

In

a Unanimous, &c.] It is difficult to translate or paraphrase these words so as to avoid some appearance of tautology. In my third letter to the author of Christianity not founded on Argument, p. 43. I had given a translation in the main the same with this; but on further examination, whereas I had there united the second and third clause, as an explanation of the first, let your souls be joined together in the same love, I here, as in my Sermon on Christian candour, p. 8.) join the two former and two latter clauses, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν, τὴν αὐτὴν ἀγαπᾶν ἑχούσι; be unanimous, maintaining the same love; συμπέχουσι, τὸ ἐν φρονεῖν, having your souls joined together, in attending to the one thing. An improvement, for which I am obliged to my learned, accurate, and worthy friend Dr. Daniel Scott.

5 Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus:

6 Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God:

7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men:

In this respect, and in every other, let the same mind be in every one of you, which was also in so eminent and amiable a degree in Christ Jesus, whom we call our Master and our Lord; Even in that illustrious and adorable Person, who, being long before his appearance in human flesh, in the form of God^b, and having been from eternal ages possessed of Divine perfections and glories, when manifesting himself to the patriarchs and prophets of old, thought it not robbery and usurpation to be and appear as God^c, assuming the highest Divine names, titles, and attributes, by which the supreme Being has made himself known, and receiving from his servants divine honours and adoration: Nevertheless, in his infinite condescension and compassion to us miserable sinners, emptied himself of all his glory, taking [upon him] instead of the splendors which he had been used to wear as the Sovereign of angels, the humble form not only of a common man, but even of a servant, when made in the likeness of men, which itself had been a most astonishing stoop, even though he had appeared

101.
11
Phil.
II. 5.

^b Who bring in the form of God.] Few of my readers can be ignorant of the pains learned men have taken to establish two very different translations and senses of this important text, and of the contrary uses which have been made of it in the controversy relating to the Deity of our ever-blessed Redeemer. The critics, who would render ἐκ ἀμοιβάτων ἰσότητος, &c. did not eagerly catch at a likeness to, or equality with God, build a great deal of their argument on the opposition of the two clauses and the force of the particle ἀλλ. It did not affect this equality, but humbled himself. I have often wondered at the stress laid on this, since every one must know that ἀλλ often signifies nevertheless, and accordingly it is frequently rendered so in our version, particularly Mark xiv. 26; John xi. 15; 1 Cor. ix. 12; Gal. iv. 50; 2 Tim. i. 12. And, which is especially to the present purpose, it is sometimes thus rendered, when preceded by the particle καί; see Rom. v. 13, 14; 2 Cor. xii. 16. I have given such an interpretation of the passage as appeared to me, on mature deliberation most agreeable to the text itself, in comparison with other scriptures; and the learned reader cannot be at a loss to find the opinion of the most celebrated writers on each side of the question relating to it. I hardly recollect any that have discussed it with more accuracy than Bos in his Tract. 2d Ed. p. 196—207; and Sir Richard Tilgh, in his Fortuna Sacra, p. 178—228. Bishop Burnet well observes, that the Socinian interpretation is extremely cold and insipid, as if it were a mighty argument of humility that, though Christ wrought miracles, which they strangely think signified by the phrase of being in the form of God, yet he did not sit up for supreme deity. See Burnet on 1 Cor. p. 32.

^c To be and appear as God.] So 102 is most exactly rendered, agreeable to the force of καί in many places in the Septuagint, which Dr. Whitby has collected in his note on this place. The proper Greek phrase for equal to God, is ἰσότητος, which is used, John v. 18. Mr. Perce thus paraphrases the clause before us, "He was not eager in retaining that likeness to God, of which he was before possessed; and he observes, that, had it referred to what was considered as future, the expression would have been ἐπιθυμῶ not ἴσως, and farther pleads, that the apostle's design here is not to caution the Philippians against coveting what they had no claim to, but to engage them, after the example of Christ, to give up their own right for the advantage of others."

sect.
iv.
Phil.
II. 8.

in the pomp of the greatest monarch. And yet even this condescension to the rank of low life among sinful mortals, wonderful as it was, did not content him: for, being found in fashion and appearance as a man, and having put on all the innocent infirmities of our nature, he humbled himself still farther, becoming obedient even unto death; and indeed to no common and gentle form of dissolution, but to the ignominious, as well as painful death of the cross, on which he expired, as you well know, like one of the vilest and most accursed of mankind.

- 9 Therefore God his Father, to whom such a course of filial obedience, proceeding from such noble principles of piety and charity, could not but be most acceptable, hath exalted him to the most eminent dignity^d, and granted him a name the honours of which are superior to those of every other name that can come in comparison
10 with it; So that in the name of Jesus, in humble subjection to his authority and command, every knee shall bow, and every spirit submit, of celestial [beings,] in their various orders of dignity and glory, as well as of those upon and under the earth^e: angels and men, the living and the dead, yea, devils themselves shall do him homage: and he be ever adored, as the Saviour of his redeemed people, as the Head of all holy and happy spirits, and the Sovereign and uncontrollable Lord of all those whose rebellion against him and his heavenly Father hath made them the worthy objects of perpetual dis-
11 pleasure and punishment. And thus hath God taken effectual measures, that every tongue may confess that Jesus Christ, his anointed Son, [is] indeed Lord of all, to the glory of God the Father, in whose name he administers his mediatorial kingdom, and to whose honour he professedly refers it.

8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

9 Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name:

10 That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth;

11 And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

Therefore,

^d God hath exalted him to the most eminent dignity.] This seems a more natural translation of the word ὑψώσας, than what Mr. Peirce proposes, who would render it, exalted him higher than before. I think nothing can be more evident than that he who was exalted was humbled, and consequently, that there was a proper change made in the state and condition of Christ, by that emptying himself spoken of ver. 7.

^e Those upon, and under the earth.] There can be no doubt but the former clause relates to Christ's being made Sovereign over the angelic spirits, Eph. i. 10. But whether this latter phrase, Things upon, and under the earth, may not relate to the living and the dead, rather than men and devils, some have queried; Compare Rev. i. 18; Rom. xiv. 9; and it is certain that the word ἄνεψυχοι sometimes in the Greek Classics signifies the dead. But on the whole, as the expression is ambiguous, I have, as I usually do in such cases, included both in the paraphrase.

12 Wherefore my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence: work out your own salvation with fear and trembling.

12 For it is God which worketh in you, both

Therefore, my beloved Christian brethren, as God hath, in the person of his Son, so gloriously rewarded that bright assemblage of virtue for which he was so incomparably illustrious, and particularly, that condescension, humility, and benevolence, which I have so earnestly been recommending to you; let it be considered by you, as an engagement to tread in his steps, with diligence and resolution, so far as the feeble powers of human nature may admit. And, as justice requires me to acknowledge that ye have always been obedient to my instructions and exhortations, while I have had the pleasure of being with you, be solicitous, that not only in my presence, but now much more in my absence^c (which though it deprives you of some advantages, yet as it is owing to my bonds in your cause, ought to increase the tenderness of your concern for my comfort,) you may work out your own salvation^d, with great earnestness and assiduity; yea, considering its infinite importance, with holy fear and trembling. I say your own salvation, for that will be most effectually secured and promoted by the temper I have now been recommending. Seize that happy opportunity of doing ¹³ it which Divine grace affords; for God is he who worketh in you^e, both to will and to perform of

SECT.
IV.

Phil.
II. 12.

[Much more in my absence.] Though there be an ambiguity in the connection of this clause, if the grammar only be considered, I think the sense obliges us to join it with the following, rather than with the preceding words. The paraphrase, suggests the reasons why his absence should make them more eagerly solicitous in working out their salvation: but I know no reason to apprehend that they were less obedient to Paul when he was with them, than to any messages they might have received in his absence, and the word now in this view seems decisive.

[Work out your own salvation.] Mr. Pierce has advanced a very peculiar interpretation of this text: for he would render it “promote the welfare of each other.” urging that αλλήλων sometimes signifies the same with αλλήλων; compare Eph. iv. 32. But not to insist on the expression, with fear and trembling, as greatly favouring the common interpretation, it is obvious, that αλλήλων is three times in this chapter put for our own things, ver. 3, 4, 21. And whereas it is pleaded on the other side, that the sense given above is most agreeable to the connection, it seems to me, that this turn in the expression rather suggests, that, by following those generous maxims the apostle had been recommending, they would also most effectually secure their own salvation; which instead of detracting any thing from the force of the argument, as the words are usually understood, greatly increases it.

[He who worketh in you.] The original is very emphatical, as Mr. Howe beautifully observes (Howe's Works, Vol. II. p. 21), for it asserts, on the one hand, that God is actually or continually operating, and on the other, that thus to work in the heart for such noble purposes, is the privilege of God, and an effect worthy his Divine attributes and perfections. I can by no means think with Dr. Clarke, that this merely signifies, that God hath given us a power to choose and to act (Past. Serm. Vol. VI. p. 69), but that it refers to the operation of Divine grace, as is strongly intimated by the concluding clause, of his own good pleasure; which Mr. Howe finely explains, not so much of his goodness in general, as of his independent

freedom

SECT. ii. of [his own] good pleasure. You ought therefore to consider every good affection and purpose which arises in your heart, as suggested by his grace, which waits upon you, to enable you to bring it into perfection. And remember, that he operates with such sovereign freedom, that if these condescending favours be slighted, they may in righteous displeasure be withdrawn; and I leave you, my dear brethren, to reflect how fatal the consequence would then be.

Phil II. 13. 14 Go on therefore resolutely in your whole Christian course, and let all things be done without those murmurings and disputings which so ill become the relation in which you stand to each other, and that community of interest in which, as the servants of this compassionate Saviour, you are united.

15 On the whole, let me, by every most affecting consideration, urge it upon you again and again, that ye may be blameless and inoffensive, and act up to the dignity of your relation as the children of God, maintaining an unexceptionable character, in the midst of all the malignity which you must expect to encounter from a perverse and crooked generation, with which ye are surrounded: amongst whom, be concerned that ye may shine as elevated lights ⁱ in the dark world about you; that you may direct those that sail on this dangerous sea, and secure them from suffering shipwreck on those fatal rocks which every where lie in their way. Thus must you, as you tender the lives and the souls of your fellow-

16 creatures, be continually holding out to them, for their guidance and instruction, the word of life, by which you have been directed to steer safely for the blessed haven of glory and immortality, and whereby they may receive the same benefit. A variety of important considerations concur to inspire you with so happy a resolution, and I doubt not but you will allow some both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

14 Do all things without murmurings and disputings:

15 That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perversenation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world:

16 Holding forth the word of life, that I may rejoice in the day of Christ; freedom in these operations; he works ανεξ επιβουλας, freely. Compare Mat. xi. 26, which suggests the caution expressed in the paraphrase.

ⁱ Shine as elevated lights, &c.] I am indebted to the learned and eloquent Mons. Saurin, for this version and paraphrase. He has justly and beautifully observed, that the word φωσος has this energy, and alludes to the buildings which we call light houses; the most illustrious of which was raised in the island of Pharos, when Ptolemy Philadelphus built that celebrated tower, on which a bright flame was always kept burning in the night, that mariners might perfectly see their way, and be in no danger of suffering shipwreck upon the rocks which they were to pass in their entrance into the haven at Alexandria. Saur. Sermon. Vol. IX. p. 460.

Christ; that I have not run in vain, neither laboured in vain.

some weight to this among the rest, that it will greatly tend to promote my rejoicing in the day of Christ, that it may appear I have not run through the course of my apostolic office in vain, nor laboured in the duties of it in vain; but that the great end of it has been at least in part answered, in the glory of God, by your salvation and usefulness.

SECT.
IV.
Phil.
II. 16.

IMPROVEMENT.

WE know the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. Few Christians are unacquainted with the remarkable phrases in which it is here expressed. But how few seriously pause upon it, and labour to affect their hearts with its important meaning! Who can conceive the dignity and glory of Christ, when in the form of God, and Ver. accounting it no robbery or usurpation to be as God? Who can conceive of that mysterious act; of that (if we may be allowed to say it), more than mysterious love, by which he emptied himself of this glory, that he might assume the humble form of a servant, 7 being found in fashion like a man, and then might stoop yet lower, 8 so as to become obedient to death, even the death of the cross? Often let us contemplate this amazing object: often let us represent to our admiring, to our dissolving hearts, the man Christ Jesus extended there, and pouring forth his soul in agony and blood. As often let us remember his high original, his Divine glories, the bosom of the Father, the throne of God. With pleasure let us reflect, that he is returned to it, and that, having ennobled this low nature of ours by so intimate an union with the Divine, God his Father, hath in that nature exalted him, and given him a name above every 9 name, human or angelic, in the visible, or in all the distant and different regions of the invisible world. Let our knees gladly bow 10 to so amiable a Sovereign, and let us with pleasure view the approaching day, when every knee shall submissively own his authority, and every tongue confess him Lord, to the glory of God the 11 Father.

In the mean time, let us never forget the purposes for which the apostle hath here called our meditations to these wonderful and instructive truths. It is to inculcate upon us (O may we ever inculcate it upon ourselves!) that the same mind may always be in 5 us that was also in him. That, if there be any consolation in such a Saviour, any comfort in such love, as he teaches, any bowels of 1, 2 tenderness in human nature, any endearing fellowship in the one Spirit which we derive from him, we may with united hearts
and

SECT. iv. and hands be carrying on the one great business of his servants, working out our salvation with fear and trembling; avoiding every Ver. thing that may grieve and injure others, every thing that may 12 discredit our holy profession. And being now made by him the 15 children of God, may we shine with a bright, steady flame, as lights in the world, and hold out, for the benefit of all around us, the word 16 of life, as the gospel which redeems us from the second death, and raises us to eternal life, may properly be called. May we spread its lustre through as wide a circle as possible, and with it that happiness, which nothing but a cordial belief of it and subjection to it can bring to the human heart.

To conclude, let us learn, from these wise and pious exhortations of the apostle, at once our duty and our dependence; our duty to work out our own salvation; our dependence on the grace of 13 him, who worketh in us, both to will and to do, of his own good pleasure. And therefore let us so seek Divine grace, and rest upon it, as to exert with vigour and resolution the faculties which are to 12 co-operate with it; and let us so endeavour to exert the faculties which God hath given us, as to confide in Divine grace, and rest continually upon it; without which we shall neither will nor do any thing pleasing to God, or available to our own salvation: for in this sense, salvation is of the Lord, and through his blessing, which is upon his people. (Psal. iii. 8.)

SECT. V.

The Apostle assures the Philippians of his readiness even to die for their advantage, but expresses his hope of being set at liberty, and restored to them in person: in the mean time, he promises them very soon a visit from Timothy, and sends Epaphroditus for their immediate satisfaction; of whose late sickness, and ardent love for them, he speaks in very affectionate terms. Phil. II. 17, to the end.

PHILIPPIANS II. 17.

SECT. v.

Phil. II. 17.

I HAVE been expressing my hope, that your temper and behaviour will be such as would prove my labours among you not to have been in vain, and afford me matter of rejoicing in the day of the Lord. But it is impossible for me fully to express the earnestness with which I desire that it may be so. For if I should even be, if I may use such language, poured forth, and my blood be shed as a kind of libation, or drink.

PHIL. II. 17.

YEA, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all.

18 For the same cause also do ye joy, and rejoice with me.

19 But I trust in the Lord Jesus, to send Timothy shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort when I know your state.

20 For I have no man like-minded, who will naturally care for your state.

21 For all seek their own drink-offering^a, on the sacrifice and ministration of your faith, while you are presented by my means as an acceptable offering to God, far from lamenting that I should meet with death in such a cause, I rather rejoice, and congratulate you all on that happy circumstance into which you are brought by that gospel which I have at so great an expence delivered to you. And on this account, do you also rejoice and congratulate with me^b, for while suffering the last extremities in a cause like this, I am happy, and ought to be regarded as an object of congratulation rather than of condolence.

It will indeed be no surprise to me, if my work and testimony as an apostle should end in martyrdom, but, as I intimated above (chap. i. 25), I do not immediately expect it; and, in the mean time, would omit nothing which may shew my endeared affection to my Christian brethren, and particularly to you. In pursuance of which, I hope in the Lord Jesus, to whose direction and controul I desire to submit all my schemes, and in whose hand the life and the ways of his servants are, that I shall quickly be able to send Timothy to you; that by him, not only you, but I also may be refreshed, knowing from him [the state of] your affairs more particularly than I can otherwise hope to do. My respect for you inclines me to make choice of him on this occasion, though I can ill spare him; for I have none here with me in all respects of a like disposition, who will so naturally, with such a genuine tenderness and concern, take the care of your affairs.

Indeed a temper like this is too uncommon; for, great as our engagements and obligations a [If I should be poured forth, &c.] This is the proper import of the word $\sigma\tau\epsilon\lambda\lambda\alpha\mu\alpha$. Almost every reader must know, that as oil and wine made a part of the provisions of the table God had ordained in the Jewish ritual, that a proportionable quantity of each should attend every bullock, goat, ram, lamb, or kid, which was presented at his altar. The heathens also used such libations, and sometimes they used blood, mingled with wine, in honour of their idol deities. Compare Psal. xvi. 4. The apostle considers the faith of the Philippians as an acceptable sacrifice presented to God, and if he incurred martyrdom for his zeal to promote it, he might speak of his blood as a libation poured out upon occasions of it, with greater beauty and propriety than most commentators have observed.

b [Congratulate with me.] I cannot read this here, without comparing the of it without reflection on the behaviour of the orator Athenian, mentioned by Theophrastus, Athen. or. Op. p. 107, who returned to Athens from the victorious battle of Myrathon, intending to die, though he would not, he had retired in the evening, and coming directly to the house where the magistrates were assembled, and finding only these two words, $\sigma\tau\epsilon\lambda\lambda\alpha\mu\alpha$, pour me share of courage, and immediately dropped down dead at their feet.

SECT.
v.Phil.
II. 21.

to a contrary disposition are, I may say it with very few exceptions, that almost all seek their own things^c, none the things of Christ Jesus. It is hard to find, even among those that call themselves his disciples, any who have their Master's interest so affectionately at heart as not to neglect it, in some degree at least, out of regard to their own secular interest and pleasure, 22 ease and safety. But you know the experience of him, who was with me as well as Silas, in that memorable visit which I first made you (Acts xvi. 1, 12) ; and you had an opportunity of seeing, that as a son with a father, he served with me in the work of the gospel, and neglected no occasion of doing, in the most affectionate manner, whatever might lighten either my la- 23 bours or my sufferings. I hope therefore to send him very quickly to you, as soon as I see how my affairs will be determined. And though he be so useful to me, I shall be willing to spare 24 him upon your account. Till they come to a more certain crisis, I conclude it will be most agreeable to you that he should defer his journey. But I trust in the providence and care of the Lord Jesus Christ, to whose guardianship I commit the life I have devoted to his service, that I shall soon be set at liberty, and come to 25 you myself. Yet in the mean time, or at least till Timothy can be more conveniently spared, I thought it necessary and expedient to send to you Epaphroditus, my dear brother, and diligent fellow-labourer in the work, and fellow-soldier in the arduous combat and painful sufferings of Christ : but who was your most welcome messenger to me^d, and the ready minister to the relief of my necessities^e, by whose faithful hand I received own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's.

22 But ye know the proof of him, that as a son with the father, he hath served with me in the gospel.

23 Him therefore I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me.

24 But I trust in the Lord, that I also myself shall come shortly.

25 Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier, but your messenger, and he that ministered to my want:

c All seek their own things.] Perhaps the apostle may speak this in reference to the part which some Christians, and possibly some ministers at Rome had acted, to whom he might have proposed this journey ; which they might decline through too great a regard to their own ease and conveniency, which laid him under the necessity of parting with Timothy.

d Your messenger.] As the word is ἀποστολῶν, some would render it, your apostle, and they have stooped so low as to draw an argument from hence, to prove that he was their bishop in the modern sense of the word, and that such bishops are the immediate successors of the apostles in their extraordinary rank and power. But the ablest patrons of diocesan episcopacy have had the modesty and prudence to spare this argument, as it is so incongruous to suppose that he should be employed as a messenger to carry the churches alms to Paul, when he must have had such important business at home ; nor does what follows by any means agree with such a supposition. See Mr. Pierce's Vind. p. 538, &c.

e He that ministered to my necessities.] τῶν ἀποστολῶν μου.] Mr. Pierce follows Castello in rendering it, "he who is now to act for me with you." supposing the apostle's intention was to appoint Epaphroditus as his representative in the church, 26 For he longed after you all, and was full of heaviness, because that ye had heard that he had been sick.

27 For indeed he was sick nigh unto death: but God had mercy on him; and not on him only, but on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow.

28 I sent him therefore the more carefully, that when ye see him again, ye may rejoice, and that I may be the less sorrowful.

29 Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness and hold such in reputation:

30 Because for the work of Christ he was nigh unto death, not regarding his life to supply your lack of service toward me.

church, who was to supply his place during his absence, and whom therefore he styles πρωτοδικος. But the word γ; α is in other parts of this epistle, as well as elsewhere, used in such a manner as to favour the interpretation given in our version. Compare chap. iv. 16, 19.

ceived that liberal supply which your pious friendship so cheerfully advanced. Had I only consulted my own convenience and pleasure, I should have been glad to have detained him longer; but I now give him his dispatches, because he was exceedingly desirous of returning to you all, for whom he has a most endeared affection, and was much dejected and troubled because he knew you had heard that he was sick, and he feared lest the tidings should grieve you too much, as he could not but know how affectionately you love him. And indeed it is very true, that he was sick, and in all human appearance near to death: but God had mercy upon him, and recovered him; and I must say, in this instance, he had not compassion upon him alone, but also on me, that I might not have sorrow upon sorrow; as I certainly should have had, if the loss of such a beloved friend, and of so useful a person, had been added to all the other afflictions I sustain in this imprisonment, and amidst so much perverse and ungrateful opposition. I have therefore sent him away to you, with the greater diligence, that seeing him again in that comfortable state of health and spirit, to which by the Divine goodness he is now restored, ye might rejoice; and that I might be the less sorrowful, while I in spirit partake with you in this satisfaction which I know this interview will give on both sides. Receive him therefore as in the Lord Jesus Christ, as mindful of your mutual relation to him, with all joy, in the bowels of Christian love, as well as the demonstrations of natural friendship: and hold persons of such a character, whatever their station of life may be, in high estimation. For it was, in a great measure, on account of that zeal and fervour which he exercised in carrying on the work of the Lord Jesus Christ, both in preaching the gospel, and attending my necessities, that he was nigh unto death, having disregarded even [his own] life, that he might fill up the deficiency of your service to me, and might,

sect.
vi.

Phil.
11. 26.

if

[Nigh unto death.] The journey and change of air might contribute to his disorder, as well as the assiduity of his attendance on Paul, and dispatching his affairs in all weathers, and perhaps at all hours.

g. Deficiency of your service: To επιπληρωσει [επιπληρωσει] Mr. Pierce would

SECT.
V.
— if it were possible, perform to me in his own person all the kind offices which your whole society could have rendered me had you been with me as he was.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. 17, 18 To what sublime heights of piety and virtue does the immortal hope of the gospel elevate the mind of mortal man! Behold this holy apostle, not only presenting himself as a resolute victim at the altar of God, but speaking of that stroke by which his blood was to be poured out as an occasion of joy, and calling for the congratulation of his friends upon it! Behold him with pleasure resigning the society of those who were dearest and most useful to him, at a time when he seemed most of all to need their assistance; even of that friend, who would most naturally care for their estate, when he knew none that were like-minded! And O 20 that this might be the character of all the ministers of Christ naturally, and with genuine affection, to care for the state of those committed to them, taking thought for them and the oversight of them, not by constraint, but from a principle of love, which shall make all necessary labours natural and easy! But alas, how rare a character is it, and how much reason is there to lament the prevalency of a contrary disposition among all ranks of men, the sacred order itself not excepted; while all seek their own things, none the things of Jesus Christ!

21 What ingratitude does this argue! Yea what stupid insensibility, that any thing, that every thing, should be dearer to us than the interest of that Saviour who purchased us to himself with his blood! Happy they, who are distinguished by their fidelity and their zeal, in a time of prevailing apostacy! which we are not to wonder if we discover in these latter ages, when the apostles found cause to speak thus in their own. How beautiful a description does he here give of the piety and humility of young Timothy while serving with him as a son with a father in the gospel! Thus 22 let young and aged ministers behave to each other, as fathers and sons: the young paying the elder such reverend regards, the aged affording to the younger such kind and tender patronage, and shewing a solicitous concern to prepare them for filling up their place in the church with increasing advantage.

Some obvious instruction arises from what is here said of good Epaphroditus would render this, supply the remainder of your beneficence to me, which in sense is much the same. The apostle considers them as disposed to have rendered him what service they could in person; but not having an opportunity to do it themselves, the good Epaphroditus was in this respect their proxy and representative.

Epaphroditus, whose affection to his Christian friends was so ardent, and whose zeal for the work of Christ had even endangered his life. Great reason is there to hold such, wherever they are found in high esteem, tenderly to sympathize with them, earnestly to entreat God for them, if at any time diseases threaten their useful lives; and to own the mercy of God, not to them only, but to us, when he is pleased to raise them up, and restore them to a capacity of ministering in his church. Let us go back, in our memories, to the days and weeks of dangerous sickness which any of us have known, and humble ourselves before God, that we have no better improved for his glory, and for the good of his church, his mercy to us, in bringing us up from the gates of the grave.

SECT. VI.

Paul exhorts the Philippians to fix their whole dependence on Christ and his gospel, as he assures them he himself did, though he had more to glory in with respect to Jewish privileges and advantages than most who valued themselves so highly upon them. Phil. III. 1—14.

PHIL. III. 1.

FINALLY, my brethren, rejoice in the Lord. To write the same things to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe.

PHILIPPIANS III. 1.

AS for what remains, my dear brethren, that I may proceed to what I farther design in this epistle, let me exhort you, whatever may become of me, or of yourselves, so far as any worldly interest and prospect is concerned, that ye rejoice in the protection and care of the Lord Jesus Christ^a, our blessed Redeemer, and in the promises and hopes given us by him. I have already insisted upon them with pleasure, chap. i. 5, 6, 10, 11, 20, &c. chap. ii. 5, 11, and to write the same things, to you^b, on such a topic, [is] not grievous to me, and [it is] not only safe, but necessary for you; as nothing can tend more to fortify you against the many temptations

SECT. VI.

Phil. III. 1.

^a Rejoice in the Lord.] Some have apprehended a contrast with chap. ii. 25, 28, where he tells them, "he had sent Epaphroditus, that he might rejoice at his coming," as if he had said, And now I add, that while you are rejoicing in him, I would have you Rejoice in the Lord, discerning the interposition of Christ, in his being preserved and restored to you. In this connection it might have been made the conclusion of the second chapter, but it may so naturally, as in the paraphrase, introduce what follows, that I did not choose to alter the usual division.

^b To write the same things.] Diodeate thinks this is an intimation that he had written a former epistle to them which is now lost. Compare 1 Cor. v. 9; Col. iv. 16. Mr. Fleming thinks it refers to what he had said to them formerly, and that he only gives some hints at these larger conversations in the following verses, which he thinks makes them something obscure. Flem. on the first Rom. p. 70.

sect.
vi.

tions and enemies with which you are surrounded.

Phil.
III. 2.

And, in farther prosecution of my great design for your spiritual security and edification, let me urge you to beware of those invidious, malignant contentions persons, whom I cannot forbear calling dogs^c, so much have they of a brutal and canine disposition, snarling and malicious, greedy and fierce. Beware of evil workers, who, while they cry up the law, act in direct contradiction to its most important precepts and grand design. Beware of the circumcision, for such I must call that body of men which proudly usurps the name of the circumcision, whereas the external rite they so much contend for is but an unprofitable cutting and mangling the flesh, when performed from such principles, and imposed with such a temper: so that the bloody work of it may seem an emblem of the cruel manner in which they cut and ³ mangle the church. Be on your guard against them, I say it again and again, for, how unwilling soever they may be to allow it, we Christians are indeed the circumcision, who worship God, not with the ritual observance of the Mosaic law, but in spirit and in truth; who boast not in Jewish privileges, but in Christ Jesus, through whom we obtain Divine favour and acceptance, and have no confidence in the flesh, though we do in fact wear the mark of circumcision in it, or however else we may be distinguished by birth, education, or any external ⁴ forms. And indeed I say this, not as if I were deficient in any thing, wherein another can boast, for it is evident I have also what might be [an occasion of confidence in the flesh, for if any other thinks he hath whereof to trust in the flesh, I fear not to say I [have] probably more
⁵ than he. I was not only circumcised, but that according to the exactest institution of Moses, on the eighth day^d after I was born; of the stock

² Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision.

⁵ For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh;

⁴ Though I might also have confidence in the flesh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more:

⁵ Circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe

^c Beware of dogs.] This may very possibly be an allusion to Is. lvi. 10—12. Compare ver. 19; Tit. i. 11, 12; Rom. xvi. 18; Gal. vi. 12, 13. The Jews used to call the Gentiles dogs, and perhaps St. Paul may use this language when speaking of their proud bigots, by way of retaliation. Compare Rev. xxii. 15. L'Enfant tells us of a custom at Rome, to chain their dogs at the door of their houses, and to put an inscription over them, Beware of this dog, to which he seems to think these words may refer.

^d Circumcised the eighth day.] It evidently appears, that the Jews did not only lay a great deal of stress on the rite of circumcision, but on the time of performing it, i. e. exactly on the eighth day. The Septuagint have an addition to Gen. xvii. 14. which is also found in the Samaritan Pentateuch, tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; stock of Israel; God's chosen people, not as some circumcised families are descended from Ishmael, or Edom; and of the tribe of Benjamin, whose lot lay so near the temple of God, and which joined not with the ten tribes in their general revolt, but still adhered to Judah, and to the true worship of God at Jerusalem. Not only by my father's, but my mother's side, have I been from generation to generation an Hebrew, descended from a long line of Hebrews, so that I reckon no proselyte of foreign nations in my genealogy: with respect to the law I was a Pharisee, of a sect which most strictly and vigorously adheres to it, and has adopted that guard which tradition has set around it to secure it from the least degree of violation. With respect to zeal for these rituals, which they so eagerly enjoin, I myself was once employed with the greatest fury in persecuting the church of Christ, and endeavouring, if possible, to root it up from the face of the earth: as to that righteousness, which is placed in an exact observation of the law in its external precepts, I have been quite blameless and unexceptionable, so that those who knew me most intimately, could not have accused me of any wilful transgression, or of neglecting any expiatory rites and sacrifices appointed in case of involuntary errors. This was my character and state: and there was a time when I was proud of being able to say all this, and thought myself exceedingly happy. But now my views of things are altered, and a very different scene hath opened itself upon me, so that the things which were once gain to me, and which I most valued myself upon, I have now accounted but as loss for Christ. I look upon them as things most despicable when compared with him, yea as things which would be extremely mischievous to me if they should in any degree prevent my application to him, or my sharing the benefits of those

177
31
104
111 2.

6 Concerning zeal; persecuting the church touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless.

7 But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ.

Pentateuch, "the male-child, which is not circumcised on the eighth day, shall be cut off from among his people."

[e Hebrews of Hebrews.] If, as some have conjectured, the turbulent person to whom Paul especially refers, were only the son of a proselyte, and not of a native Jew, there was a peculiar propriety in dwelling on these circumstances. But on every interpretation it will appear proper, and I am always cautious of clogging the paraphrase with the opposition of any thing of which there is not some considerable proof.

[I counted loss for Christ.] i. e. I threw them away, as mariners do their goods on which they before set a value, lest they should endanger their lives, in which sense ἀποδοῦναι is used, Act. xxvii. 21.

1 Howe

SECT.
vi.Phil.
III. 8.

those that believe in him. Yea doubtless, and I count all things, how valuable soever, to be but loss and damage with respect to the most excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, which so much exceeds every other knowledge or interest that can come in competition with it; for the sake of which I have suffered the loss of all things^g, having been expelled with infamy from among the Jews, and deprived of all the towering hopes to which my ambition might once have aspired: And, far from repining at it I account them not worth mentioning, for they seem to be but vile refuse and dung, that I may gain that inestimable prize and treasure, Christ Jesus, in whom alone I shall be safe, and rich, and happy for ever. Though not only reputation and power, ease and plenty, but even life itself should be sacrificed to this view, I am happy enough, if I may but be found in him, vitally united to him by a true faith and love, and so taken under his protection and favour; not having mine own righteousness which [is of] the law; such a righteousness as only consists in observing the precepts or expiations of the Jewish religion, which I was once so solicitous to establish; nor any confidence in any legal righteousness whatever, as my plea before God, but that I may be interested in that which [is] by the faith of Christ, the righteousness which [is] of God through faith; that which he has appointed we should obtain and secure, by believing in his Son, and making our application to him as creatures condemned and undone, whose only refuge is in his righteousness and grace. Compare Rom. i. 16; iii. 22; x. 3. This is my great concern, experimentally to know him, and feel the efficacious power of his resurrection continually, working upon my mind, and bearing me forward with the most cheerful resolution, to share in the fellowship of his sufferings too, being made conformable to his death, in all the tortures of crucifixion itself, should his Providence call me to it. If having done and suffered any thing which God lays in my way, I may but by any

^g Have suffered the loss of all things.] It is not by any means improbable, that a sentence of excommunication might be pronounced against Paul, or, at least, that his goods might be confiscated, as we know

8 Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Christ,

9 And be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith:

10 That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death;

11 If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection other believing Hebrews, though probably no one of them so obnoxious to their Jewish brethren as himself, were actually treated. Heb. x. 35, 34.

resurrection of the dead:

12 Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus.

13 Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one any possible means at length attain to the resurrection^h from the deadⁱ, and that consummate holiness and blessedness which he will then bestow upon all his people, when the dead in Christ shall rise first, and be distinguished with glories proportionable to the vigour with which they have exerted themselves in his service.

This I say, not as if I had already attained to 12 all that I wish to be, or were already perfect; for I am truly sensible how far I am from that perfection of character, as well as of state, which the gospel teaches me to aspire after; but I pursue it, if by any means I may but reach and apprehend that height of excellence for which also I am apprehended by Christ Jesus, whose condescending hand graciously laid hold on me in my mad career, in so extraordinary a manner as you have often heard, and has introduced me into that blessed race in which I am now engaged^k.

Brethren, I repeat it again, with all unfeigned 13 humility of heart, that I count not myself to have attained already, I have much nobler heights

^h Attain to the resurrection.] Mr. Peirce would render the words τις πως καταβησω, that any way I may arrive at the resurrection, &c. supposing it alludes to the ship's arriving at the port it is bound for. But the word attained has an ambiguity, which equally answering the original, seems better to suit the 12th verse, in which the apostle certainly means something more than that he had not yet arrived at the resurrection of the dead. The particle if, in this connection, implies no uncertainty of the resurrection, nor any doubt as to Paul's attaining it.

ⁱ The resurrection from the dead.] Mr. Fleming understands St. Paul as speaking here of a first resurrection of martyrs and the most eminent saints, which many good men might fall short of, and of which he thinks the apostle himself might not have an absolute assurance. And he lays great stress upon the peculiarity of the phrase, την εξανστασιν την εκ των νεκρων for so he would read it, according to the Alexandrian MSS. and would render it, "that peculiar resurrection which is to be from among the rest of the dead." From the First Resur. p. 22, 82. But I thought that reading and version too precarious to be adopted here, especially as it appears to me that εξανστασις is sometimes used without any such emphasis. Compare Mark xii. 19; Luke xx. 28; and that the more emphatical phrase, της αναστασεως της εκ νεκρων, Luke xx. 25, simply signifies that resurrection of which all good men are to partake, and indeed the general declaration, that the dead in Christ are to rise first, will fully answer any thing implied in these expressions. The editors of the Prussian Testament think the Jewish teachers who opposed Paul with so much eagerness were of the sect of the Sadducees, and that he takes the more frequent notice of the resurrection, in opposition to their pernicious tenets in relation to it.

^k Hath introduced, &c.] Candidates in the Grecian games, especially when they first presented themselves, were often introduced by some persons of established reputation, who, at the same time that he spoke as honourable as might be of his friend, urged him to acquit himself with the utmost vigour and resolution; and it is possible that this clause may allude to that circumstance. But I conclude that, even on this interpretation, it rather expresses the sense the apostle had of his obligations to the condescension and grace of Christ, in pursuing and seizing him while he fled from him, and so engaging him to aspire to this crown of life. Compare 1 Tim. i. 15, 16.

SECT. VI
Phil. III. 11.

SECT.
vi.
Phil.
Il. 15.

heights of holiness in view, and am sensible how far I fall short of them. *But one thing*¹ [I can say,] that herein I imitate the conduct of the racers in your celebrated Grecian games; my thoughts and cares are all fixed upon this great object, and, forgetting the things which are behind, not looking back with immoderate self-complacency on the steps already taken, and the way already dispatched, I am concerned intensely, with all the vigour and agility I can possibly exert, to stretch forward toward those 14 things which are before; And so I pursue the goal for the glorious prize which strikes my sight there; even that which is the ultimate end of the high calling^m of God, with which he hath honoured me, by the dispensation of his grace in *Christ Jesus*ⁿ; and surely no calling can be more noble, or better deserve the most constant attention and most ardent pursuit.

one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, 14 I press toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. As it was not grievous to the apostle to repeat the same useful 1 exhortations, when he judged it conducive to the safety and happiness of those to whom he wrote, so neither should it be grievous to us to hear or to speak truths, with which in the general we

1 But this one thing I do.] Mr. Peirce thinks the most exact grammatical construction of these words is this, "I press after that one thing for which I have been apprehended by Jesus Christ, that I may apprehend or attain it, neglecting the things behind, and stretching forward to those before, after this one thing, I say, I press, according to the aim I have fixed to myself, that I may obtain the prize of the high calling, &c. But I think the construction may be clear enough, by supplying the words, "I can say," without the transposition he would attempt here.

^m [I pursue the prize of the high calling.] Here is all along a beautiful allusion to the Olympic games, and especially the foot-races, which made the most celebrated part of them; where the prize was placed in a very conspicuous situation so that the competitors might be animated by having it still in their sight. Mr. Dunlop considers the word βραβειον as expressing the principal prize, whereas some might come to the goal, and receive lower rewards: as if he had said, I labour to come in so as to secure the greatest, i. e. I aim at being an advanced and exemplary Christian. Dunl. Sermon. Vol. II. p. 331. But I cannot recollect any secondary prize bestowed on the Olympic foot-race (though in funeral games it was common), nor can I suppose the apostle to refer to the pentathletic crown, i. e. the crown given to one who conquered in all the athletic exercises, though that might certainly by way of eminence be called τὸ βραβειον, the grand prize. See Mr. West's Dissert. on the Olympic Games, p. lxxiii.

ⁿ [Of God in Christ Jesus.] L'Enfant thinks the apostle compares our Lord to those who stood on an elevated place at the end of the course, calling the racers by their names, and encouraging them, by holding out the crown, to exert themselves with vigour. But, not to insist on the uncertainty of this, it would seem at all events more rational to interpret the high calling, as alluding to the proclamation; namely by which men were called before the opening of the course to contend for such and such a prize, which answers to the general declaration made in the gospel of the heavenly prize.

we may be well acquainted, but which we may be too ready to forget, in pursuit of things, more amusing indeed, but less *advan-*¹¹⁷₁₁₈ vantageous. Such are the truths here inculcated; familiarly ver- known, but not therefore to be disregarded. Let us avoid all ap-² proaches to these detestable characters here branded with so just an infamy; and consider what it is that will constitute us the *circ-*³ umcision, the people whom God will avow for his own, and charge it upon our souls, that we worship God in the Spirit, that we rejoice in Christ Jesus, and repose not in any sense confidence in the flesh.

We see an example of this excellent temper in the apostle here, ^{4, 5} who makes his boast in Christ, and for him renounces these advantages on which he was once ready to set the highest value. He accounted those things but loss and damage which once he est-imed his gain and his treasure, especially that eager but blind zeal with which he had once persecuted the church. May it be deeply and constantly impressed upon our minds, that the *knowledge of*⁷ Christ is of all things the most excellent, as the object of it is most sublime and interesting, and the fruits of it most happy and important. This therefore let us pursue, and be truly solicitous that ⁸ we may gain Christ as our own unalienable property, and that we may be found in him, interested in a better righteousness than we can claim, by virtue of our own personal obedience to any law; ⁹ even that which is by the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God, prepared, exhibited, and appointed by him, and which is received by faith in his Son.

Who would not wish to know him in the power of his resur- rection, to feel the views of that great event powerfully operating ¹⁰ on his mind, yea in this connection to know the fellowship of his sufferings too? Who would not be willing to be made, in the most painful sense, conformable to his death, to feel the scourges, the insults, the nails, the cross, and what was more dreadful than all, even the desertion of the Father himself, might he thereby attain to a resemblance to Christ in a glorious resurrection from the dead? It shall be the portion of all who *die to sin, and live to*¹¹
God, and persist in a resolution of sacrificing all to that Redeemer who for us died and rose again.

In the mean time, while we are surrounded with the infirmities of mortality, may we ever keep up an humble sense of the imperfection of our present attainments in religion. May we with ^{12, 13} holy Paul, so incomparably our superior, forget the progress already made, and strain every nerve, in reaching on to what yet remains before us. How far are we from apprehending that for which we were apprehended by Jesus Christ! How far from answering the plan our Lord has drawn, and being completely what he

SECT.
vi.

he intended his servants should be! “ Enkindle in our breasts, O thou great Author and Finisher of our Faith! a more ardent desire of answering it; and for that purpose, may it please thee so to display before our believing eyes the glorious prize of the high calling with which God has honoured us through thee, that we may feel all the ardor of our souls awakened to obtain it, and never slacken our pace till we win that immortal crown, but daily increase our speed as we approach it.”

SECT. VII.

The Apostle urges upon the Philippians a holy and blameless temper and a heavenly conversation, cautioning them against the bad example even of some professing Christians who brought great detriment on themselves, and reproach upon religion, by the unsuitable manner in which they acted. Phil. III. 15, to the end. IV. 1.

SECT.
vii.

PHILIPPIANS III. 15.

Phil.
III. 15.

SUCH is the situation of my own mind, and the ardour of desire with which I am pressing after farther attainments in the Divine life. Let as many of us therefore as are perfect in any degree, that is, all who are sincere Christians, and initiated, if I may so express it, into the holy mysteries of our religion, attend to this^a, as our great business and aim; and if any of you are otherwise affected, if any be unhappily fallen into a remiss and indolent frame, God shall reveal even this unto you^b. I hope that he will, and I pray that he may, give you such views of the

PHIL. III. 15.

LET us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you.

^a As many of us as are perfect, &c.] The use of this phrase, in reference to those initiated into the mysteries, is so well known, and the allusion here seems so suitable to the connection, that I presume I need not largely vindicate the interpretation given. I shall only add, that when this expression is used to intimate, that the greatest adepts in Christianity should be labouring after higher improvements, it must strongly imply the obligation on those in a lower class to press forwards.

^b God shall reveal, &c.] Mr. Fleming, in pursuance of his peculiar interpretation of ver. 11, paraphrases this verse as if he had said, “ If any of you are not persuaded of that doctrine of a first resurrection, which is not indeed of the utmost necessity, God may hereafter reveal it more fully; and in the mean time, let us aim at that common glory which we all profess to expect at the general resurrection.” But I think if Paul had declared it as a part of the revelation he had received from Christ (and he could surely know it no otherwise than by special revelation), it could not have been left to them as a matter of indifference, to judge one way or another of it. Dr. Whitby labours to prove that the apostle here glances on those Christians who might be ready to lay too great a stress on circumcision and Jewish ceremonies, with relation to which he hoped they would be better informed, which at least they would probably be after the destruction of Jerusalem. Compare Gal. v. 10; vi. 15, 16.

16 Nevertheless, whereto we have already attended, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing.

17 Brethren, be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so, as you have us for an ensample.

18 (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ :

19 Whose end is destruction, whose god is their

the crown of glory, the prize of our high calling, as may animate your most vigorous pursuit of it. Nevertheless^c (wherunto [I hope] we have at least attained), let us act as those who are habitually persuaded of the Divine authority of the gospel, and accordingly adwalk agreeably to what we profess to revere, as the same great authentic rule of our conduct ; and let us especially be taught by it to attend to the same thing, to be one in our affections to each other, concerning which our duty is so plainly declared, that the weakest honest inquirer cannot be mistaken.

Thus I exhort you, and I hope I may appeal to all that know me, that my behaviour speaks the same language. So that I may confidently say, Be ye, my brethren, imitators of me, and observe, and endeavour to follow those that walk, as ye have us for an example ; join this company, and learn to speak and act like them. For there are many who call themselves Christians, and yet walk [in a very different manner], of whom I have often told you, and now tell you even weeping ; for well indeed may I weep on so sad an occasion, as it is certain [that] whatever they may profess, [they are] enemies of the cross of Christ^d ; and as they are unwilling to suffer any thing for it, so its cause and honour suffers much by them, for they continually act contrary to the very end and design of their master's death. Such a set of men there is, whose behaviour is scandalous, and their end [is] utter destruction. Whatever they may talk of knowing and serving the true God, they

c Nevertheless, &c.] The construction here has some perplexity, but, on the whole, I think εἰς is to be understood as if he had said, "I could wish to animate you to the greatest ardour in pursuing the prize ;" however at least remember to agree in honouring the gospel as your common rule, and bearing a proper affection to each other. And if we suppose the words αὐτοῦ ἐπισημαίνοντες, to come in as a parenthesis, and to be rendered, to which I hope we have attained, a proper distinction will be preserved between this and the preceding verse, which have often been confounded. For the sense of the phrase ἐπισημαίνοντες, see Phil. ii. 2, and Rom. xii. 16.

d Enemies to the cross of Christ.] The end and design of that being to attract our hearts from earth to heaven, such an expression may be proper in that sense, though some think it refers to their aversion to persecution, understanding by the cross of Christ, the cross to be borne for Christ, I think much less properly. Nor does it seem to refer so much to their contending for Jewish ceremonies, as in general to their immoral temper afterwards described. It is to be feared many converts from the Gentiles, as well as from the Jews, answered this character, and if they did so, it was entirely to the apostle's purpose to reprove them.

SECT.
vii.Phil.
III. 19.

they are persons whose chief god [is their] own belly (compare Rom. xvi. 18), which they continually seek to honour with the most luxurious sacrifices; persons whose taste is so mean and preposterous, that they glory in those things which are indeed their shame, having outgrown all the remainder of common modesty, and all sense of decency. In a word, they are persons who mind only earthly things, all their thoughts and pursuits are taken up with visible and corporeal objects, the concerns of time and this

20 transitory world. But we converse as citizens of heaven, considering ourselves as denizens of the New Jerusalem, and only strangers and pilgrims upon earth. We therefore endeavour to promote the interests of that glorious society, to learn its manners, and to behave worthy of our relation to it: from whence also we expect the blessed appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ as 21 a Saviour; Who shall transform our vile bodye, that it may be made conformable to his glorious body; that all the abasement and dishonour of the grave may be shaken off for ever, and we, having borne his image in holiness on earth, may bear it in beauty, glory and immortality in heaven. It is indeed a vastly surprising, and to sense an incredible change; but we ought to remember, that nothing is too hard for omnipotence: he will therefore effect it, according to the energy whereby he is able to subject even all things unto himself, and which will render him completely victorious over all his enemies, even over death and the grave, the last of them.

IV. 1. Therefore let me entreat and charge you all, my beloved and most amiable brethren, my joy now and my crown of rejoicing in that expected day of the Lord, that, as ye have so great and important a hope, ye improve it to animate you in a vigorous adherence to that religion which inspires it: and so stand fast in the Lord^e, as becomes those who are so dear to him, as well as so tenderly beloved by me, and who expect by his grace so glorious a change.

their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things.)

20 For our conversation is in heaven: from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ:

21 Whoshall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.

IV. 1. Therefore, my brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved.

IMPROVE-

^e Transform our vile body.] Το σωμα της ταπεινωσεως, ημων, might literally be rendered, the body of our humiliation, &c. that is, this body in the form of sinful flesh, humbled and degraded as it at present is, and so different from what the body of Adam originally was.

[So stand fast, &c.] There is no more reason for making this the beginning of a new chapter, than there would be for disjoining the last verse of the 1 Cor. xv. in sense exactly parallel to this, from the preceding discourse on the resurrection, with which it is so beautifully and properly connected.

IMPROVEMENT.

AND do not we also look for Christ as a Saviour? Do we not hope that this vile body shall by his all-victorious powers be transformed into the likeness of his own glorious body? Is it not with this hope that we commit the dust of our friends to the grave? And is it not in this confidence that we think of our own death with hope, and with cheerfulness? Why then is not our conversation more in heaven? Why have we not more frequent, solemn, and affectionate views of that better world to which we profess to be tending? Alas! have we not reason too often to weep for ourselves as well as others, that we mind earthly things so much and heavenly no more? But wretched indeed are we, if we find answer the sad character which, in professing Christians, wherever it is seen, and much more wherever it is experienced, is so justly deplorable! May Divine grace ever preserve those on whom the name of Christ is named, those by whom it is known, from making their belly their god, (how infamous a deity!) and from that wretched degeneracy of taste, and perverseness of mind, which would lead them to glory in their shame! Surely the cross of Christ was intended to teach us lessons so contrary to this, that there can be no greater enmity to it than to indulge such a temper, especially while we profess to plead for that cross, and to glory in it. May we not only abhor such a temper, but bewail it! Yea may rivers of tears run down our eyes when we see God's law violated and his gospel profaned.

Blessed be God, for other and better examples in the apostolic age, and that some are likewise to be traced in our own, corrupt as it is; though they are in number less frequent, and in lustre less radiant than of old! Let us however mark those that walk, as we have Paul for an example. How different soever our apprehensions in some things may be, may we all unite in a care of practical religion, and whereunto we have already attained, walk by the same rule, and mind the same thing. And O that our rule may be more and more attended to in every step of our way! and that if in any instance we mistake it, or if we fall in those notions we ought to have of any principles of Christianity which are to add a sanction to it, God may reveal even this unto us, and teach us to act in a more suitable manner! In every sense, what we see not, may he teach us, and wherein we have done iniquity, may we do no more (Job xxxiv. 32), but stand fast in the Lord, and press forward with greater ardor towards every religious improvement, towards every thing which may increase the beauty of our character, and reflect a brighter honour upon our profession.

of

SECT.
vii.

SECT. VIII.

After some particular charges relating to a pacific temper, the Apostle gives more general exhortations to Christian cheerfulness, immoderation, prayer, a behaviour universally amiable, and an imitation of the good example he had endeavoured to give them. Phil. IV. 2—9.

PHILIPPIANS IV. 2.

SECT.
viii.Phil.
V. 2.

I HAVE been exhorting you all to stand fast in the Lord, being supported by those glorious hopes he has given you. And I must now particularly beseech Euodia, and beseech Syntyche, that whatever cause of difference may have arisen between them, they would sacrifice all to the common engagements of their Christian profession, and would attend to the same thing in the Lord, that they would turn all their thoughts into that one channel, and only consider how they may most effectually promote the great purposes of their common calling. And I also beseech thee, [my] genuine associate^a, whose intimate friendship supersedes the necessity of naming thee particularly, that thou wouldst assist those pious women who laboured with me in the gospel^b, in such services as suited their sex and station, and assisted with Clemens also, and my other fellow-labourers, whose names, as I have reason in charity to hope, [are] in the book of life^c, and will there appear to their everlasting honour

PHIL. IV. 2.

I BESEECH Euodias, and beseech Syntyche, that they be of the same mind in the Lord.

³ And I entreat thee also, true yoke-fellow, help those women which laboured with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow-labourers whose names are in the book of life.

^a My genuine associate: συζυγῆ γνηστῆ.] Some understand and render συζυγῆς, as a proper name, the true sisygus; but as I do not remember any instance in which γνηστῆς is used merely to signify true or honest, it must, even on that interpretation, refer to the signification of the name. As if he had said, thou art sisygus indeed, the literal import of which is undoubtedly, according to our version, yoke fellow; but as that word in English is generally appropriated to conjugal life, and yet, as it stands in the original, is masculine, and consequently (waving all other arguments) cannot be taken in that sense, I thought it better to render it associate. I think it probable this might be an officer of considerable authority and dignity in the church at Philippi, perhaps husband to one of the pious women here mentioned.

^b Women—who laboured.] As women's preaching was so expressly forbidden by Paul, we must conclude it was in some other way that these good women were helpful to him in the gospel; not so much by ministering to his person, though that no doubt they were ready to do as they had opportunity, but by such kind of services as I have intimated in the improvement, and by the intelligence they might give him of the state of religion among their female acquaintance, their children or other branches of their respective families.

^c Whose names are in the book of life.] The names of good men are often represented

4 Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, Rejoice.

5 Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand.

6 Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God.

7 And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds honour and joy, though I do not stay to enumerate them here.

I am now drawing toward a close, and let this be my farewell. Whatever difficulties and persecutions may attend you, rejoice always in the Lord: endeavour to maintain an habitual joy in Christ, and in the hopes and privileges you derive from him. And, again I say, Rejoice. I renew the exhortation, as the honour of our Divine Master and your own comfort so much depends on attending to it.

Let your moderation and gentleness, both in the pursuits of the various enjoyments of life, and in supporting the injuries and indignities you may meet with, be known unto all men, as visible in the whole of your behaviour; for the Lord [is] at hand. He will quickly come to close the scene, and to put an end to all your temporal enjoyments, and all you can suffer from your enemies. In the mean time, whatever necessities, or whatever oppressions, may arise, be anxious about nothing, so as to disquiet or distress your minds, but in every thing that occurs, in every condition, and on every occasion, let your petitions be made known, and breathed out before God, in humble prayer and fervent supplication^d, to be still mingled with thanksgiving, as there is always room for praise and always occasion for it, even in circumstances of the greatest affliction and distress.

And, if you exercise such a temper, *the peace*⁷ which the blessed Spirit of God diffuses over the souls of his people, that peace, which far surpasses all understanding^e which none can conceive sented as registered in heaven, compare Mal. iii. 16. Where any thing of such a character appeared, it was reasonable, in the judgment of charity, to hope this with respect to the persons in whom it was found; but we have no reason to conclude from this expression, that Paul had any particular revelation with regard to these friends he here mentions as certainly destined to salvation.

[d Prayer and supplication.] The particular difference between προσευχη and δεησις cannot I think be ascertained, though some understand by the former petition for good, and by the latter, deprecation of evil. Perhaps the latter may be rather more expressive than the former, as implying more earnest importunity: and this sense the word supplication seems to carry with it.

[e The peace of God, &c.] By this expression some understand, that pacific disposition, which the gospel requires, interpreting the following phrase, either of its excelling all merely intellectual endowments (as if it were paralleled to 1 Cor. xiii. 2) or of its ruling the other powers of the soul, as δυνατω is said to signify having dominion; Dan. vii. 25; Is. lx. 10; 1 Pet. ii. 13. Compare Rom. xiii. 1. But this is only a branch of that temper which we are to cultivate, if we desire that sense of peace and reconciliation with God, of which it is most natural to interpret this clause, as that excellent preacher, Mr. Du Mont, has shewn at large in his valuable discourse

571
Vol.

Phil.
IV. 6.

SECT.
viii.

Phil.
IV. 7.

ceive but he who feels it, and which none can feel but by Divine communication, shall guard and defend your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus, so that nothing shall be able to break in upon that sweet and sacred tranquility. As for what remains, my brethren, let me dispatch it in a few words. Be always intent on raising your characters to the greatest height you possibly can: whatever things are true and sincere, whatever things [are] grave and venerable; whatever things [are] righteous and equitable, whatever things [are] chaste and pure, whatever things are friendly and kind, whatever things [are] reputable and truly ornamental, if [there be] any real virtue in them, and if [there be] any just praise resulting from them, think frequently of these things, consider what they are, how highly you are obliged to regard them, and endeavour more and more to abound in the practice of them. And, for a farther illustration and confirmation of this advice, I will add, whatever things ye have learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, whatever good lessons I have given you, whatever worthy of imitation you may have observed in my conduct, while I abode among you, or may since have been credibly informed of, these things be ye ever careful to practise: and the God of peace shall always be with you: for I have the testimony of my conscience, that my conduct has always been pleasing in his sight, and that your imitation of it will be the way to engage the Divine presence and blessing, which I most heartily wish you.

minds through Christ Jesus.

8 Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

9 Those things which ye have both learned and received, and heard and seen in me, do: and the God of peace shall be with you.

IMPROVE-

on this text. See his Serm. p. 307, &c. Thus the peace of Christ, John. xiv. 27, signifies the peace which he gives, or of which he is the author. For the emphasis of the word επιπροσθετα, see the note on 1 Pet. i. 5.

f Grave and venerable.] The word σεμνος is rendered grave, and σεμνολογία gravity, 1 Tim. iii. 4, 8, 11; Tit. ii. 1, 2, 7. Dr. Lardner has very well expressed the design of the exhortation when he says, "That it is to recommend to Christians a concern for their character, a care so to behave as to secure to themselves some degree of respect and esteem; that they should avoid unbecoming levity in word, action, habit, and outward behaviour; which tends to render men despicable; and makes them appear weak, mean, and of no consequence in the eyes of others." Lardner's Serm. p. 519. And I hope it will be remembered how particularly this gravity is recommended to ministers in the places cited above.

g Friendly and kind.] This seems the more exact import of πρηνες φιλων than lovely: though there is certainly a lovely charm in such friendly things.

IMPROVEMENT.

How condescending is this great apostle in the kind notice he takes, not only of his fellow-labourers, in the work of the Christian ministry, but even of the women, who, according to the opportunity which God gave them, lent their assistance for the service of the gospel, whatever that assistance were; whether by their prayers, or familiar addresses to their friends, or their kind offices to the bodies of those in distress, or that uniform example by which the several virtues of Christianity were recommended, and the Christian profession adorned! Let none then object the privacy of their stations, as if that must necessarily cut them off from usefulness, but let them endeavour diligently and humbly to do their utmost, and pray for increasing wisdom and grace, to guide them in their deliberations and resolves.

It will be very subservient to this happy design, that Christians, in whatever stations they are, should be of one mind in the Lord, that they should endeavour to lay aside mutual prejudices, and united in love if they cannot perfectly agree in all their sentiments. Then may they rejoice in the Lord; and it is to be urged upon them again and again, that they do so. It is to be urged, not only as a privilege, but a duty. And surely, if we consider what a Saviour he is, and how perfectly accommodated to what our necessities require, and what our hearts could wish, we shall easily enter into the reasonableness of the exhortation.

Let us often represent it to ourselves as a truth equally important and certain, that the Lord is at hand. By his Spiritual presence he is ever near us, and the day of his final and visible appearance is continually approaching. Let our hearts be duly influenced by it, and particularly be taught that holy moderation, which becomes those who see the season so nearly advancing, when all these things shall be dissolved. And let this abate our anxiety about them. Why should we be solicitous about things which shall so soon be as if they had never been? Let us seek the repose of our minds in prayer. In every thing by humble supplication let us make known our requests unto God. And let us mingle thankful acknowledgments for past favours with our addresses to the throne of grace for what we farther need. This will establish the serenity of our souls, so that the peace of God, more sweet and delightful than any who have not experienced it can conceive, will keep our hearts and minds in Christ Jesus, and make our state secure as well as pleasant.

SECT.
viii.

Let us study the beautiful and the venerable, as well as what is true and just in actions, and pursue every thing which shall, as Ver. such, approve itself to our consciences, every thing in which there shall be virtue and praise. Let us always in this view endeavour to keep the moral sense uncorrupted, and pray that God would, if I may be allowed the expression, preserve the delicacy of our mind in this respect, that a holy sensibility of soul may warn and alarm us, to guard against every distant appearance of evil. That so cautious of venturing to the utmost boundaries of what may be innocent, we may be more secure than we could otherwise be from the danger of passing over to the confines of guilt, and of wandering from one degree of it to another. And, while we exhort others to such a care, let us ourselves endeavour to be like this holy apostle, among the brighter examples of it.

SECT. IX.

The Apostle concludes with his acknowledgments to the Philippians, for the liberal supply they had sent him: at the same time speaking of the independency of temper to which Divine grace had brought him; and transmits Christian salutations from himself and his friends at Rome. Phil. IV. 10,—to the end.

PHILIPPIANS IV. 10.

SECT.
ix.Phil.
IV. 10.

BUT to return to my own affairs, and your conduct to me. I have rejoiced greatly in the Lord Jesus Christ^a, to whose providence and grace I ultimately ascribe it, that your affectionate care of me has now sprung up again and flourished, like vegetables which, after having seemed during the winter to be dead in the earth sprout up at the returning spring with new beauty and pleasure. With respect to which you were indeed careful before, as I assuredly believe, but ye wanted that convenient opportunity which the coming of Epaphroditus gave you, of transmitting to me the fruit of your liberality and bounty. But I would not have you think that I speak with respect to want, as if I was impatient of that, or meant to extort any thing from you, if future necessities should arise, as by dint of importunity. For I bless God, I have no need

of

PHIL. IV. 10.

BUT I rejoiced in the Lord greatly that now at the last your care of me hath flourished again; wherein ye were also careful; but ye lacked opportunity.

¹¹ Not that I speak in respect of want; for

^a Rejoiced greatly in the Lord.] This shows the deep sense the apostle entertained of the providential interposition of Christ in the seasonable supply he had received from the Philippians; and many other traces of this kind appear in the writings of St. Paul.

^b Initiated,

I have learned in whatsoever state I am, there-with to be content.

12 I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound: every where, and in all things I am instructed, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need.

13 I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.

14 Notwithstanding ye have well done that ye did communicate with my affliction.

15 Now, ye Philippians, know also, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church communicated of betaking myself to such low expedients, as I have learned in whatever circumstances I am, to be contented. I know both [how] to be abased, when it pleases God to humble me, and I know [how] to abound, when his providence appears for my supply. In every [place] and in all [conditions] I am instructed, and find myself, as it were, initiated into this great mystery^b, so needful to the Christian, and especially the apostolic life, both to be fed plentifully without transgressing the rules of temperance, and to suffer hunger without murmuring or discontent. I know how both to abound, without too fond an attachment to the world, when my circumstances in it are most easy, and to fall short of the agreeable accommodations of life, yea, and to be in necessity, without being greatly disturbed at such a change, or feeling any painful anxiety on account of it. In one word, whatever is to be done, whatever is to be borne, I am sufficient for all things; have vigour enough for the one, have patience and fortitude enough for the other: but then I would not be understood to arrogate any thing of this to myself, but would most humbly and affectionately acknowledge, that it is all through Christ who enables me, and furnishes my spirit with a strength of which it is naturally destitute.

You see by this that the happiness of my life doth not depend upon any external circumstance, nor any supply I can receive from my most generous friends. Nevertheless, ye did well in communicating so liberally to my relief, in that affliction under which I am now suffering; as it is certain the servants of Christ are not less worthy of being regarded and assisted by you, for those attainments which by his grace they have been enabled to make in the temper which their profession demands. And in this respect, I am under peculiar obligations to you, my dear brethren, for ye, O Philippians, well know, that in the beginning of our mission, when we came and preached the gospel among you,

as

^b [initiated, &c.] This is well known to be the peculiar sense of μυστήριον, and it has a spirit here which I could not persuade myself to suppress, as the apostle, by the choice of this word, seems to intimate to every Greek reader how much he esteemed these good dispositions of mind here spoken of beyond all their boasted παύλας, whatever μυστήρια they might be supposed to contain.

SECT.
13.
Phil.
IV. 12.

SECT.
ix.Phil.
IV. 15.

as I was departing from Macedonia^c (which is now about twelve years ago^d), no church communicated with me in the affair of giving and receiving, that is no Christian society, as such, made any collection for my personal support and assistance, but you, only: For, not contented with ministering to my necessities, while I was with you; even when I resided in Thessalonica, though it was so considerable a city, and the metropolis of your country, and though the gospel was so affectionately received by some there, yet you sent thither once and again to the relief of my necessity^e.

17 I mention this in so particular a manner, not because I desire a gift, or would extort any future favour from you, by the recollection of the past, but this I desire, that in such ways, as may be most for the honour of God, and the credit of your profession, fruit may abound, to your comfortable account in the day of the Lord.

18 At present you need not be solicitous about me, for I have all I can wish to make my bonds sit easy upon me, and do indeed abound more than usual in the convenient accommodations of life: I am full, having received by Epaphroditus your present, which I cannot but esteem as a fragrant odour, an acceptable sacrifice, well-pleasing to God, to whose glory it is, I know ultimately devoted, while for his sake you are so

19 ready to relieve his ministers. And I have the pleasure to think you will not on the whole be losers by such liberalities, but that my God, graciously smiling upon your tribute of grateful love, will supply all your wants, according to his inexhaustible riches, which he cannot but possess who is seated in supreme glory and majesty above, and scatters down not merely the blessings of providence, but of grace, by Christ Jesus, which I hope he will largely impart to you.

20 Now to our God and Father, to him whom we are encouraged to regard under that endearing character cated with me, as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only.

16 For even in Thessalonica, ye sent once and again unto my necessity.

17 Not because I desire a gift; but I desire fruit that may abound to your account.

18 But I have all, and abound: I am full, having received of Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God.

19 But my God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory, by Christ Jesus.

20 Now unto God and our Father, be glory

^c As I was departing, &c.] So I think it best to render ἐπιχωρῶν, because both Philippi and Thessalonica (ver. 16) lay in Macedonia; and no translation can be more literal.

^d About twelve years ago.] This epistle (as we have observed in the introduction) seems to have been written towards the end of Paul's first imprisonment at Rome, which was about A. D. 63; and he first preached at Philippi about the year 51.

^e To my necessity.] It appears by 1 Thess. ii. 9. 2 Thess. iii. 7—9, that it was not to the liberality of the inhabitants of that city, but chiefly to the labour of his own hands, that Paul owed his subsistence during his abode among them.

ry for ever and ever.
Amen.

21 Salute every saint in Christ Jesus. The brethren which are with me greet you.

22 All the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Cesar's household.

23 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

character, and in whom, through the great Redeemer, we are daily rejoicing, [be] glory for ever and ever. Amen.

I will not swell my postscript by a long catalogue of names, but desire you to salute every saint in Christ Jesus; and to assure them all, known or unknown, that they are dear to me, and that, in general or particular petitions, I bear them always upon my heart. The brethren who are with me, my dear fellow-labourers, with whom I most frequently converse, salute you, sincerely wishing you prosperity and peace. And not only these brethren, who sojourn with me, and bear a part in the ministerial work, but All the other saints here at Rome salute you, but especially they of Cesar's household, who, sensible of the goodness of God to them, in causing his grace to visit them, and dwell with them in such a situation, have a particular regard for their brethren every where, and desire to be particularly remembered to you.

To conclude all with the best wishes my most endeared love can form for you, may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the sanctifying and comfortable influences of his Spirit, [be] with you all, now and at all times, to support you under all your trials, and to animate you to persevere even unto the end! Amen.

SECT.

13.

Phil.
IV. 21.

IMPROVEMENT.

WHAT a noble spirit of generosity and gratitude appears in the apostle! How handsomely does he acknowledge the favour of his friends, still maintaining the dignity of his character, rejoicing in the tokens of their affection to him, chiefly as fruits abounding to their account, and as it would be a sweet savour acceptable to God. And surely the incense which they were presenting at the Divine altar, would also by its fragrancy delight them, surely they enjoyed what they had of their own, whether it were more or less, with greater satisfaction, when they were imparting something with filial gratitude to their Father in Christ, to make his bonds and imprisonment the less grievous.

The apostle freely professes, that he received these tokens of their

f The brethren—and all the saints salute you.] From this distinction I conclude, with Mr. Peirce, that it is highly probable the ministers at Rome were called by the name of brethren. Peirce's Vindic. p. 358.

SECT.
IX.

— their affection with pleasure; but much happier was he in that noble superiority of mind to external circumstances which he so amiably describes. Truly rich and truly great, in knowing how to be content in every circumstance; possessed of the noblest kind of learning, in having learned how to be exalted, and to be abased, 11, 12 to abound or to suffer need. This all-sufficiency; of which he boasts, is it haughty arrogance? far from it; he is never humbler than when he speaks of himself in this exalted language. It is in 13 the strength of another that he glories. I am sufficient for all things through Christ which strengthens me. And here the feeblest Christian may join issue with him, and say, “If Christ will strengthen me, I also am sufficient for all.” His grace therefore let us constantly seek, and endeavour to maintain a continual dependance upon it, praying for ourselves, and for each other, that the grace of 23 the Lord Jesus Christ may be with us. This grace produced and maintained saints, where of all places upon earth, we should least have expected to find them, even the palace of Cesar, of Nero. 22 Let it encourage us to look to God to supply our spiritual necessities out of the riches of his glory in Christ. And, in a cheerful hope 19 that he will do it, let us through him ascribe glory to our God and Father for ever and ever. Amen.

THE
FAMILY EXPOSITOR:

OR, A

PARAPHRASE

ON

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

COLOSSIANS.

WITH

CRITICAL NOTES, AND A PRACTICAL IMPROVEMENT OF EACH SECTION.

A

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO THE

PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON

THE EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

COLOSSE was a large populous city of Phrygia in Asia Minor, and stood not far from Laodicea: but though it appears from this epistle that a Christian church was established in it, we have no account by whom, or at what time, it was founded. Some have concluded from chap. ii. 1, that St. Paul had never been there himself; but though perhaps nothing can be certainly inferred from that passage in relation to it, yet there is great reason to believe that, if the apostle had been personally concerned in the first preaching of the gospel there, so important a fact would not have been entirely omitted in the history of the Acts. It is not however at all improbable, but they might be converted while Paul resided at Ephesus, especially considering that he spent no less than three years in that city, and preached with so much success, that St. Luke tells us (Acts xix. 20), that all they who dwell in Asia heard the word of the Lord, both Jews and Greeks.

As to the date of this epistle, little need be added here, after what has been already observed in the Introduction to the Ephesians (p. 315). It appears highly probable, for reasons there given, that it was wrote at the same time with that to the Ephesians, and they were both sent together by Tychicus and Onesimus, towards the close of Paul's first imprisonment at Rome, which was about the year of our Lord 63, or the ninth of the Emperor Nero (Compare chap. iv. 3, 7, 9. See also Vol. III. § 60, note, p. 305.)

The Colossians appear, from several passages in this epistle, to have borne an honourable character for their piety, and the zeal they discovered for the gospel; but we find, from the cautions the apostle gives them in the second chapter, that they were in some danger of being drawn aside by subtleties of the Heathen philosophers, and the insinuations of some Jewish zealots, who insisted upon the necessity of conforming to the ceremonies of the Mosaic law. Accordingly the grand design of this epistle is to excite

excite the Colossians by the most persuasive arguments to a temper and behaviour worthy their sacred character, and to secure them from the influence of those Pagan sophists, or Jewish bigots, who would seduce them from the purity of the Christian faith.

In pursuance of this general plan, the apostle, having joined Timothy's name with his own in the inscription of the epistle, begins with expressing his thankfulness to God for calling them into his church, and giving them a share in the important blessings of the gospel; at the same time declaring the great satisfaction with which he heard of their faith and love, and assuring them of his constant prayers that they might receive larger supplies of Divine wisdom and grace, to enable them to walk worthy of their high character and hopes as Christians (chap. i. 1—14)—And, to make them more sensible of the excellence of this new dispensation into which they were admitted, he represents to them in very sublime terms the dignity of our Saviour's Person, as the image of God, the Creator of all things, and the head of the church; whose death God was pleased to appoint as the means of abolishing the obligation of the Mosaic law, which separated between the Jews and Gentiles, and of reconciling sinners to himself, ver. 15—23.—From this view of the excellency of Christ's Person, and the riches of redeeming grace, the apostle takes occasion to express the cheerfulness with which he suffered in the cause of the gospel, and his earnest solicitude to fulfil his Ministry among them in the most successful manner; assuring them that he felt the most tender concern both for them and the other Christians in the neighbourhood, that they might be established in their adherence to the Christian faith, (ver. 24, to the end. Chap. ii. 1—7.)

Having given these general exhortations, the apostle proceeds to caution the Colossians against suffering their minds to be corrupted from the simplicity of the gospel, either by Pagan philosophy, or Jewish tradition, reminding them of the obligation their baptism laid them under of submitting to Christ, as the only Law-giver and Head of his church; who had totally abolished the ceremonial law, and discharged them from any farther regard to it, ver. 8—19. And, since upon embracing Christianity they were to consider themselves as dead with respect to any other religious profession, he shews the absurdity of being still subject to the appointments of the Mosaic law; and cautions them against those corrupt additions to Christianity which some were attempting to introduce, especially by rigours and superstitions of their own devising. And as the most effectual means for their security, he exhorts them, as they were risen with Christ, to keep their thoughts fixed on him as their Lord and life, and on that better world whither he was ascended, and to which they had the prospect of being admitted, ver. 20, to the end. Chap. iii. 1—4. From this glorious hope, the apostle presses them to guard against every degree of uncleanness, malice, covetousness, falsehood, and whatever was inconsistent with the purity of that new dispensation into which they were entered; and exhorts them to abound in the practice of meekness, forbearance, humility and love, and to accustom themselves to those devout exercises and evangelical views which would have the most direct tendency to improve the Christian temper, ver. 5—17.

After these general precepts, the apostle proceeds to recommend to the Colossians such a care in discharging the duties correspondent to the several relations of life, as would be most honourable to their Christian profession, and particularly enumerates those of husbands and wives, parents, and children, masters, and servants. And to assist them in the performance of these duties, he exhorts them to be constant in prayer; and for the credit of their religion, advises them to maintain a prudent obliging behaviour to their Gentile brethren, ver. 18, to the end. Chap. iv. 1—6.

The apostle closes his epistle with recommending to them Tychicus and Onesimus, of whom he speaks in very honourable terms, and to whom he refers them for a more particular account of the state of the church at Rome; and having inserted salutations from Aristarchus, Epaphras, their minister (who was then with Paul) and others, he gives directions for reading his epistle at Laodicea, addresses a solemn admonition to Archippus and concludes with his salutation, wrote with his own hand, ver. 7, to the end.

A

PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

COLOSSIANS.

SECTION I.

The Apostle begins his epistle to the Colossians with declaring his thankfulness to God for calling them into his church, and his desire in general, that they might receive an abundance of Divine grace, to enable them to walk worthy of so great a privilege. Col. I. 1—14.

COL. I. 1.
PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timothy our brother,

COLOSSIANS I. 1.

I PAUL^a, who have the honour to be an apostle of Jesus Christ, not having intruded myself into the office, but being called to it by the will of God, who was pleased to display the sovereignty of his grace in choosing me, one of the greatest of sinners, to so high and holy an office, do now join with Timothy, a faithful brother, and fellow-labourer in the gospel-ministry in sending this epistle. To the holy and faithful brethren^b in Christ, who are resident at Colosse

SECT.
I.
—
COL.
I. 1.

² To the saints and faithful brethren in Christ,

a Paul.] It may be as proper here as elsewhere to observe, that many critics have thought this Greek name was taken by the apostle instead of that of Saul, though it had been the name of the first Jewish king, who was also a Benjamite (which might be a farther recommendation of it in this instance), out of special regard to the Gentiles, to whose service he was so peculiarly devoted.

b Holy and faithful brethren.] I cannot think they are called holy and faithful here, only or chiefly on account of their adhering to the purity of the Christian faith,

SECT.
I.
Col.
L. 2.

losse and the adjacent places: heartily wishing grace unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, through whom he owes that relation to us, and sends down upon us the blessings of providence and grace.

3 I may say it in my own name, and that of my dear brother Timothy, though not personally acquainted with you, that we do unfeignedly give thanks to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ upon your account, and that we are always praying for you; very frequently making express mention of you before the throne of Divine grace, and habitually wishing your advancement in religion, and your eternal sal-
4 ration. Having heard, with unspeakable pleasure, of your sincere faith in Christ Jesus our Lord, and active generous love towards all the saints who are partakers with you in that holy calling which God hath given us by him, whe-
5 ther they be Jews or Gentiles; On this account we offer our prayers to God, and we are blessing him for the better hope^d, which is laid up for you in the heavens, and which will in due time be accomplished, of which ye have heard before to such happy purposes, in the true and in-
6 fallible word of the gospel, which was preached among you in all its genuine purity and integrity: Of that gospel which hath now, through the singular goodness of God to the Gentiles, whom he seemed so long to have neglected, appeared unto you, even as in all the world;

in opposition to those that urged the necessity of observing the Jewish law. This was indeed one instance of their fidelity, but I think it greatly impoverishes and debases the sense of such an extensive phrase to reduce it within such narrow bounds. Many scores of criticisms in some modern commentators of reputation are liable to the same exception; but I rather choose to leave it to the reader's observation, than to stay to point out every example of it. As the epistle is inscribed to a society by profession separated from the world and consecrated to God, it was reasonably to be hoped, in the judgment of charity, that most of them answered that profession, which sufficiently justifies such an address.

^c To the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. Some would render it; to God even the Father, which would be much more tolerable than our translation, to God and the Father, as if they were differ-Christ, which are at Colosse: grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you;

4 Since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints;

5 For the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the gospel:

6 Which is come unto you, as it is in all the world; and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth also

ent persons. But it may seem that the prefixing the article only to God $\tau\omega\ \Theta\epsilon\omega\ \kappa\alpha\iota\ \pi\alpha\tau\epsilon\rho\iota$, not merely warrants but demands this rendering. Franckius has a good observation here, which illustrates the beauty of many scriptures. The order that would seem most artificial is transposed to make the sense plainer. It is not having heard of your faith I bless God, but vice versa. The same observation may be applied to ver. 9—11.

^d For the hope, &c. There is an ambiguity in the connection of this clause; it may either signify, that the apostle gives thanks for this their hope, supposing the 4th verse to come in as a parenthesis; or it may more directly refer to the immediately preceding words, and intimate that a partnership in this blessed hope cemented the hearts of these good men. In either sense the connection is instructive, but I prefer the former as more natural.

so in you, since the day ye heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth :

7 As ye also learned of Epaphras our dear fellow-servant, who is for you a faithful minister of Christ ;

8 Who also declared unto us your love in the Spirit.

9 For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding :

10 That ye might walk worthy of the Lord, unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God ;

11 Strengthened with all might according to his glorious power, unto all patience and long-world^e ; being intended for an universal religion. And accordingly it proceeds in its progress, and bringeth forth substantial fruit elsewhere, as also [it hath done] among you, from the day in which ye have heard and known the grace of God, in that saying word of solid truth^t and everlasting life which hath been sent unto you. As ye have also learnt it from Epaphras, 7 our beloved fellow-servant in the work of the Lord, who is the faithful minister of Christ for your sakes, whom he has appointed to labour among you, and to preside over you ; Who hath 8 also manifested to us your Christian love in the bonds of that one Spirit who unites all our hearts. Therefore we also, from the day that we 9 first heard [of it], cease not to pray for you, and to offer up our most earnest and affectionate requests, that ye may be abundantly filled with the knowledge of his will, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding^s, in the right apprehension of spiritual objects, wrought and increased in you by the influence of the Divine Spirit upon your minds : That so you may be animated to walk 10 in a manner worthy of that connection in which you stand with the Lord Jesus Christ^b, and the obligations you are under to him, conducting yourselves in all respects so as may be well pleasing in his sight, fruitful and increasing still more and more abundantly in every good work, to the practical acknowledgment of God in all his attributes and relations to you. Being inwardly 11 strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, that you may be formed to all the most exemplary degrees of patience, under the persecution

3 UT.
L.
CCL.
16.

* In all the world.] In all the provinces of the Roman empire, as the phrase often signifies, and it may no doubt be put for many or most of them.

f The grace of God in truth.] Some understand truth as expressive of substance in opposition to the comparative similitudes of the Mosaic law.

g Wisdom and spiritual understanding.] It is exceedingly difficult to affix any exactly distinct ideas to the words wisdom, knowledge, and understanding. Some explain wisdom, as expressing an acquaintance with gospel-mysteries ; and understanding, as implying prudence in conduct, while others invert this interpretation. It is evident to me, that the same idea is not invariably annexed to them in all places ; for knowledge is sometimes used to express something in degree at least inferior to wisdom, 1 Cor. xii. 8 ; where is here it evidently includes wisdom ; and the clause spiritual and standing seems to be explanatory of the wisdom here spoken of, and not expressive of any thing different from it.

h That ye may walk worthy of the Lord.] The apostle seems here most particularly to propose the great subject and design of this epistle, which was chiefly intended to excite them to a temper and behaviour worthy their Christian character. And this indeed is the leading view in all the epistles of this excellent apostle, and the want of regard to so obvious a key, has led many into subtleties of interpretation, which have had no foundation but in their own ingenious reveries.

64 And exhorts to gratitude for the blessings of the gospel.

SECT.

i.

Col.

I. 11.

persecution you meet with in the world, and *long suffering*ⁱ under all provocation; which I wish you may be enabled to bear, not only with composure and dignity of spirit, but with joy too, while you expect that blessed and exalted 12 hope which the gospel sets before you. Yes, my brethren, I desire, that instead of lamenting the calamities to which so holy a profession exposes you, you may be continually giving thanks to the Father of all grace and mercy, who hath called us all, whether originally Jews or Gentiles, into the communion of his church, and who hath, by the renewing and sanctifying influences of his Spirit upon our hearts, made us, though naturally so much indisposed for it, now to become fit for part in the inheritance^k, which he had prepared and assigned as the final reward and felicity of the saints; who, when they have passed through the dark scenes which Providence has allotted them here, shall remain in 13 immortal light and glory. Yea, we reckon it our perpetual duty to render these acknowledgments to him who hath, by the declarations of his gospel and the influences of his grace, rescued us from the power of darkness^l, and transferred [us] from the territories of Satan, the prince of it, into the glorious and happy kingdom
 14 of his beloved Son; In whom we have ample redemption, from the tyranny of all our enemies, and from the destruction with which the Divine justice threatened us, by the pouring forth of his blood, [even] the remission of sins, for which we were ourselves incapable of making any satisfaction, and which, if they had not been thus expiated, would have sunk us down to final condemnation and despair.

long-suffering with joyfulness;

12 Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints
 in light,

13 Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son;

14 In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins.

IMPROVE-

i Long-suffering.] See note c on Rom. ii. 1, Vol. III. p. 395.

k Part in the inheritance. Μέρτιον κληρονομίας is the proportion of an inheritance which falls by lot to each of those among whom it is divided; alluding, as Dr. Whitby supposes, to the manner in which the land of Canaan was cantoned out to the tribes. Dr. Scott endeavours to shew that the phrase saints in light, particularly refers to the lustre of the glorified body of the saints, who shall be clothed after the resurrection with a visible lucid glory, resembling that of the Shechinah. Scott's Christian Life, Vol. III. p. 198, 199.

l Rescued us from the power of darkness.]

Many have thought the apostle speaks of himself as one of the Gentile converts; but we have great reason to believe, that when Divine grace made him sensible of what he had been in his Pharisaical state, while a blasphemer, a persecutor, and injurious, he saw himself to have been under the power of darkness, as Christ represents those of the Jews to have been, who influenced by the spirits of darkness, were combined against him, Luke xxii. 53. Yet none can doubt, but that the ignorance and sin, confusion and misery, which reigned in the Gentile world, was also in the apostle's thoughts when he used this expression.

IMPROVEMENT.

WE see in this epistle, as in all the rest, the most genuine discoveries of the real temper of the apostle. The same views ^{sect.} which he had opened upon other churches, the same kind senti-_{1.} Ver. 1, 2 ments which he had expressed towards them, does he here discover and express still glorying in his office as an apostle of Christ :
still wishing to his Christian brethren grace and peace, as beyond all comparison the best of blessings ; still congratulating them on their faith in Christ and love to each other ; still making continual_{3, 4} mention of them in his prayers ; and recommending them to the grace of God, in which we, as they, continue to stand. ₅

For ever adored be the Divine goodness, that the word of God,₆ which sets before us an hope laid up in the heavens, hath been manifested unto us and all the world! Let us often examine ourselves as to the fruit it hath brought forth in our own hearts and lives. Let us be solicitous for ourselves and others, that we may in a more spiritual and intelligent manner be filled with the know- ledge of his will, in all its compass and extent, so far as he has been₉ pleased to reveal it ; and that this knowledge may produce in us the most substantial effects, so as to engage us to *walk worthy of the*₁₀ Lord, whose name we bear, and in a manner which he may behold with approbation and pleasure ; being fruitful and increasing more and more in every good work, that our barrenness may not reproach our profession, and that the great vital truths of Christianity may not seem to be dead or dormant in our hearts.

To give them their full energy on our souls, we need the ope-₁₁ ration of God's glorious and mighty power, by which they may not only be established in all patient long-suffering, but inspired with holy joy. Then shall we breathe forth lively acknowledgments to the Father, who hath revealed unto us that *glorious in-*₁₂ heritance which he distributes amongst the saints of light, even that kingdom where they all reign in everlasting purity, friendship and joy. May he prepare us to receive our lot, and take up our abode there ! For this end did he rescue us from the power of darkness, and call us to the external privileges of those who con-₁₃ stitute the kingdom of his dear Son : for this did he set before us that redemption which we have in his blood, even the *remission of*₁₄ our sins. And O ! how inexcusable shall we be if we make ourselves the slaves of sin, while we have our abode in the visible kingdom of Christ ; and trampling upon his blood, and the act of grace

SECT. I. grace which is established in it, seal ourselves up under a guilt never to be removed; a guilt heightened to infinite degrees of provocation and malignity by the very methods which have been taken to expiate it!

SECT. II.

To promote their thankfulness for their part in the gospel, and engage their adherence to it in its greatest purity, the apostle represents to them the dignity of our blessed Redeemer's person, and the methods he hath taken to make reconciliation for sinners.
Col. I. 15—23.

COLOSSIANS I. 15.

SECT. II. I HAVE just been speaking to you of that redemption which we have in the blood of Christ, even the remission of our sins; and I must now lead you more attentively to reflect who he is, to whom we are under such immense obligations. And you will find his dignity and glory to be such, that you can never conceive of any thing adequate to them. For he is indeed the brightest and most express image of the invisible and eternal God^a, whom no man hath seen at any time, nor can see; [and] the First-born of the whole creation^b, existing before it, and begotten to inherit it as the great Heir of all.

16 And his nature has a transcendent excellency, infinitely superior to any thing that is made; for by him were all things created^c, things in heaven and things on earth. From him were derived the visible splendor of the celestial luminaries, the sun, the moon, and the stars, even all the

Col. I. 15. WHO is the image of the invisible God, the First-born of every creature :

16 For by him were all things created that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, &c a The image of the invisible—God.] It is surprising to observe how expressly Philo the Jew, in more places than one, calls the Logos or word of which he speaks, the image of God. See Dr. Scott's Christian Life, Vol. III. p. 559.

b The first-born of the whole creation.] Mr. Fleming would render, πρωτόγονος πατήρ; κτίσιως, the first Creator, or Producer, of every creature. Mr. Pierce observes, πρωτόγονος; sometimes signifies the dam that produces its first birth, and then the sense would be, He who, as it were, at the first-birth, by the exertion of his creating power, brought forth all things. It is certain that Christ is often called God's First-born his First-begotten, and his Only-begotten Son. Psal. lxxxix. 27; Rom. vii. 29; Heb. i. 6; John i. 14, 18; iii. 16, 18; 1 John iv. 9; and therefore I did not think it warrantable to change our translation of that word; though πάσης κτίσεως, so naturally signifies the whole creation, and that version seems to give so much nobler and more determinate a sense, than every creature, that I could have no doubt as to the reasonableness of preferring it.

c By him were all things created.] To interpret this as the Socinians do of the new creation in a spiritual sense, is so unnatural, that one could hardly believe, if the evidence were not so undeniably strong, that any set of learned commentators could fall into it.

or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him and for him.

the hosts of these lower heavens, and from him the yet brighter glories of invisible and angelic beings, who dwell and reign above, by whatever names and honours distinguished; i. e. their [they be] thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all the various orders of heavenly spirits, which may be designed by such or the like titles, the import of which is not exactly known to us mortals. Yet these, with all other things in the celestial as well as terrestrial regions, were created by him and for him, they are the productions of his almighty power, and were made that he might be exalted and glorified in them. And he is before all, both in the duration and dignity of his nature, and in him all things, which constitute this universal system, do continually subsist in that harmonious order of being, which renders it one beautiful whole; whereas, unsupported by him, it would immediately run into confusion, or fall back into its original nothing.

sect.

16.

col.

169.

17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist.

18 And he is the head of the body, the church; who is the Beginning, the First-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence

And it is worthy of our particular consideration, that he, who is thus the Head and Lord of all, is in a peculiar sense the Head of the church, [which] he [is] graciously pleased to own as the body, and which he with amazing condescension has united with the strictest bonds to himself, taking it under his peculiar guardianship, government and care: [even he] who is, as we before declared the Beginning of the creation of God, and having stooped to assume our nature and to die in it, was also appointed to be the First-born from the dead^d, the first who ever rose to an endless life; that so in all things he might have the pre-eminence, suitable to the infinitely superior dignity of his nature above all created beings. For in him his Father is ever well-pleased, as he declared by a voice from heaven: and it was his sovereign pleasure, as dwelling in him, to inhabit the whole fulness of the church: and, to qualify him for the high office which he sustains, he hath appointed that all fulness of gifts and graces should ever reside in him^e, even all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

17

18

19

19 For it pleased the Father, that in him should all fulness dwell;

^d First-born from the dead.] Mr. Fleming would render it the Effluent (or Prince, who is) the first raiser of the dead. (Christil. Vol. I. p. 216.) But I have given here, as every where else, what appeared to me the most, surest, and most natural sense, and the best commentators are agreed in it. e That all things should reside in him.] There is undoubtedly an analogity in the original phrase, ὅσα ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκείνῳ

SECT.

ii.

Col.
I. 20.

And it hath pleased the Father likewise by him to reconcile all things to himself, that is, to the purposes of his own glory, having made peace by the blood of the cross; by which the design of the ceremonial law having been answered, the obligations of it were abolished, and the wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles broken down. Yea by him [God hath reconciled all things] to each other; whether things on earth, that is, Jews or Gentiles, or things in heaven, that is celestial spirits, who are now reconciled to fallen men, and incorporated with them into one holy and happy society.

- 21 And the calling of the Gentile nations into the church is one important part of this plan; so that you, who were once alienated, and enemies in [your] mind to the blessed God by wicked works, he hath now reconciled to himself and to the society of his people. And this he hath done in the body of his flesh ^g, which he hath assumed, and by that death which he hath suffered therein, that so he might present you holy and blameless, and free from all accusation in his sight. You will certainly be so presented, if ye continue established and grounded in the faith in which you have been instructed, and be not by any floods of affliction, or tempests of temptation, removed and carried away from the important

20 And (having made peace through the blood of his cross), by him to reconcile all things unto himself, by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven.

21 And you that were sometimes alienated, and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled.

22 In the body of his flesh, through death, to present you holy and unblameable, and unreprouvable in his sight:

23 If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope καθικουσιν. Mr. Pierce would render it in or by him to inhabit all fulness, that is, the whole church or body of Christ: and that rendering would include the sense of ours, referring to God's dwelling in Christ, and so with us. Compare Rom. xi. 12, 25. But I was cautious of altering our version of so important a text without certain and evident necessity. But some critics have observed that when what grammarians call an infinite verb is in the New Testament joined with the word εὐδοκία, it signifies the action of him who is pleased, which would indeed make the passage parallel to Eph. ii. 21, 22. Compare Eph. i. 23, where the church is called πληρωμα, that is, God's fulness. See Pierce in loc. As the word Father is not in the original, Mr. Reynolds would render it he (that is, Christ was pleased that in him (i. e. in himself) all fulness should dwell.) Reyn. on Angels, p. 76.) But not to insist on the harshness of the interpretation in other respects, it seems most evident that the whole connection determines the sense quite another way.

f By him to reconcile all things, &c.] Dr.

Whitby would render it, "by him to make all things friendly in him, making peace between them by the blood of his cross;" and I apprehend that to be the true sense, and the only sense in which things in heaven can be said to be reconciled; for if it were to be granted, according to the assertion of Mr. Reynolds in the foregoing place, that the angels received confirming grace in Christ, they could not upon that account be said to be reconciled; but when a breach commenced between man and the blessed God, the angels, as faithful subjects, must join with him against the rebellious creature, and be ready to act as enemies to him while he continued the enemy of God.

g In the body of his flesh through death.] Some have understood this as if it had been said, He hath now by his death reconciled you or incorporated you into the body of his church, which is to him as his own flesh. Compare Eph. ii. 16; v. 29, 30. But surely the body of his flesh most literally and naturally signifies that body of mortal flesh which he was pleased to assume that he might be capable of suffering.

hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven; whereof I Paul am made a minister;

portant hope of a happy immortality, brought to us by the glorious gospel; which ye have heard [and] which hath not only been published among the Jews, but, by a special commission from God, been preached to the whole creation under heaven, as a message which extends to all the species of mankind; by which he commandeth all men every where to repent, and promises salvation to all who believe and obey. Of which gospel I Paul am appointed a minister, and esteem it my peculiar honour and happiness that I am so.

HECT.
II.
Col.
1. 23.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET us learn by this sublime discourse of our holy apostle how we are to conceive of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whose glory he so wisely and happily consecrated the labours of his pen and of Ver. his life; and while we commemorate that blood of his in which 14 we have redemption, even the remission of our sins, let us bow to 15 him as the image of the invisible God, and the First-born of the whole creation. And, whatever discoveries we may at any time receive, as to the display of Divine power, wisdom, and goodness, in the formation of the visible or invisible world, let us remember that by Christ all things in both were created, not excepting thrones and dominions, principalities and powers. The angels of God 16 worship him, as with and by the Father, their great Original and Support, acknowledging with Paul, and with the whole catholic church, as taught by him, that in Christ all things subsist. Let us then, with the whole host of heaven, bow down before him, and worship him that sits upon the throne and the Lamb. Let us with all humility adore his condescension, in uniting us to himself in such dear and intimate bonds, and avowing himself the Head of the church, which he disdains not to call his body, though he be the beginning of the creation of God, as well as the First-born from the 18 dead, and beyond comparison pre-eminent in all.

Important indeed are the consequences of this his condescension! It is by him that God is reconciled to us, and dwells in us. It is the blood of his cross that hath made peace between Jews and Gentiles, between heaven and earth. Justly might the angels have 20 forsaken this earth of ours, and have ascended to heaven, to enter their protest against sinful man, yea to seek a commission for executing vengeance upon the apostate creature. But now, through Christ, they are become our friends and our brethren. At his command they minister unto the heirs of salvation, and will continue SECT. ii. continue their kind offices, till heaven gives the interview which earth denies, and lays a foundation for the endearments of an everlasting friendship.

- 23 O that this reconciling gospel might be effectually preached to every creature under heaven! But to obtain its effect, it must subdue our hearts to holiness. To be still under the power of sin, to go on in a course of evil works, is to continue the enmity with God, and all his holy and happy creatures. Let us see to it, that we thankfully accept the reconciliation which the gospel proposes.
- 22 Then shall we at length be presented blameless, irreprouchable and holy in his sight.
- 23 As we hope for this end, let nothing remove us from our steadfastness, nor from that glorious hope of the gospel for which it is certain nothing can be an equivalent. May divine grace establish and confirm us in it, and make us victorious over every thing that might attempt to supplant our feet and take away our crown!

SECT. III.

The Apostle takes occasion from what he had before said of the excellency of Christ's person, and the riches of his redeeming grace, to express his own solicitude to fulfil his ministry among them in the most successful manner; and lays open his tender concern for the Colossians and other Christians in their neighbourhood, that they might be established in their adherence to the gospel.
Col. I. 24, to the end. Chap. II. 1—7.

COLOSSIANS I. 24.

SECT. iii. NOW, my brethren, give me leave to tell you, that I am so far from repenting of the ministry in which I am engaged, on account of any difficulties it brings along with it, that on the contrary I rejoice even in my sufferings for you, and with great pleasure fill up whatever is wanting of the afflictions of Christ^a in his members, by taking part of them in my own flesh, for the sake of his body, which, as I said before,

Col. I. 24. WHO now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake a Fill up whatever is wanting, &c.] Nothing could be farther from the apostle's intention (as we may learn from the whole tenor of his writings) than to intimate that the sufferings of Christ were imperfect, as to that fulness of atonement which was necessary in order to the justification of believers. But he deeply retained in his mind the impression of that first lesson which he had from his Saviour's mouth, viz. that he was persecuted in his members (Acts ix. 4); he therefore considers it as the plan of Providence, that a certain measure of sufferings should be endured by this body, of which Christ was the Head; and he rejoices to think, that what he endured in his own person was congruous to that wise and gracious scheme.

sake, which is the church:

25 Whereof I am made a minister according to the dispensation of God, which is given to me for you, to fulfil the word of God;

26 Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages, and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints:

27 To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory;

28 Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus:

29 Whereunto I also labour, striving according to his working, which worketh in me mightily.

H. 1. For I would that b Whom we preach, &c.] All this discourse centers in the great view of engaging the Colossians to adhere to Christianity; and it is the church, so dear to him the common Head, and to every member vitally united to him.

Of which church I was made a minister, to warn upon it, and serve it in every office of humble love, according to the dispensation of God, which was given me in respect of you, that I might thoroughly and faithfully preach the whole word of God in the gospel. [Even] that great mystery, which was hid from so many preceding ages and generations, but is now manifested to his saints of the Gentile nations as well as of Jewish extraction; To whom God was graciously determined to make known what is the rich glory of this mystery; to discover it, I say, even among the Gentiles; which rich display of Divine grace is all summed up in [this] one word, [that] Christ [is] in you, the hope of eternal glory; being formed by Divine grace in your hearts, he brings to you, who were once without hope, and without God in the world (Eph. ii. 12), the bright beamings of this blessed prospect, even a glorious and holy immortality.

And this is the illustrious Saviour, whom we, in the midst of all opposition, still continue to preach, admonishing every man, and instructing every man, as the respective circumstances of particular persons require. And in the management of this important ministry, we conduct ourselves with all the wisdom and discretion we can obtain, that no single soul may be lost by our means; but that we may, if possible, present every man in due time perfect in Christ Jesus, when he shall appear to make up his final account. To which important [purpose] I also labour in the sphere allotted me with diligence and resolution, exerting myself to the utmost, and striving with an intenseness, like that of one who contends for a crown in your well-known Grecian games. Yet I arrogate nothing to myself here, for all is carried on according to his energy, which operates with power in me, and supports me in the glorious contest, whereas otherwise I should sink, and become the derision of mine enemies.

Nor is it without attending carefully to their every verse, and almost every line, suggests more directly or obliquely some strong argument to that purpose.

SECT.
iii.Col.
II. 1.

their full import, that I have made use of those strong terms which you have now been reading, to express the manner in which I exert myself in the great trust committed to me. For I earnestly wish you to know what a vigorous contention^c I have with a variety of antagonists, for you, and those of Laodicea, and as many as have not seen my face in the flesh^d. For indeed my struggle for the gospel, while under this painful confinement, is animated, not merely by considerations of personal friendship, for those whom I particularly know and love, but by a most benevolent regard to the good of mankind in general, known or unknown, that they may receive and retain this glorious revelation, and have it delivered to them with all possible advantage: That their hearts may be comforted by the consolation of the Holy Spirit, and animated to every good resolution^e, being knit together and compacted in mutual Christian love to the whole body, and to Christ the great Head of it: and that being thus cemented, they may attain the richest and most assured understanding^f of the gospel, and, being enlightened in the clear and heart-affecting knowledge of it, they may be awakened to the most courageous and grateful acknowledgment of the sublime and adorable mystery of God, even of the Father and of Christ. Most heartily do I wish, that, however it may be despised as foolishness by a vain world, they may steadily profess it, and live upon the blessings derived from that ye knew what great conflict I have for you, and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh;

2 That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ;

^e What a vigorous contention.] The original words ηλικον αγωνα, denote a kind of agony into which he was thrown. It grieved the apostle to think how incapable he was rendered of serving them otherwise than by his letters and his prayers. O that such language might inspire every minister who reads it with a desire to use his liberty to the best of purposes, and to exert himself as, under such confinement, he would wish he had done!

^d Have not seen my face in the flesh.] Or, as it might be rendered, seen me in person. Hence some have inferred, that he had never seen Colosse or Laodicea; but Theodoret thinks he means, he had not only a conflict for them, but for others whom he had not so much as seen. Possibly he may intend to intimate, that he was not only concerned for those members of these churches whom he personally knew, but likewise for others to whom he was a perfect stranger, and who might have been converted after he left them. Yet I think this epistle contains no argument from whence it can certainly be inferred that he was personally acquainted with these Christians.

^e Be comforted.] The original word περικληθισαι signifies not only to have consolation administered under affliction, but to be exhorted and quickened, excited and animated, and so recovered from indolence and irresolution, as well as dejection.

^f The richest and most assured understanding.] Εις παντα ωδων της πληροφειας της συνειστας. This is an extremely emphatical phrase, more agreeable to the Hebrew than the Greek idiom, and it is one of the many instances of that strong manner of speaking with which the writings of our apostle abound.

3 In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

4 And this I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words.

5 For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit, joying and beholding your order, and the stedfastness of your faith in Christ.

6 As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him;

7 Rooted and built up in him, and established in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving.

from it; Even from the gospel of the blessed Jesus, in whom are hid all the noblest and most desirable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, himself being the incarnate wisdom of God^g. And this I say of the perfection of Christ and his gospel, that no man may deceive you by the enticing discourses of human philosophy, and draw you off from a becoming attachment to him. For though I be absent from you in the flesh, yet in spirit I am with you, and as my heart interests itself most tenderly in all your concerns, God is pleased, by the revelation of his Spirit, to give me a very particular view of your circumstances, so that the very sight of it could hardly be more distinct and affecting (1 Cor. v. 3.) [And] indeed in your present situation, it gives me a great deal of pleasure, and I am continually rejoicing, while I thus behold your regular and beautiful order, and the steadiness of your faith in Christ, which your enemies are in vain endeavouring to shake. Be concerned⁶ therefore, as you desire to retain this faith, to act in a manner answerable to it: and as you have received Christ Jesus the Lord, to whom you have vowed a most faithful obedience, an obedience indeed to which he has the justest claim, [so] let it be your care to walk in all holy conformity and subjection to him; That it may⁷ appear you are deeply rooted and solidly edified in him, building all your hopes of pardon and salvation on him and his religion alone; and confirmed in the purity of his faith, as ye have been taught it, abounding more and more in the lively exercise of it, with the most cordial and cheerful thanksgiving to God, who has been pleased to call you to the participation of all the blessings which are inseparably connected with it.

IMPROVEMENT.

To bear sufferings with patience, has justly been reckoned an high attainment; and it was the boasted strength and glory of the Pagan philosophy to teach men to do it: a glory in which it was often

^g Treasures of wisdom and knowledge.] Mr. Howe thinks that the word γινώσκω; here has some oblique reference to the gnostics, or sect of the knowing men, as we might express it in English (Vol. II. page 526); but I see no evidence of their having prevailed so early.

SECT. often deficient, a strength which often failed them, who had the
 iii. fairest opportunities of being proficient in their schools. But Paul Ver. had learnt by the philosophy of Jesus to rejoice in them, when con-24 sidered as subservient to the honour of Christ, and to the good of Chap. his church, even of those members of it whom he had never seen in ii. 1. the flesh; rejoicing thereby to fulfil his embassy, and to confirm Chap. that important word of God which taught the mystery concealed
 i. 26. from so many ages and generations. And what was that mystery, but the same that is so clearly revealed to us, even that Christ in us 27 is the hope of glory?

To Gentile sinners that were without hope is hope now preached; the hope not only of felicity, but glory. And this by Christ, not only as proclaimed amongst us, for to many that hear of his name, and of the scheme of salvation by him, he is a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, but by Christ as in us. Highly are they honoured, who have it in charge to preach him. May they learn from the apostle how it is to be done. It is to be attended with practical in-28 structions and admonitions, to be conducted with the greatest prudence and care, and to be addressed to every man, according to his respective character and circumstances in life; that so, if it be by any means possible to prevent it, none of those that are committed to their care and charge may be lost, but every man may at length be presented perfect in Christ in that day, when among all that truly belong to him, there shall be no remaining imperfections.

29 Surely this is a cause in which it is worth their while to strive. May the strength of God work powerfully in them for that purpose! Then will all our hearts be comforted, when we have attained to the full assurance of the truth of our religion, when we courageously acknowledge and maintain it, when we improve it to the great end for which it was preached to us, and, having professed to receive Christ Jesus as our Lord, make it our care in a suitable manner to 6 walk in him. For this purpose, let us endeavour to be deeply
 7 rooted and grounded in him, confirmed in the faith as the apostles taught it; giving thanks to God for the instructions we receive in it, and numbering it, as we have great reason to do, among the choicest mercies we could receive, even from an Omnipotent hand, not only that we hear the sound of the gospel, but that we have felt its vital influence upon our hearts.

Chap. ii. 2.

SECT. IV.

The Apostle largely cautions the Colossians against suffering their minds to be corrupted from the simplicity of Christianity, either by Pagan philosophy or Jewish tradition, representing to them how complete they were in Christ without the addition of either. Col. II. 8—19.

Col. II. 8.

BEWARE lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ;

COLOSSIANS II. 8.

SEE to it therefore, my dear brethren, that, as you are under such strong engagements to abound in all the fruits of that gospel which you have been taught with so much advantage, no man make a prey of you, by pretended philosophy and vain deceit, according to the tradition of men, of which both Jews and Gentiles are so fond^b; and according to the elements of that literature which are so much regarded in the world^c by persons of different religious persuasions in it, but which are not by any means according to Christ, nor agreeable to the genius and simplicity of his gospel. For in him⁹ dwelleth all the fulness of Godhead bodily and substantially, so that this human nature is the temple of the Deity^d. And ye are complete¹⁰ in

ACT.

11.

Col.

II. 8.

⁹ For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

¹⁰ And ye are complete a [Vain deceit.] This may include any thing that would encourage a trust it was not able to support; and particularly may refer to superstitious rites and ceremonies, as well as unprofitable speculations. Different tempers lead to different excesses and errors on these heads.

b [Of which both Jews and Gentiles are so fond.] Mr. Pierce thinks it is improbable that the Gentile philosophers should trouble themselves to dispute with Christians, or that they should admit any of their notions, to adulterate Christianity with them; and therefore that all the corruptions here referred to were brought in by Jewish leaders. But it appears from Philo and Josephus, that there was such an intercourse between the philosophers and the Jews, to give some tincture to their religious notions: so that I think it much more natural to suppose the apostle intended to guard them against both.

c [Elements of the world.] Mr. Pierce thinks στοιχεῖα signifies shadows as opposed to substance. Compare Gal. iv. 3. 9; 1 ph.

iv. 14—16. Such the Jewish ceremonies undoubtedly were; but there may be a peculiar spirit in speaking of the boasted dictates of Pagan Philosophy, but as elements or lessons for children, when compared with the sublime instruction to be received in the school of Christ.

d [Dwelleth all the fulness, &c.] I was unwilling to vary any thing from the common version of so important a text, without more certain reason than I could discern here; else I might perhaps have rendered it, in whom the whole fulness of Deity substantially dwells. It is plain that the Godhead is an anglicism equivalent to Deity. Compare xvii. 49. And I cannot think that these wonderful words are intended merely to signify, that God hath lodged in the bands of Christ a store of gifts, to be conferred upon men; as if the passage were merely parabolical. 1 ph. iii. 13, and John. 16. 17. 28. Mr. Pierce explains it; while Satan sinks it yet lower, as if it only referred to his complete knowledge of the Divine will. I assuredly believe,

SECT.
iv.
Col.
II. 10.

in him; happy enough in such a Master, and in such a Saviour, who is able to fill you with all knowledge, grace, and glory, without any such additions to his religion as human philosophy or superstition would make: even in him, who is the Head of all principality and power, from whom the angelic world and creatures of the most exalted rank and dignity in it, to whom some would direct your devotions, derive their light and holiness, their honour and felicity.

- 11 Let me therefore exhort you most steadily to adhere to this glorious Redeemer, in whom I may say, ye also are circumcised, with the circumcision not performed with hands, according to Jewish rites, but with another kind of circumcision, far more noble and excellent, which that was intended symbolically to express, even by the putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, renouncing all the deeds of it. Your engagements to this you have expressed by that ordinance which I may call the circumcision of Christ; it being that by which he hath appointed that we should be initiated into his church, as the members of it formerly were by circumcision.
- 12 And to this new and more gentle rite you have conformed yourselves, being buried with him in baptism^e, to express your desire of dying to sin, as he died for it; in which ordinance also ye were represented as raised with him, and in consequence thereof animated to all newness of life, by the belief you then professed in [that] wonderful display of the energy of God^f who plete in him, which is the Head of all principality and power.

11 In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, by the circumcision of Christ:

12 Buried with him in baptism, wherein also you are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God who believe, that, as it contains an evident allusion to the Schecinah in which God dwelt, so it ultimately refers to the adorable mystery of the union of the Divine and human natures, in the person of the glorious Emanuel, which makes him such an object of our hope and confidence, as the most exalted creature with the most glorious endowments, could never of himself be.

^e Buried with him in baptism.] For the import of this phrase, and the validity of some arguments often drawn from it, see Rom. vi. 4, Vol III. p. 434, note d. Dr. Gale pleads, that as this church at Colosse was planted earlier than that at Rome, and this epistle was written later than that to the Romans, it more abundantly confirms the perpetuity of baptism, as it supposes all to whom it was addressed to have been partakers of that ordinance, whether they were or were not descended from Christian parents. Gale's Serm. Vol. II. No. 7, p. 202, 203.

^f Belief in [that] energy of God, &c.] Whatever evidence there may be from other scriptures, to prove that faith is the effect of a Divine operation on the mind, of which I am fully persuaded (compare Eph. ii. 8. and note there.) I think the genius of the Greek language affords an argument which they, who understand it, must feel on reading this passage, to prove that it is not the sense of this text, ἐν πίστει τῆς ἐνεργείας. Thus πίστις ἀληθείας is belief of the truth, 2 Thess. ii. 13, 15, and πίστις τοῦ Κυρίου, the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, or believing on him, James ii. 1. Compare Phil. i. 27, where πίστις τοῦ εὐαγγελίου is believing the gospel.

who hath raised him from the dead, who raised him from the dead, and thereby confirmed his doctrine in general, and in particular confirmed our hopes of a glorious resurrection and immortality, if we continue in a faithful adherence to him.

1147.
IV.
Col.
II. 12.

13 And you being dead in your sins, and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses.

And you, Gentiles, who were once dead in a course of notorious trespasses, and in the uncircumcision of your flesh, abandoned to all its sensual and irregular inclinations, hath he also quickened together with him, making his death and resurrection the means of spiritual life to you; having freely forgiven all your offences, and condescended graciously to take you into covenant with himself: And this upon a more

14 Blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross:

easy and agreeable footing than Israel before stood; having blotted out, with respect to us, the hand-writing of Jewish ordinances and institutions, which was contrary to us, Acts xv. 10; and had an evident efficacy, either to load us with an heavy burden, or to alienate the hearts of our Jewish brethren from us. And therefore he hath taken it away from between us, as I may so express it, nailing it to [his] cross, and thereby has cancelled it, as bonds are cancelled by being struck through with a nail; while he has accomplished the purposes of the ceremonial law, by that sacrifice of himself, and thereby caused the obligation of it to cease. By this

15 And having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing important transaction he hath also made us victorious over all our spiritual enemies, and especially the formidable spirit of darkness; having spoiled these principalities and powers of the [Having blotted out, &c.] I have given what appeared the most easy, natural, and comprehensive sense. Mr. Peirce says, the word χειρῶν, rendered hand-writing, signifies a sort of a note under a man's hand, whereby he obliges himself to the payment of any debt. The Jews bound themselves to God, by their profession of Judaism, not to worship any other Deity, nor to neglect any Divine institution; in consequence of which they rejected all communion with the Gentiles; and thus it was against them. The word ἐγγράμια has been found to signify a royal mandate or decree, which shews it refers to the Mosaic law.

[Having spoiled principalities and powers.] It is generally known that Mr. Peirce, in his interpretation of this text, gives it a very singular turn; as if the sense were, "That God hath divested the good angels of that authority which they had in the world before the incarnation of Christ, and caused them to attend his triumph when he ascended into heaven, and publicly proposed them as an example (ἀποδείξας) of excused and acceptable obedience to him." And it is pleaded with considerable plausibility, that ἐνδοξάζει is used in that sense, 2 Cor. ii. 14. This he thinks suits the connection, as this spoiling principalities and powers, is ascribed to God, and as it is introduced as an argument against worshipping angels. But it is certain, that principalities and powers, may indifferently signify good or bad angels. Compare Eph. vi. 12. God hath undoubtedly triumphed in the triumph of his Son, and the sense which Mr. Peirce takes the word ἀποδείξας is a very unsuccessful one. Dr. Whittly observes, that Cerinthus and Simon Magus, whose doctrine he imagines the apostle is opposing in this part of his epistle, pretended to deliver men from the power of evil spirits, by whom they said the world was made and governed.

[continued.]

SECT.
iv.
Col.
II. 15.

the trophies which they had gained, by drawing us into the grand original apostacy, and subjecting to themselves this part of God's rational creation; he hath made them an open spectacle to the whole world, triumphing over them by it, even by that cross whereby they hoped to have triumphed over him. But God turned their counsels against themselves, and ruined their empire by that death of his Son which they had been so eager to accomplish.

16 Since therefore the ceremonial law is now abolished, let not any, who is in a bigotted manner attached to it, judge and condemn any of you Gentile Christians, in regard to the use of meat or drink forbidden by it, or in respect to a feast which is appointed, or to a new-moon or sabbathsⁱ; ordained as times of sacred rest and solemn worship, according to that ritual, but not therefore by any consequence holy to us.

17 Which things are indeed, in their original design and constitution, only a shadow of good things to come, intended to lead the mind to spiritual and evangelical blessings: but the body and substance of them [is] given us in the gospel of Christ, in whom they all center, and having the latter, we need not be solicitous about the former.

18 Let no one, therefore, who may ever so eagerly desire it, or ever so artfully attempt it, deprive you of your great prize^k, for which as Christians you contend, by [an affected] humility, and the worship of angels (which some Jewish zealots, as well as heathen philosophers, so eagerly inculcate,^l intruding officiously and presumptuously into triumphing over them in it.

16 Let no man therefore judge you in meat or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days:

17 Which are a shadow of things to come: but the body is of Christ.

18 Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which ⁱ Sabbaths.] Mr. Baxter observes, with his usual spirit, that we may well wonder at those good men that can find the prohibition of a form a prayer, or a written sermon in the second commandment, and yet cannot find the abrogation of the Jewish law, relating to the sabbath, in these plain words of the apostle. For it is certainly most arbitrary to pretend, that these words do not include a weekly sabbath, when there was no other solemnity so generally signified by that name, though the use of the plural number shews that all days of sacred rest appointed by Moses were to be taken in.

^k Let no man deprive you, &c.] The original is, μή τις υμᾶς ἀρπαξέτω τὴν βασιλείαν ὑμῶν. I suppose it may to signify a desire of any to impose upon them, but Sir Norton Knatchbull connects it with the words immediately following, and renders the whole, "Let no man deceive you with fallacious arguments, who is delighted with humility and the worship of angels." The word κατασκευασμένη undoubtedly signifies humility, in general, but, as the connection determines it to signify what was affected and at best fantastic, if not counterfeit, I have added a word in the version.

^l Worship of angels.] It evidently appears from several passages in Philo to have been the opinion of that learned Jew, that angels were messengers who presented our prayers to God, as well as brought down his favours to us. Heb. presents thus which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind;

into that which he hath not seen; while they pretend to tell us wonderful secrets, relating to their various ranks, subordinations, and offices. This may render a man the admiration of the ignorant and inconsiderate, but it is indeed the result of his being vainly puffed up by his corrupt and fleshly mind, with the conceit of things which it is impossible he should understand, and a desire of introducing novelties into religion. And so men wander themselves, and mislead others, in consequence of their not holding and properly adhering to him whom I mentioned above as the Head even the Lord Jesus Christ; from whom the whole body of the church being supplied, and compacted by the union of various joints and bands, increases in grace and holiness continually, and at length attaineth to the increase of God; to whom therefore I most earnestly exhort you, my brethren, continually and stedfastly to adhere.

Mat. 13.
16.
Col. 2.
Eph. 4.

19 And not holding the head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increases with the increase of God.

19

IMPROVEMENT.

LET us contemplate, with daily pleasure, the glorious effects of the death of our blessed Redeemer, by which the Mosaic law was abolished, the hand-writing of ordinances blotted out; that death, by which so glorious a victory over our spiritual enemies was obtained, by which the infernal principalities and powers were stripped of their trophies, and themselves exposed as an open spectacle. Let us improve this victory to all the glorious purposes for which it was intended. Let us above all consider it as an engagement to a life of exemplary holiness, especially as we are ourselves circumcised with the circumcision of Christ; as by baptism we are solemnly engaged to mortify all irregular affections, and, being buried with Christ in that solemn rite, to rise to all newness of life, having received the forgiveness of our sins, and being raised with Christ to the hope of eternal glory.

Let

this view of the matter as most humble and reverential, and there is no doubt but it prevailed among other Jews (compare Tob. xi. 14; xii. 19, 15); and that the apostle refers to this, seems much more probable than the interpretation of Tertullian, who would explain it of worship taught by angels, or persons pretending to receive revelation from them. Whether the heathen began so early as this to call those celestial spirits angels whom they had formerly called good demons, I do not certainly know; but it is evident, that very soon after the apostles' day they speak of angels and archangels, and recommend the worship of them under those names. See Jamblic. de Myst. sect. ii. cap. 2, 3. It is justly remarked by Bishop Burnet, that had it been the apostle's intention to give the least encouragement to any religious addresses to saints and angels, this would have been a very natural occasion of introducing the subject, and adjusting its proper boundaries. ibid. net on the Act. p. 225.

a U

SECT.
iv.

Let us be solicitous ever to maintain the strictest union with Christ as our Head, remembering how great an honour it is to be thus related to him, in whom dwelleth all the fulness of Godhead 9 bodily. Let us be careful, in virtue of this union, to live in the 19 communion of Christian love, with all the members of the body, and ourselves to grow with all the increase of God.

8 And let us guard against all those human traditions, or refine-16, 17 ments of philosophical speculation, which are disagreeable to these elements of Christ into which we have been initiated; and against every thing which could be an infringement of that liberty which Christ hath granted to his church, and which it is our duty to endeavour to maintain, against all encroachments; even though they should be made by any in his name, and under the pretence 18 of authority from him. It may be urged upon us as humility, to submit to such impositions, but it is the truest humility to maintain an exact obedience to the authority of our Divine Master, and to limit even our submission to those of our brethren whom we may most honour and love, by a regard to his command and institution. And if a due care is not taken in this respect, we may be deprived at least in some degree, of our prize, by the methods whereby some may endeavour to persuade us that we shall most effectually 8 secure it. May Divine wisdom preserve us from all those vain deceits whereby our faith might be corrupted, or our conformity to the plan of Christian institutions be rendered, in any respect, less beautiful, pure, and complete.

SECT. V.

The Apostle further cautions the Colossians against those corrupt additions to Christianity which some were attempting to introduce, especially by rigours and superstitions of their own devising; and exhorts them, as the properest method for their security, to be endeavouring to raise their hearts more to Christ, as their ascended Lord and life. Col. II. 20, to the end. Chap. III. 1—4.

COLOSSIANS II. 20.

Col. II. 20.

SECT.
v.Col.
II. 20.

I HAVE mentioned the relation in which you stand to Christ as your Head, and I must from hence take occasion farther to plead the obligations you are under to labour after a growing conformity to him in all things. If therefore ye are indeed (as by baptism ye profess to be dead with Christ^a, from the elements and rudiments

WHEREFORE, if ye be dead with Christ, from the rudiments

^a If therefore ye be dead with Christ, &c.] Some have considered this as the beginning of a new paragraph, addressed to Jewish zealots among them; and plead, in support ments of the world; why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances, of the world, from those things which among the Gentiles or the Jews men are apt to build so much upon, why, as if ye were still living as before in the world, and stood in that respect on an equal footing with others, do ye meddle with these appointments, subjecting yourselves to them: yea, and are ready yourselves to insist on the observation of them, and even to join in imposing them upon others. And particularly those which the Mosaic law inculcates, such as, touch not any thing ceremonially unclean, taste not any food which that prohibits, handle not any thing by which such pollution might be contracted^b. All things which tend to the corruption of that excellent religion into which you have the honour to be initiated; by the abuse of them, according to the commandments and doctrines of mistaken and ill-designing men, who insist so eagerly upon them, as if they were essential to salvation; though, as I observed before, they have answered their great end, so far as they were of Divine institution, and are now laid aside by the same authority that introduced them, so that all obligation upon the conscience is ceased. Concerning which things we may in the general observe, that they have indeed a prevalence of wisdom, and are in that view gravely insisted upon, especially by the more rigorous sects; but many of them are of such a nature, that even while that Jewish œconomy continued in force, they made no genuine part of it, but rather taught men to pervert religion, by making it to consist in will-worship, which they themselves devised, and, in an affected humility of address, and in a severity to the body; which, rigorous as it seemed, was far from being true mortification, or disposing the mind to it. On the contrary, while it puffed men up with a vain conceit of their own sanctity, it might be said rather to tend to the dishonourable satisfying of the

sect.
v.
Col.
II. 20.

21 (Touch not, taste not, handle not:

22 Which are all to perish with the using;) after the commandments and doctrines of men?

23 Which things have indeed a shew of wisdom in will-worship and humility, and neglecting of the body, not support of this opinion, that the subjection to ordinances which the apostle here reproves, is inconsistent with the applauses he had before bestowed on the Colossians. But it seems most natural to suppose that he addresses the society in general, and leaves it to their own consciences to determine which of them deserved the censure.

^b Touch not, taste not, handle not.] It has been observed, that the quick succession of these precepts, without any copulatives between, happily expresses the eagerness with which the seducing teachers inculcated these things. Dr. Whitby shews, that Corinthus' doctrine and precepts had much of this cast, and some of his quotations are remarkable in this view.

SECT.
V.Col.
II. 13.

III. 1.

the flesh^c. while it seemed most to afflict it : for that self-complacency, ostentation, and contempt of others, with which these severities are often attended, is indeed a carnal principle ; nor could the grossest sensualities be more contrary to the will of God and the genius of true religion.

- And let me farther improve the great principle I have laid down, and urge, that since ye are risen with Christ, ye should therefore seek things that are above^d the sphere of this mortal and animal life ; even there where Christ is sitting in dignity and felicity at the right hand of God.
- 2 Yes, my brethren, charge it continually on your consciences, that ye mind, prefer, affect, and pursue the things that are above, and not those [that are] here on this low earth. And this attachment to the great and glorious views of the invisible and eternal world, will moderate your regards to many other things about which
- 3 you are ready to be so much engaged. And surely this may reasonably be expected, for ye are by solemn profession, as I pleaded before, dead with Christ, and your new and better life flows from him, and is, as it were, hidden with Christ in God^e. A regard to an unseen Saviour is the great principle that animates it, and it centers on that blessed world where he reigns, and not in any honour to the satisfying of the flesh.

III. 1 If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God,

2 Set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth.

3 For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God.

^c Dishonourable satisfying of the flesh] Ὅσα ἐν τῷ σώματι ποιεῖτε πληροῦσαί τας σαρκας. I suppose the two clauses may be transposed, as it had been said, It is to such a satisfying of the flesh as does it no real honour ; which I take to be a meiosis, to express what is dishonourable ; whereas the highest honour of our bodies is to be the instruments of our souls in the service of God. Mr. Hove observes, that τιμω signifies provision, as well as honour, and thinks the sense to be, that though there was no appearance of providing for the flesh, yet there was yet a carnal kind of satisfaction in these affected severities, when proceeding from the principles of vain glory and ill-nature, which were as contrary to the genius of true religion as any of the grossest sensualities that could be imagined. Hove's Works, Vol. I. p. 577. And this is certainly the true sense in the general, though this explication of τιμω should be disputed. The Prussian Testament renders it, " Which things have indeed some appearance of wisdom, in that they are a voluntary worship, that they have an air of humility, that they spare not the body, and that they have no regard to the satiating the flesh : " which reads roundly, but gives a most unauthorised sense to εκ εν τῷ σώματι, and exchanges the spirit of the concluding words for a flat tautology.

^d Things that are above.] Calvin understands this of the sublimier parts of Christianity, as opposed to Jewish ceremonies and rudiments of the world, mentioned chap. ii. 20 ; but it cannot properly be said that these are with Christ in heaven. I think therefore the apostle proceeds on the principles he had laid down, to graft a most important practical exhortation, different from any he had advanced before (as he certainly does, ver. 5), yet nothing could more effectually tend to take them off from those bigotted attachments of which he was solicitous to cure them. A remarkable instance of that happy address which we have so often had opportunity of observing, and which an attentive reader will observe in many other places, where we have not had room to point it out.

^e Your life is hid, &c.] The life of the Christian is here represented as an invaluable jewel, and under a double security reserved in heaven, and laid up with Christ in God ; secure therefore as the abode of Christ with the Father, or as the fidelity and immutability of the Father himself could make it.

4 When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

and where God displays the brightest tokens of his majestic and gracious presence. And you have this farther transporting assurance, that when Christ [who is] the great Spring of our celestial life, and highest Object of our desire, shall appear in all the pomp and splendor of his final triumph, then you shall also appear with him in glory, making a part of that one bright and illustrious assembly which he shall then redeem from the power of the grave, and form to a perfection of soul, and lustre of body, suitable to the relation in which they all stand to him as the great conqueror of death and hell, and Sovereign of universal nature. Let us therefore contentedly wait for our supreme felicity till that glorious day shall come.

SECT.

Col. III. 4.

IMPROVEMENT.

LET us charge it on our hearts, by all our great and solemn Ver. obligations to Jesus, our beloved Saviour and glorified Head, that we study the nature of true religion with greater care, and practise it with greater constancy. Let us not place it in a zeal for ceremonial observances, according to the doctrines and commandments of men. Let us ever remember that Christ alone is the Lawgiver of his church, and let us soliciouſly guard against the abuses in religion which would be the consequence of introducing, and much more of imposing, human ordinances. Too sensibly has the church in all ages seen and felt the unhappy effects of such a temper. Its divisions, and its formality, may in a great measure be traced up to this source. Will-worship and a voluntary humility have proved its disgrace, and in some countries almost its ruin. Let us labour after sublimer views, and considering ourselves as risen with Christ, let us seek the things that are above. Let us cultivate greater spirituality of mind, and endeavour to have our hearings there where our Lord is.

20, 22

23

Chap. iii. 1.

Surely the reflection upon that relation in which we stand to him, in concurrence with that glory in which he is now enthroned, the kind designs he still bears to us, and the prospect we have of sitting down with him ere long in that kingdom, may well raise our thoughts thither, and bear us above all immoderate attachment to these low scenes of mortal life.

2

Let us therefore study more and more the hidden life of the Christian: and, considering Christ as our life, be often anticipating in our thoughts the great day of his appearance, and dwelling on the blessed hope of appearing with him in glory. But, O! how

4 dark

SECT.
v.

dark are our views of these things! How little do we feel of the sanctifying and elevating influence of this hope! Let us earnestly pray for a more abundant communication of Divine grace, that, deriving more and more of this spiritual life from Christ, we may have more suitable and affectionate apprehensions of that angelic life to which his love has destined us, and to which such a temper tends directly to lead us.

SECT. VI.

The Apostle presses the Colossians to guard against every degree of uncleanness, malice, and falsehood, and to abound in the practice of the opposite virtues, and in those devout exercises and evangelical views by which they might be animated to cultivate them.

SECT.
vi.

COLOSSIANS III. V.

Col.
III. 5.

YOU have heard of the glorious hope which we entertain as Christians, let me therefore urge it upon you, that you be influenced in a suitable manner by it, and particularly that it engage you to mortify those lusts which are so apt to dwell in your members that are on earth; such as fornication, uncleanness, and every other kind and degree of inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and an insatiable desire of any carnal gratification, an object which is indeed nothing less than idolatry, or paying that regard to the most unworthy things which is due to God alone. On account of which the wrath of God is coming, not only on those who profess themselves his people, but even on the children of disobedience, on heathens themselves, who bid the most open defiance to what we well know to be the first principles of true religion. Among whom ye also once walked, and had your conversation, partaking with your neighbours in all their enormities, when formerly ye lived among them, and made a part of their number. But now being converted to the pure, peaceful, and devout religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, see to it, that ye also put away all these enormities, and particularly the transports of open rage, the secret grudgings of concealed resentment, the malignant working of malice, the injuries of evil-speaking^a, the scandals of lewd conversation;

COL. III. 5.

MORTIFY therefore ^{your} members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness; inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry:

6 For which things sake, the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience.

7 In the which ye also walked sometime, when ye lived in them.

8 But now you also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy,

^a Evil-speaking.] The original word properly signifies blasphemy, but it includes not only impious speeches with regard to God which is the highest degree of maligmy; filthy communication out of your mouth.

9 Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds;

10 And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of him that created him;

11 Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Christ is all, and in all.

12 Put on therefore (as

tion^b; and let them all be resolutely banished out of your mouth, and out of your heart: Neither lie one to another, either in trade or common conversation; having solemnly professed to put off the old man with his iniquitous deeds, and entirely renounced all those corrupt affections which were naturally so prevalent in you; And having declared it as your design and resolution, to put on the new [man], all the branches of that contrary temper and disposition, which constitute the Christian character, and which is renewed in knowledge of our true duty and interest, and an universal holiness, as the genuine fruit of it; according to the image of him that created him, even of God, who is himself the great Standard of all moral perfection. Thus you will indeed become genuine members of that blessed society where there is no distinction between men of different nations, education, or ranks in life; where neither is any man rejected for being a Greek, nor accepted merely for being a Jew; a society where he can claim nothing by virtue of circumcision, nor lose any thing by uncircumcision; where no Barbarian, or even Scythian, is treated with contempt for that want of learning and politeness which is to be found in the most remote nation; or any slave trampled upon as unworthy notice, since he shares with others in the possession of that inestimable treasure, an immortal soul, and may have a part in the great Redeemer of souls: [nor] is a freeman chiefly esteemed or regarded upon account of his boasted liberty; but rather in proportion to his subjection to our Divine Master: for this is the great band of union among them all, the matter of their boasting and their joy, that they are related to Christ, who is acknowledged to be all that is amiable and excellent, and who dwells in all true believers, without any difference on any of these accounts.

Consider this, my brethren, whatever your external nant language, but all railing and reproachful speeches against our brethren, proceeding from the transports of furious passions.

^b Leud conversation.] So I understand αἰσχρῶς; of obscene and impure words, which are so scandalously common (if I may credit reports which I cannot suspect among many, whom good breeding at least should teach better, if they had no regard to any higher consideration. But Dr. Whitby explains it of reproachful speeches that expose others to contempt; which to me seems a very unnatural interpretation.

^c Put

SPER.
VI.
Col.
III. 9.

secr.
vi.
Col.
III. 12.

 external circumstances may be, and put on therefore, as the chosen people of God^c, holy to him, and beloved by him, set apart to his service, and blessed with the tokens of his peculiar favour, bowels of tender mercy to all the afflicted and distressed, gentleness to all men, lowliness of mind, engaging you to condescend even to those in the humblest stations, meekness under whatever injuries and provocations ye may receive, and long-suffering, when your trials may be in their continuance tedious, as well as violent in their degree; Forbearing to break out into any revengeful actions, or reproachful speeches against one another, and not only so, but cordially forgiving one another, if any have a quarrel against another: even as Christ hath freely forgiven you, though you have in so many instances injured and provoked him, so also do ye, in imitation of 13
an example so amiable and so Divine. And above all these things, [put on] love, which is indeed the very bond of all perfection, and which will keep your minds stedfast, and establish that consistency of sentiments and behaviour which is so honourable in the Christian character, and 15 tends so much to its security. And let the peace of God always preside as the great umpire in your hearts^d, even that placid and benign temper which so naturally results from a sense of your reconciliation to God. This is the blessed state and disposition into which you are also called by the gospel, being happily united in one body: and be ye thankful for those privileges which result from it, whatever affliction may for the 16 present be allotted to you. And let the word of Christ, the gospel which you have received, dwell in you richly in all wisdom; lay it up in your hearts, meditate upon it continually, and endeavour wisely to improve it to the best purpose. And, in this view, be often teaching one another the doctrines of Christianity, and admonishing

(as the elect of God holy and beloved,) bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering;

13 Forbearing one another and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye.

14 And above all these things, put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.

15 And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful.

16 Let the word of Christ dwell in you, richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing

e Put on as the chosen of God.] This is not inconsistent with what was said above (ver. 10), of their having already put on the new man, as the apostle intended here to exhort them to advance more and more in these benevolent dispositions, which did in some considerable degree already prevail in their hearts.

d Let the peace of God preside in your hearts.] The original word, which we render preside, is βῆσινεω. Let it fill your hearts, says Pasor, with such a joy as victors have when they receive το βῆσινον, the prize in the Olympic games. I rather think it signifies, let it presides in your minds, as the master of the games does in those solemnities. And, as this is the sense in which I long ago apprehended the word was to be taken, it is a great satisfaction to me to find this interpretation confirmed by the authority of so great a critic as Beza, nishing one another, in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.

17 And whatsoever ye do in word, or deed do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him.

nishing one another concerning the duties of it, and let these seasons, whether of public worship or private conference, be in a proper manner diversified with the use of David's psalms, and other evangelical hymns and spiritual songs^e, which under the influences of the Spirit ye may be enabled to compose. For it will be both pleasant and profitable to be frequently employed in singing such pieces of sacred poetry and music, provided it to be not merely the language of the lip, or the exercise of the voice, but be likewise attended with the exercise of grace in your heart; which surely it will be, if we rightly consider that they are addressed to the Lord, to whom every sentiment of the heart is known, and to whom nothing can be acceptable which is not attended with cordial devotion.

And, upon this great principle, you may take it as a general rule, that whatsoever ye do in word, or in deed, in all your discourses, and in all your actions, you [do] all things in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ; all to the purposes of his glory, and all in humble dependence upon him, both for the communication of spiritual strength, and for your acceptance with God. And, while you have so dear and acceptable a name to use in your approaches to the Divine Majesty, rejoice in this inestimable privilege; perform the duties incumbent upon you with pleasure, and be continually giving thanks to God even the Father through him, who will graciously recommend, by his prevailing intercession, your prayers and praises, as well as your other services, to the Divine regard.

IMPROVE-

e Psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs.] Calvin thinks all these words refer to David's poetical pieces, as some of them are called מִזְמוֹרִים, Mizmarim psalms, attended with instruments, some תְּהִלִּים, Tehillim, which he thinks were prayers generally sung, and others שְׁקִירִים, Skurim songs, containing not only proper and immediate acts of devotion addressed to God, but also moral and religious instructions. But I see not the authority of this interpretation, and think it much more reasonable to believe, that by hymns and spiritual songs he means such poetical composes as, under the influence of the Spirit were written or uttered. For it would be very absurd to suppose, that when there was such a gift in the church, as we are sure there was, (compare 1 Cor. xiv. 15, 26.) they should be confined to the words of David in all their devotions of this kind. And it would certainly be as reasonable for us, in these latter ages to explode all kind of prayers in public, but liturgies collected from the words of scripture, as all sacred songs in Divine worship but literal translations from what is called the book of Psalms. Numberless passages of the Old and New Testament are equally capable of furnishing us with sacred anthems.

IMPROVEMENT.

SECT.

VI.

- Ver. 5, 6, 8, 9 LET Christians solemnly charge upon themselves an abstinence from those vices which bring the wrath of God upon heathens; and though it should be like wounding or cutting off our members, let us put on an holy resolution to mortify them; and, not content with refraining from all degrees of pollution, falsehood and malignity of heart, let us be more solicitous to put on the new man, which is the creation of God in the soul, and which bears his amiable image. Whatever our nation or rank, our education or our circumstances in life may be, let this be our concern, that we may be in Christ, and Christ in us, for on that depends our everlasting all. Happy the most untaught savage, and the most oppressed slave, who is thus related to the incarnate wisdom of God, and the great Lord of all, infinitely beyond the politest Greek, the most ceremonious Jew, the freest subject, or the most despotic prince, who is a stranger to such a blessing!
- 12 If we have any reason to hope that we are the elect of God, holy and beloved by him, let this charm us to entertain the most beneficent sentiments and views with regard to our fellow-creatures, and teach us to put on bowels of mercy, gentleness, humility, meekness, and long-suffering. Let the grace of Christ in freely forgiving us, teach us to rejoice in opportunities of imitating it.
- 14, 15 Do we desire to feel the peace of God presiding in us, let us exercise charity the bond of perfectness, and let us study to be more and more thankful, in whatever stations we are placed; observing attentively its advantageous circumstances, reflecting especially how much worse things might have been, and how unworthy we ourselves are of any distinction which God may be pleased to make in our favour.
- 16 We have especially great reason most thankfully to acknowledge the Divine goodness, in providing us with so many religious advantages, and particularly with those that relate to the most decent and edifying performance of the duty of psalmody. To furnish us for a right discharge of it, let us carefully treasure up the word of Christ in our minds, and let us be ever more solicitous to preserve the melody of the heart than that of the voice. In this, and in every other service, let all be done in the name of Christ, and then we may humbly hope that all shall be accepted through him.
- 17 And, if that prevailing name do not recommend us to acceptance, the divine purity will find something in every one of them which will justify God, not only in rejecting them, but in condemning us.

SECT. VII.

The Apostle recommends to the Colossians a care in performing the duties that answered to the several relations of life in which they stood, whether they were wives or husbands, children or parents, servants or masters. Col. III. 18, to the end. IV. 1—6.

Col. III. 18.

WIVES, submit your selves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord.

19 Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them.

20 Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord.

21 Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged.

COLOSSIANS III. 18.

LET me now remind you, as I frequently do my other Christian friends, both in my sermons and epistles, of how great importance it is to endeavour after such a temper and behaviour, in respect to the relative duties of life, as may adorn a Christian profession. And be particularly exhorted, ye wives, that ye be subject to your own husbands, though they should be Jews or heathens, as it is becoming in the Lord: for a modest, respectful, obedient behaviour in this most endearing relation, will make your characters appear beautiful, and so far gain upon those of them who are strangers to Christianity, as to give them a good opinion of it upon that account. And, on the other hand, ye husbands, be exhorted tenderly to love [your] wives, and be not severe and bitter against them, as too many in the world are, who become domestic tyrants, and quarrel with their wives upon every trifling occasion; thus overbearing those whom they should rather guard and comfort, breaking their tender spirits, and perhaps shortening their days.

Children, see to it that ye be obedient to [your own] parents in all lawful things; for this is well-pleasing to the Lord Jesus Christ himself, who, when he condescended to dwell in human flesh, was a constant example of filial piety, not only to his real mother, but to him who was only his supposed father. (Luke xi. 51.) And ye fathers, see to it, that you do not so abuse the superiority of the relation as, by a perverse and excessively severe conduct, to provoke your children [to wrath] lest they be discouraged from attempting to please you, when it shall seem to be an impossible task; and be rendered unfit to pass through the world with advantage, when their spirits have been so unreasonably broken under an oppressive yoke in the earliest years of life.

SECT.
vii.

Col.
III. 18.

Ye

SECT. viiCol.
III. 22.

Ye servants, be subject in all things, so far as duty will permit, to [them that are] with respect to the flesh [your] masters, and whose property Divine Providence has suffered you to become: obey their commands, and take care of their interest, not merely with eye-service, as those who are solicitous only to be men-pleasers but as in the simplicity of your heart, fearing God, and therefore for his sake attending to the offices of that humble station he has been pleased to assign you; as those who remember that his authority enforces that of your earthly masters.

23 And whatsoever work ye are employed in, pursue it heartily and diligently, as therein paying a tribute of love and duty to the Lord Jesus

24 Christ himself, and not to men alone. Knowing that, in this case, your diligence in your secular calling shall be accepted, with regard to the principle from whence it proceeds, and that you shall receive from the Lord Jesus Christ the gracious recompense; not indeed an estate in this world, like that which your masters may value themselves upon, but, what is infinitely more important, the possession of an eternal inheritance above. For ye herein serve the Lord Christ, whose rewards are according to his own majesty, grace, and power, and not according

25 to the meanness of our deserts. And, on the other hand, he that is injurious to any, in one relation of life or another, shall receive according to the injury that he hath done, and there is no respect of persons with God. Nor shall a Christian servant be excused because it is an heathen master he hath injured.

IV. 1. On the same principles, ye masters are to be exhorted and charged, that ye render unto [your] servants justice and equity; even to those who are most entirely in your power, and who have no human appeal left, whatever wrongs they may receive; knowing that ye also have a Master in the heavens, to whom you must give an account, whose power is irresistible, and who seeing, as he does, the whole of your conduct, will another day bring you into judgment for every relation you have sustained, and will not forget your treatment of your very slaves. And that on the whole, all these different duties may be well discharged, and all these relations in life properly filled up, persevere in fervent and earnest prayer to God, watching against negligence

22 Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh; not with eye-service, as men pleasers, but in singleness of heart, fearing God;

23 And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men:

24 Knowing, that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: for ye serve the Lord Christ:

25 But he that doeth wrong, shall receive for the wrong which he hath done: and there is no respect of persons.

IV. 1. Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven.

2 Continue in prayer, and watch in the same same with thanksgiving :

3 Withal, praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds :

4 That I may make it manifest, as I ought to speak.

5 Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time.

6 Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that gence and indolence in it, and endeavouring to keep up your hearts and your hopes, with a mixture of thanksgiving for those mercies which you have already received in answer to former petitions, or in which God has prevented you with the blessings of his goodness. And these are so various and so important, that in whatever circumstances you are, you will necessarily 3 have cause for praise. At the same time also, in a particular manner be praying for us^a, that God may open to us a door of utterance (compare I Cor. xvi. 9); that I may have an opportunity to speak of the gospel in general, and the right of the believing Gentiles to all its privileges, even the mystery of Christ, for which also I am in bonds; bonds then most grievous to me, when they prove an obstruction to that great business and joy of my life, the propagation of that sacred scheme and system of truths in which the glory of God and the happiness of men is so highly concerned. And pray that, when 4 these restraints shall be taken off, I may make it manifest, as I ought to speak, and may never be so terrified by the most formidable enemies or dangers, as in any degree to suppress it.

As for yourselves, walk in wisdom towards 5 them that are without the pale of the church, your heathen neighbours, and particularly your magistrates, doing nothing to disgrace religion in their eyes, or unnecessarily to exasperate them against you: redeeming the time; endeavouring to employ it as usefully as you can, and to protract your period of service as long as may be, by prudently declining any dangers to which duty does not require you to expose yourselves.

Let your speech [be] always with grace^b, conducted in the most mild and courteous, the most proper and graceful manner; so that it may appear influenced by a governing principle of Divine grace and unfeigned piety in your hearts. Let it in this respect be so seasoned with the salt of heavenly wisdom, as may render it savoury and edifying. In this view reflect upon things and

^a Praying for us.] Dr. Whitty justly observes, that it is very remarkable that Paul, who so often and so earnestly entertains the intercession of his Christian friends, should never speak of the intercession of the virgin Mary, or of departed saints or angels, if he believed it a duty to seek it.

^b Always with grace.] Dr. Scott thinks, that the phrase εὐχαρί signifies cheerful and agreeable, not whining and melancholy. Scott's Christian Life, Vol. I. p. 285. I have included this in the paraphrase, but cannot apprehend it was chiefly designed.

SECT.

vi.

Col.

IV. 6.

and circumstances before you speak, that you may not utter any thing which would be rash and foolish, but may know how you ought to answer every one, who may question you about your religion and your conduct, in a manner that may most effectually tend to your own security, and to the edification of others. Compare 1 Pet. iii. 15.

that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man.

IMPROVEMENT.

Chap.

iii.

13—24

How happy will particular persons, families, and larger societies be if these apostolic maxims be carefully pursued! While wives are submissive to their husbands, and husbands affectionate to their wives; children obedient to their parents, and parents tenderly careful of their children; servants revering the commands of their masters, and conscientiously and constantly attending to their interests; and masters concerned to maintain all equity in their behaviour to those of their servants who are most entirely in their power; remembering on all sides the account to be given to the supreme Master in heaven, and humbly looking for the reward of the inheritance.

To engage a steady and uniform care in all these various duties, and to make us truly good in every relation of life, let us be daily drawing down grace from God, by continuing instant in prayer; and as our spirits are so ready to grow cold and indifferent in it, let us watch thereunto, lest by insensible degrees we grow remiss in the performance, and from that remissness come entirely or frequently to neglect it.

Let every mercy we receive from God awaken our thankfulness and animate our devotion; and let us not forget in our prayers the ministers of Christ; but ask for them those assistances from on high which may enable them to open their mouth boldly, in declaring that mysterious and important doctrine with which they are charged, and on which the salvation of immortal souls depends.

To enforce their labours as much as possible, let us add the influence of a regular and amiable behaviour, conducting ourselves with wisdom towards all, and particularly those who are strangers to religion; and redeeming time, as those that know its infinite importance, because they see eternity connected with it. And, that we may not, as is so frequent, lose the time we spend in conversation, let us seek more of the salt of Divine grace in our hearts, to correct their innate corruption, and learn the happy art of improving discourse well, and of answering others in such a manner, that without dictating to them, we may gently lead them to the most useful reflections, and make our lips, like those of the righteous, a fountain of life unto them. (Prov. x. 11.)

most

SECT. VIII.

The Apostle concludes his epistle to the Colossians with recommending Tychicus and Onesimus to them, and inserts various salutations, and a solemn admonition to Archippus. Col. IV. 7, to the end.

Cor. IV. 7.

ALL my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, who is a beloved brother, and a faithful minister, and fellow servant in the Lord:

8 Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts;

9 With Onesimus, a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you. They shall make known unto you all things which are done here.

10 Aristarchus my fellow-prisoner saluteth you, and Marcus sister's COLOSSIANS IV. 7.

IT is now time that I should draw towards the close of this epistle, which I will not enlarge by insisting particularly on the things which relate to myself: for Tychicus^a, a beloved brother, and a faithful deacon of your church, and fellow-³ servant with me in the delightful work of our common Lord, will make them known to you by word of mouth, in a more particular manner than I can now conveniently write of them. To him I entrust this epistle, and to him I refer ⁸ you for an account of my present situation, whom I have now sent to you for this very purpose, that he may know your affairs, and when he returns to me again (as I hope he quickly will) I may know them also; and that he in the mean time may comfort your hearts by his Christian counsels and exhortations, as well as by the information he may bring you of what has passed here, and of the state of the churches around, so far as I have been made acquainted with it. And with him comes Onesimus^b, a ⁹ faithful and beloved brother, [who] is one of you, and has resided at Rome some time. They will be able more particularly to inform you of the state of things here.

Aristarchus, once my companion and fellow-¹⁰ labourer at Ephesus (Acts xix. 29), and now my fellow-captive for the sake of the gospel, salutes you in the Lord; and John Mark, who is sister's

^a Tychicus.] From comparing this verse with Eph. vi. 21, 22, where Tychicus is mentioned as sent by Paul from Rome to Ephesus, a city, not very far from Colosse, it may, I think (as has been already observed in the Introduction to this epistle, and in that to the Ephesians), be very probably inferred, that these two epistles, which contain many passages very nearly resembling one another, were written about the same time, and might be sent together.

^b Onesimus.] This verse makes it probable, that this epistle, if it was not written, was at least delivered after that to Philemon, and that the admirable letter to him produced its desired effect. See the Introduction to the Ephesians, p. 315.

SECT.
VIII.
Col.
IV. 7.

SECT.
viii.Col.
IV. 10.

sister's sons to that great and excellent apostle Barnabas, concerning whom ye have formerly received instructions: he will quickly leave these parts; I desire therefore that, if he comes to you, ye would receive him with all respect and affection, as he is one who, whatever misunderstanding there might once have been between us, is entitled to my sincerest esteem^c. (Compare Acts xv. 38.) And I am also to send you the salutation of Jesus, who is called Justus^d, and well deserves the name, on account of his strict and approved integrity. These whom I have named last are the only persons, who, being of the circumcision, [have been] fellow-labourers with me in the service of the kingdom of God, and who have been a comfort to me under my sufferings in the defence of its interests, and been ready to concur with me in any endeavours for its advancement.

- 12 Epaphras, who is one of your own society, and whom I judge to be a most faithful servant of Christ, salutes you, and is always striving and wrestling with God for you in [his] prayers, that ye may attain to the greatest improvements and establishment in Christianity, and so stand amidst all temptations and dangers, perfect and complete in the whole will of God, and may retain the purity of the gospel, unadulterated with those debasing mixtures which some are so eager
- 13 to introduce I am fully persuaded, that he is thus mindful of you at the throne of grace; for I can bear witness to him, that he has great zeal for you, and for all those Christians that are in your parts, and particularly in the neighbouring cities of Laodicea and Hierapolis.

- 14 Luke, the beloved physician^e, who is deservedly dear to you and to me, and to all our fellow-Christians, sister's son to Barnabas, (touching whom ye received commandments; if he come unto you, receive him;)

11 And Jesus, which is called Justus, who are of the circumcision. These only are my fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me.

12 Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect, and complete in all the will of God.

13 For I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you, and them that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis.

14 Luke the beloved physician -

^c My sincerest esteem.] That, notwithstanding the breach mentioned in the text referred to, there had been an entire reconciliation between Paul and Mark, farther appears from 2 Tim. iv. 11, and Philem. ver. 24.

^d Jesus who is called Justus.] Mr. Fleming thinks that good man changed his name from a principle of conscience, as questioning at least whether it was lawful to wear that which had been Divinely appropriated to the great Saviour; which seems to have been his own opinion. Flem. Christol. Vol. III. p. 604. But I can scarce think he would have exchanged it for that of Justus, which rather seems to be an additional name which the respect of his friends had bestowed upon him.

^e Luke, the beloved Physician.] From comparing this with ver. 11, where Paul says, he had no fellow-labourer of the circumcision, but those whom he had named, the late Lord Barrington concludes, that Luke was a proselyte of the gate before he was converted to Christianity. And I think it may be fairly concluded that he was not a Jew.

physician, and Demas, greet you.

15 Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and the church which is in his house.

16 And when this epistle is read amongst you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans, and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea.

Christians, salutes you; and Demas likewise, who hitherto continues with me.

Salute, in my name, the Christian brethren in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and the church that is in his house: for I know there are several Christians, who either reside in it, or meet for social worship there.

And, as I am desirous that my writings during 16 my confinement may be as useful as possible to my Christian friends, I desire that when this epistle is read publicly to you in your religious assembly, as (having inscribed it to the whole society) I am assured it will be, you cause it also to be read to the church of the Laodiceans; and for that purpose take proper methods for conveying it immediately to them; that so you may also the more easily have an opportunity to read that which I have written to them, and which I doubt not but you may procure from Laodicea; as, on your imparting this to them, they will see it is my request that it may be communicated to you.

Before

[Read that from Laodicea.] Commentators are much divided as to the interpretation of these words. The ancients generally thought the epistle here referred to was that to the Ephesians, which being inscribed to the chief church in these parts (and, as Archbishop Wake, in his Preface to the Apostolic Fathers, p. 94, by a much more modern name, calls it the metropolis), might be communicated to the Laodiceans, and so to the Colossians. But there is no direction of this kind in that epistle, and it would have been much more natural for Paul to have directed these Colossians to have sent to Ephesus for an epistle inscribed to that church.—There is no ground however to imagine that it refers (as some have thought) to an epistle written by the apostle Paul from Laodicea, where it is reasonable to conclude, from Col. ii. 1, that he had never been; nor can I think it likely, that it means an epistle written to him from the church of Laodicea, which the apostle would not have ordered to be read publicly in the church in the same manner with his own epistle.—Others have much more probably supposed that it was an epistle written to the Laodiceans by St. Paul, though the epistle extant under that name (which may be seen in Tabricius Cod. Apoc. Vol. II. p. 873) has nothing so remarkable in its contents as to make it at all requisite for this church to send for it; and indeed has not any of the spirit and flame of the apostle Paul, or any thing worthy of him but what is borrowed from his other epistles, though it be even shorter than that of Philemon. We may rather conclude it to be now lost; for all the epistles which the apostles ever wrote are not preserved, any more than all the words and actions of our blessed Lord. (Compare John xx. 30, and xxi. 25.)—If this be not allowed, we must refer it (as above) to the epistle to the Ephesians, which might be intended, as some think, to be communicated as a circular epistle, and a copy of it ordered to be sent to Laodicea, from whence, as it lay nearer to them, the Colossians might more easily obtain it than from Ephesus. This has the rather been supposed, as the epistle to the Ephesians is the only one of all Paul's epistles that has nothing in it peculiarly adapted to the state of that church to which it is directed, but has much of common concernment to all Christians, especially to the Gentile converts. And in this case it is no wonder the apostle should make such a reference, as there is so great a resemblance between this epistle to the Colossians and that to the Ephesians, and as so many of the sentiments only suggested here are more largely illustrated there. Compare Col. i. 25, with Eph. iii. 9; Col. ii. 13, with Eph. ii. 1, &c. Col. iii. 11, with Eph. i. 10, &c. Col. iii. 18, 19, with Eph. v. 22—23, and the like.

g Sey

SECT.
viii.Col.
IV. 17.

Before I conclude, I must add one word by way of particular caution and exhortation to one person among you, whose character is of great and public importance. Say therefore to Archippus^z, in my name and in your own, take heed to the ministry, which thou hast received in the name and by the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ, that thou fulfil it with diligence and care; for the consequence of neglecting this high and holy office, after having so solemnly undertaken it, will be infinitely dangerous and fatal.

17 And say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry, which thou hast received of the Lord, that thou fulfil it.

18 Thus far have I used the pen of a friend; but now I add the salutation of [me] Paul, written with mine own hand, as a token of the genuineness of the epistle. Remember my bonds, and bear me upon your heart with that affection which you owe to an apostle, and to one who is now a confessor for the truth he hath preached. Grace [be] with you from Christ, the fountain of it. Amen. You have my repeated and most affectionate prayers for it, and may the God of grace and peace confirm it by his most efficacious Amen.

18 The salutation by the hand of me Paul. Remember my bonds. Grace be with you. Amen.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. THE friendly disposition of St. Paul fails not to shew itself in the close, as well as entrance of every epistle, and indeed runs through all the parts of each. It cannot but give some pleasure to the pious reader, to whom the memory of such a servant of Christ will always be precious, to find that there were some even of the circumcision that were comforts to him in his affliction; as well as that John Mark, the nephew of Barnabas, was so thoroughly reconciled, and made one of his most agreeable and useful friends; though there was a time when Paul thought it inconsistent with prudence and duty to admit him as a companion. He that reproveth a man shall afterwards find more favour than he who flattereth with the tongue. (Prov. xxviii. 23.) And if the faithfulness of plain rebukes may be the means of recovering our brethren to a sense of their duty, they will no doubt be sensible of the obligation, and it will add firmness and endearment to future friendship.

When

^z Say to Archippus.] This seems an intimation that Archippus, whoever he were, was not so diligent and active in the prosecution of his ministry as could have been wished. But that his fault was entangling himself with Jewish disputations, as some have supposed, is so far from being evident, that I see nothing to make it at all probable.

When Epaphras was at a distance from his brethren at Colosse, he was not only praying for them, but as the word signifies, wrestling with God in his prayers on their account; an important evidence of his Christian affection for them. And how well were his petitions chosen! That they might not only be sincerely good, as they already were, but perfect and complete in all the will of God; that there might be in their hearts and actions a more entire conformity to it. May that be our character and happiness to have respect to all God's commandments, and to carry our regards to them as far as we possibly can.

Commendable, and perfectly consistent with the strictest modesty, was the concern which the apostle expresses, that the epistles might be diffused as far as possible, and that Christians in different societies might receive the benefit of them, And indeed they turn so much upon matters of universal importance, that they are admirably calculated for the edification of those who may live in the most distant countries and ages. Surely there cannot be a more sacrilegious attempt upon Christian liberty and piety than to take them away from the common people, to whom Paul expressly ordered they should be publicly read: nor can there be greater madness than to pretend to guard men from error and heresy, by concealing from them writings which the Holy Spirit himself suggested, to lead them to truth and holiness.

We know not what there might be so particular in the character or circumstances of Archippus as to require the solemn admonition with which the epistle closes. But whatever the occasion of it were, it certainly suggests a most useful and important thought to all the ministers of the gospel. It is of the Lord Jesus Christ that they receive their ministry; to him they are quickly to render a strict account of it. May they all therefore take heed to it! May they be sensible of the importance of the trust, and have grace to be faithful in it; that they may give up their account with the joy of that steward, who having approved his fidelity on earth, shall receive his reward in heaven. Amen!

THE
FAMILY EXPOSITOR :

OR, A

PARAPHRASE

ON

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

THESSALONIANS.

WITH

CRITICAL NOTES, AND A PRACTICAL IMPROVEMENT OF EACH SECTION.

A

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO THE

PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON

THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

THIS epistle is addressed to the inhabitants of Thessalonica, a large populous city, the Metropolis of Macedonia. It stood upon the Thermaïan bay, which was part of the Egean sea, and was so called from Thermæ, the ancient name of the city.

It appears from the history of the Acts (chap. xvii. 1), that the Christian religion was planted here by Paul and Silas, soon after they left Philippi, where they had met with such unworthy treatment. (Compare Acts xvi. 24, with 1 Thess. ii. 2) At their first entrance, they preached with so much success, that great numbers of the Gentiles, and some of the Jews, who were settled in that city, embraced the gospel with the utmost readiness. (Compare 1 Thess. i. 5, 9.) But the unbelieving Jews, animated by the same inveterate spirit with their brethren in Judea, stirred up the idolatrous inhabitants against the apostle and his Christian friends, and in a riotous manner assaulted the house where some of them were assembled; but, not finding Paul and Silas, as they expected, they carried Jason and some others of the brethren before the magistrate who took security for their good behaviour, and then dismissed them. In the mean while, the apostle and his companion having been concealed by their friends till the storm was a little abated were obliged to leave them abruptly, and go in the night to Berea: where for some time they met with a very favourable reception; but were soon disturbed by the malice of these restless enemies who pursued them thither; and the apostle had once more the mortification to leave a place that seemed to promise so rich a harvest. Acts xvii. 1—14.

But the opposition which these bigots made to the gospel, and which they continued after the apostle's departure (1 Thess. ii. 14) was not sufficient to shake the faith of the new converts; who, as appears from this epistle (chap. i. 3—10; ii. 13, 14), distinguished themselves above all the other churches for the zeal and constancy with which they adhered to the Christian cause, and the honourable honourable character they maintained. No wonder therefore the apostle should express in such strong terms his esteem and affection for them, and the satisfaction it gave him to see such happy fruits of his labours.

It cannot be certainly determined from the history, what stay the apostle made at Thessalonica. Some have imagined, from Acts xvii. 3, that he was there only three weeks: but as it appears that, during his abode in that city, he not only wrought with his own hands to procure a subsistence (1 Thess. ii. 9; 2 Thess. iii. 8), but also received supplies more than once from Philippi (compare Phil. iv. 16), it is much more probable that, after the Jews had discovered such an invincible prejudice against the gospel, he desisted from disputing or teaching in their synagogues after the third sabbath, and then preached for some time among the Gentiles, before he was driven out of the city. See Vol. III. § 39, note^a, p. 156.

However, as it is certain his stay was not very considerable, and as he had left his Christian friends there in so much distress, on his as well as their own account, he sent Timothy to them from Athens (for which place he had sailed immediately upon his leaving Berea), to confirm them in their attachment to the gospel, and comfort them under their concern for his sufferings. (Chap. iii. 1—5.) Timothy, at his return, found the apostle at Corinth (Acts xviii. 5), where he continued near two years, (Acts xviii. 11), from whence it has generally been concluded, and with great reason, that this epistle, in which he takes some peculiar notice of the agreeable account he had received of their character from Timothy, (Chap. iii. 6), was wrote from thence, not long after his arrival, (compare chap. ii. 17); which will fix the date of it about the year of our Lord 52, or the 12th of the emperor Claudius. See Vol. III. § 41, *note*ⁱ and ^k, p. 177.

The apostle's design in this epistle is, in general, to confirm the Thessalonians in their adherence to the Christian faith, and to engage them from the sufferings they had already endured in that cause, and the extraordinary character they had hitherto maintained, to make still greater advances in religion, and become yet more eminent in every branch of the Christian temper.

In pursuance of this design, having, in the inscription of the epistle, joined Timothy and Sylvanus, (or Silas) who had assisted him in establishing the church at Thessalonica) with himself, the apostle expresses his great satisfaction in the sincerity with which the Thessalonians embraced the gospel when it was first preached to them, and in the exemplary character they had since maintained; to which he assures them all the churches bore an honourable testimony, and by which they had greatly advanced the credit of their Christian profession. Chap. i. throughout.

And, in order to preserve his influence with them, and consequently to add the greater weight to his admonitions, he reminds them of the courage and fidelity with which he had preached the gospel at his first entrance among them, in spite of all the danger to which his zeal exposed him; and appeals to them for the unexpected and disinterested manner in which he had behaved towards them while he continued there, and the tender affectionate concern he had always shewn for their religious interests; Chap. ii. 1—12. The reflection upon the pains he had taken with them, naturally led him to acknowledge, with the utmost thankfulness, the happy success that had attended his labours, in their conversion to the Christian faith, which they openly and courageously professed, notwithstanding all the difficulties and dangers they were obliged to encounter. He observes to them, that he himself, and his fellow-Christians in Judea, had met with the same ill-treatment from the perverseness of their own countrymen, who opposed his preaching the gospel to the Gentiles; and assures them, that though he had, by the malice of his enemies, been unwillingly detained from them longer than he intended, he felt the same warmth of affection for them, and rejoiced in them as his glory and his crown; ver. 13, to the end.

As a farther proof of his regard, the apostle informs them, that when he came to Athens, he was so much concerned, lest being discouraged by his sufferings, they should be tempted to cast off their profession, that he could not forbear sending Timothy to comfort and strengthen them; and expresses in very strong terms the sensible pleasure he felt, in the midst of all his afflictions, from the agreeable account he received of their faith and love; to which he adds, that he was continually praying for their farther establishment in religion, and for an opportunity of making them another visit, in order to promote their edification, which lay so near his heart. Chap. iii. throughout.

The apostle having thus given the Thessalonians a sufficient testimony of his sincere regard, proceeds to renew the practical exhortations he had given them in the name of Christ, while he continued with them; recommending, in particular, chastity, in opposition to all kinds of uncleanness, for which the idolatrous Gentiles were so notorious; justice, in opposition to all manner of fraud and dishonesty; charity, in which he acknowledges they already excelled; and a diligent application to their proper business, joined with a prudent behaviour towards their heathen neighbours. Chap. iv. 1—12. In order to comfort them under the loss of some of their Christian friends, of whose death it is probable the apostle might have heard by Timothy, he assures them, that those who were fallen asleep in Jesus should be raised again at the last day, and, together with those that remained alive, should be caught up to meet their Lord, and share his triumph, ver. 13, to the end.—And, having thus laid a solid foundation on which to build their hope, he takes occasion to press upon them the necessity of preparing for so awful an event, that it might not overtake them unawares; and represents the peculiar obligations they were under to sobriety and watchfulness, from the superior light and knowledge they enjoyed, and the hopes they were taught to entertain from the death and resurrection of Christ. Chap. v. 1—11.

The

The apostle, in the conclusion of his epistle, recommends to them a respectful behaviour to their ministers, and lays down some directions for their conduct towards persons of different tempers and characters in the church, adding other practical precepts of a more general nature; and, having offered up a solemn petition for their farther advancement and stedfastness in religion, he closes with his usual benediction, ver. 12, to the end of the epistle.

From this analysis of the epistle, the reader cannot but have observed, what a paternal affection and concern the apostle discovers for these new converts: and it is remarkable, with how much address he improves all that influence which his zeal and fidelity in their service must naturally give him to inculcate upon them the precepts of the gospel, and persuade them to act agreeably to their sacred character. This was the grand point he kept always in view; and to which every thing else was made subservient. Nothing appears, in any part of his writings, like a design to establish his own reputation, or to make use of his ascendancy over his Christian friends, to answer any secular purposes of his own: on the contrary, in this, and in his other epistles, he discovers a most generous disinterested regard for their welfare, expressly disclaiming all authority over their consciences, and appealing to them that he had chose to maintain himself by the labour of his own hands, rather than prove burdensome to the churches, or give the least colour for a suspicion, that, under pretence of zeal for the gospel, and concern for their improvement, he was carrying on any private sinister views.

The discovery of so excellent a temper, as it tends greatly to raise our idea of the apostle, so it must be allowed to carry with it a strong presumptive argument in favour of the doctrines he taught, and consequently of the truth of Christianity itself: for he evidently appears to have been governed by the very same principles he recommends to others, and by their influence, to have been raised above all regard to his temporal interests, and every motive that could come in competition with the honour of God, and the advancement of religion in the world. And indeed whoever reads over St. Paul's epistles with attention, and enters into the spirit with which they were wrote, will discern such intrinsic characters of their genuineness, and the Divine authority of the doctrines they contain, as will perhaps produce in him a stronger conviction than all the external evidence with which they are attended. To which we may add, that the exact coincidence, observable between the many allusions to particular facts, in this as well as in other epistles, and the account of the facts themselves, as they are recorded in the history of the Acts, is a remarkable confirmation of the truth of each. Compare Vol. III. § 39, note^a, p. 156.

A
PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE THESSALONIANS.

SECTION I.

The Apostle Paul, after the usual salutations, expresses his joy in the character of the Thessalonians to whom he wrote, and in the credit they did to their Christian profession, by a behaviour so worthy of it. 1 Thess. I. 1, throughout.

1 THESS. I. 1.

PAUL, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians, which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Jesus Christ: Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

² We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers.

³ Remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labour

1 THESSALONIANS I. 1.

PAUL and Silvanus, otherwise called Silas, and Timothy, all well known as the servants and ministers of Christ, join in this address to the beloved and happy church, which he by his grace hath lately founded among you of the Thessalonians, who have now the honour to stand in an intimate and dear relation to God, the Father of all true Believers, and to the Lord Jesus Christ, our common and adorable Saviour. And we all most sincerely wish grace and peace unto you in the richest abundance, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

We think ourselves obliged to give thanks to ² God always with one accord for you all, making continual mention of you in our daily prayers. Incessantly remembering in every address to the Divine throne your work of faith, the readiness ³ with which you embraced the gospel of Christ; the vigour with which you declared your dependence

SECT.
i.

1 Thess.
I. 1.

SECT.
i
1 Thess.
I. 3.

pendence upon it; and in consequence of that dependence, your labour of love, the charitable and affectionate zeal with which you embarked in the interests of his persecuted servants: and your patience in result of that blessed hope which was brought unto you by the gospel and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and solemnly professed before God, even our Father, who will not suffer the graces which he hath wrought in you by his blessed Spirit to fail of their proper rewards^a.

- 4 And this we write with all freedom and endearment, knowing beloved brethren, your participation in the election of God, and fully persuaded that you are in the number of those whom he will finally own as his chosen people, for whom before the foundation of the world he had prepared a kingdom. Of which, blessed be his name, we have the most important and satisfactory evidence; because our gospel, that is, the gospel which we preach, and which was solemnly committed to our charge, came not to you in word only, so as to be a mere empty sound, or to convey only amusing ideas to your mind, but also in power, so as to make very deep and powerful impressions on your hearts; and indeed such impressions as could only be the result of its coming to you in the power of the Holy Ghost whose miraculous and gracious influence concurred to add force to it. And then it is no wonder that it came in much assurance, so that you could not possibly doubt of its truth, when you thus saw its evidence, and felt its efficacy. And its success was farther promoted by the good example which we who preached it were enabled to give; as you well know, and I am confident, will never forget, what manner of persons we were among you, what vigour and zeal we exerted for your conversion, and how we conducted ourselves in the whole of our behaviour, with respect to you, and all around us, as well as with what fortitude we faced all the persecutions we were called to encounter for your sakes.
- 6 And the happy consequence of all was, that you became imitators of us, and I bless God I may add bour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God, and our Father :

4 Knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God.

5 For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance, as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sakes.

6 And ye became followers of us, and of the

^a Work of faith, labour of love, and patience of hope.] All these are plainy reasons for active faith, laborious love, and patient hope, and might very properly have been so translated.

the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost:

add, therein of the Lord Jesus Christ too, both in the holiness of your lives, and in the courage and patience with which you endure those sufferings which lay in the way of your duty; having received the word in much affliction, from the rage and fury of your unreasonable enemies, and yet with joy of the Holy Ghost, rejoicing, under his powerful influences, in the reception of that holy religion to which you were so early called to make such great and important sacrifices. So that indeed ye soon became eminent in the churches of Christ, and examples to all the believers in Macedonia, and in the more distant provinces of Achaia^b, where the Corinthian converts, famous as they soon were (1 Cor. i. 7), heard of your religious character with pleasure and emulation. For from you the word of the Lord sounded forth, and you were eager, by your messengers, to spread the joyful tidings of the gospel, not only in your own borders of Macedonia, and in Achaia, with which you had an easy correspondence, but also wherever Providence gave you any access; so that, in every remote place, the fame and effect of your faith toward God and the Lord Jesus Christ came in such a degree as made it almost unnecessary for us particularly to recount any thing of your conversion, or progress in the truth. For they themselves, among whom we came, declare it to us concerning you, and make it the subject of their pleasing conversation with us, and with one another, what a wonderful kind of entrance we had among you, in our first visit, and what a reception you gave us, that is, how ye turned to God from those contemptible idols, in the worship of which ye had been educated, with a firm resolution at all events to serve the living and true God, with that diligence and zeal which his service so justly demands. And you found yourselves disposed, by your growing knowledge of him, to lay aside all immoderate attachments to the interests and concerns of this present life, that with fixed faith, and cheerful expectation, ye might wait for the triumphant coming of his Son from heaven; of that illustrious Son, whom,

scrip.
1.
1 Thes.
1. 6.

7 So that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia.

8 For from you sounded out the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad, so that we need not to speak any thing.

9 For they themselves shew of us, what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God.

10 And to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the

^b In Macedonia and Achaia } The apostle mentions these parts, as he had just been travelling through them before he came to Corinth, from whence (as we have shewn in the Introduction, p. 502) he wrote this epistle. Compare Acts xvii. 14, 15; xviii. 1.

SECT.
I.1 Thes.
I. 10.

as a proof of his Divine mission and designation to the office of universal Judge, he hath raised from the dead, and now exalted to his own right hand; [even] Jesus, the long-expected and ever to be adored Saviour, who rescues us from the wrath which is assuredly to come upon all impenitent sinners, and makes us, in consequence of our faith in him, not only safe from that flaming ruin, but secure of possessing an happiness complete and eternal.

the dead, even Jesus which delivered us from the wrath to come.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. WE see here a compendious view of the Christian character.

9 It is to turn from idols, from every thing which we have loved and esteemed, from every thing which we have pursued and trusted in an irregular degree, to serve the living and true God; under a real sense of his infinite perfections and glories. It is turning also to Jesus his Son, as saving us from the wrath to come: from a deep conviction of our being justly exposed to wrath by our transgressions against God, to seek rescue and refuge in Christ, as delivering us from it, by his atonement and grace, and completing that deliverance by Almighty power, in the day of his final triumph. It is to look and wait with unshaken faith and with holy joy for Jesus, the Son of God in heaven; keeping the eye of our soul habitually directed towards him, the loins of our mind continually girded up, and ourselves as servants who look for their Lord's coming. In the mean time may we maintain the work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God, even our Father.

If this be the effect of our receiving the gospel, it will evidently prove that it is come to us, not only in word, but in power, and in the Holy Ghost; and it may give us abundant assurance of our interest in God, and cause us by the happiest tokens to know our election of him. Whatever afflictions may in that case be allotted to us, while we hereby become followers of the apostles and of Christ, we may rejoice in the Lord. The ministers of Christ will rejoice in such an entrance among their people, as shall produce these blessed consequences, and the word of God will be sounded forth with the greatest advantage by those who are pleading for its truth, efficacy, and importance, by this silent but powerful eloquence. May this character be every where more prevalent among those that call themselves Christians, and may grace and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, be with all in whom it is found!

SECT.

SECT. II.

The Apostle leads the Thessalonians to reflect upon the manner in which he and his brethren in the Christian ministry behaved among them when they visited them at first, and laid the foundation of a church in their city. 1 Thess. II. 1—12.

1 THESS. II. 1.

FOR yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain.

2 But even after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at Philippi, we were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention.

3 For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile :

1 THESSALONIANS II. 1.

I HAVE been mentioning the encouragement our ministry among you first met with and the blessed effects that attended it. But I need not insist more largely upon them, for ye yourselves know, my brethren, and I am persuaded you can never forget, the entrance that we had unto you ; with what demonstration of Divine agency in and by us it was attended, and what a powerful effect it had upon your minds, so that it was not in vain. It was not a transient and trifling amusement, but solemn in itself, and attended with important consequences and effects, which will be everlasting. But the recollection is so delightful to my mind, that you must permit me, known as it is, to lead back my own thoughts to the review, and to remind you, how even when we had just before suffered the greatest indignities, and had been so injuriously treated, as ye know at Philippi, where we were stripped and scourged by the common beadle, and thrust into prison, with our feet set fast in the stocks (Acts xvi. 52—24), we no sooner arrived among you, but we were bold in our humble dependence on the powerful support of our God ; to speak unto you in the neighbouring city, the gospel of God, and this, though we were forced to do it with so much contention, because of the opposition excited against us by the perverse and unbelieving Jews. (Acts xvii. 1—9.) And we were supported in these courageous efforts from a secret consciousness of that integrity with which our ministry was conducted ; for our exhortation to persuade you to embrace the gospel [was] not calculated to corrupt your morals, as being founded on any principles of deceit or of uncleanness ; we had no mercenary or sensual purposes to serve, as your idolatrous priests often have, nor was there in our management any thing of guile and craftiness

SECT.
II.1 THESS.
II. 1.

SECT.
II.1 Thess.
4. 4.

ness which could fear the detection of the strictest scrutiny. But all was fair and open, simple and artless, and as we have been approved by God, so far as to be intrusted with the invaluable treasure of his gospel, so we did then address you, and so we continue to speak, not as pleasing men, and accommodating our doctrine to their tastes and prejudices, but as endeavouring always to secure the approbation of that God who trieth our hearts with as great care and exactness as gold is proved in the furnace, that it may be separated from dross, or the mixture of any baser metals. Neither did we at any time deal in flattering words, to insinuate ourselves into your affections, and soothe you in your sins, as ye well know; nor had we recourse to a pretence of piety, to promote the schemes of covetousness, often artfully conducted under the covert of religious zeal. God [is] our witness, that we were far above every thing of this kind, and made all such views our first sacrifice to the glory of his name and the propagation of his gospel. Nor did we seek glory and applause of men, neither of you, nor of any others among whom we laboured and conversed; nor did we press you with regard to any maintenance, though we might have been in some degree burdensome, as the apostles of Christ, who had authorised us to take a necessary subsistence from our hearers, as we certainly brought you what was far more valuable than any thing which we could in return have received from you. But we were still mild, gentle, and condescending in the midst of you, even as a nurse or mother cherishes her own children, while hanging on her breast, and feels an inexpressible pleasure in imparting that nourishment to them with which God in his gracious providence has been pleased to furnish her. So we, being most tenderly affectionate towards you, took pleasure to impart to you, not only the gospel of God, which was lodged with us, for the food and life of our fellow creatures, but even our own souls too, because ye were dear unto us; so dear, that our heart was in every word while we addressed you, and we could with 4 But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God which trieth our hearts.

5 For neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloke of covetousness; God is witness.

6 Nor of men sought we glory neither of you, nor yet of others, when we might have been burdensome, as the apostles of Christ.

7 But we were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children:

8 So, being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us.

a Might have been burdensome, &c.] The apostle evidently refers to the right he had of being maintained at their charge. Compare ver. 9; 2 Cor. xi. 9; 1 Tim. v. 18; 1 Cor. ix. throughout. But he was acting now on the same maxims at Corinth (from whence he wrote this epistle) by which he had governed himself at Thessalonica. See Acts xviii. 3.

with pleasure even have laid down our lives among you, if that might have promoted the success of our ministry, and have conduced to the increase and edification of the church.

SECT.
11.
1 Thes.
11. 8.

9 For ye remember, brethren, our labour and travail: for labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God.

10 Ye are witnesses and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe:

11 As ye know how we exhorted and comforted, and charged every one of you (as a father doth his children;)

12 That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

You had many instances of this, which I need not largely rehearse; for ye remember, brethren, both our labour in the ministerial work and our toil in our secular profession likewise; for night and day working at it, taking often from the rest of the night, the hours which during the day we had spent in our ministry among you, that we might be able to maintain ourselves, and might not be burdensome and expensive to any of you, we preached to you the gospel of God. And there was a consistency in the whole of our conduct which abundantly shewed the purity of those motives from which we acted in this instance. So that ye [are] witnesses, and God [also] who sees our most secret actions, and all the recesses of our heart, how holily, and righteously, and how unblameably we behaved ourselves, not only to the heathens around, but in our most intimate converse with you who believe, still preserving the same integrity, caution, and care, to avoid every occasion of offence which we maintained among those who were strangers or enemies to our religion, and so might have been most ready to seek for pretences of objecting against it. As ye also know how, and with what repeated importunity, we were exhorting and comforting every one of you in particular, as God gave us access to you; just as a father encourages and instructs his children, labouring by every kind and endearing art of address, to form them to a wise and worthy behaviour: Thus were we animating you, and testifying in the most solemn manner. That ye should walk worthy of God, and of the relation in which you have the honour to stand to him, who hath called you by his gospel into his kingdom, even to the views and hopes of that glory which he hath promised to all the faithful subjects of it.

IMPROVEMENT.

SURELY it is not possible to conceive from any thing, but the example of the great Shepherd of the sheep, a more amiable idea of the character of a gospel minister than which is here exhibited

SECT.
ii.
Ver. exhibited. With what a frankness and openness of soul does the apostle appeal to their consciences, as to the integrity and benevolence of his behaviour among them, whilst unterrified by all the 2 indignities and inhumanities he had met with at Philippi, he immediately renewed the same combat at Thessalonica, and contended boldly with all the enemies of the gospel, not esteeming his liberty or his life, on an occasion of so great importance!

With such courage let the ministers of Christ face all danger and oppositions; with such simplicity of heart, let them deliver 3 their important message; not with deceit, uncleanness, or guile, but as those who remember that they have been put in trust with the gospel by God himself, and therefore must be solicitous not to 4 please men, but God, who trieth the heart. And may they ever be superior to those views of avarice, ambition, or popular ap- plause, which would lead them to sacrifice truth to the affection 5, 6 or favour of men, or even to the fear of being thought to do it.
And let them, with all this intrepidity and firmness of soul, put 7 on a gentleness and sweetness of disposition; a gentleness like that with which a nurse cherishes her children. While their people, like new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word that they may grow thereby (1 Pet. ii. 2), let ministers, with a natural ten-8 derness, draw forth that precious nourishment to them, as impart- ing even their own souls unto them, and willing to wear out, or if such should be the will of God, to sacrifice their lives in such a service.

Let them particularly endeavour by all prudent care, suitable to the circumstances in which God has fixed them, not to make themselves burdensome to the people in temporal things, nor un-4 der the pretence of a Divine mission, to tyrannize over their con-sciences; but behave with such integrity and such sanctity, that 6 they may be able cheerfully to appeal to God as a witness of it,
1 and may also have a testimony in the breast of each of their flock.
And O that the entrance of such ministers among their people, and their labours with them, may not be in vain: but that the blessed consequence of all the charges, entreaties, and consolations, they are addressing to them may be this, that they may walk worthy of 12 God, worthy of that kingdom and glory, to the views and blessings of which he hath condescended to call them! Then will all the fatigues of their office sit light upon them, while they see the blessed purposes of it answered. Then will they finish their course with joy, and bless God with their dying breath, that he hath chosen them to an office, the most laborious, and perhaps, in secular views, the least advantageous of any in which persons of liberal education use to engage.

SECT. III.

The Apostle goes on to bless God for the readiness with which the Thessalonians received the gospel, notwithstanding the persecution raised against them by their own countrymen, as well as the perverse opposition of the Jews, and assures them of his continued affection, though he had been hindered from visiting them so soon as he intended. 1 Thess. II. 13—to the end.

1 THESS. II. 13.

FOR this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but (as it is in truth) the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe.

14 For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God, which in Judea, are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews:

15 Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not

1 THESSALONIAN II. 13.

THUS we laboured, and thus we behaved ourselves among you, and we are thankful that we were enabled in so conscientious a manner to discharge our duty. And for this cause also we give thanks to God incessantly, that when ye received the word of God, which ye heard from us, ye received [it] not with indifference and neglect, not with doubt and uncertainty, [as] if it had been merely the precarious word of men, an artful invention, or uncertain scheme of human philosophy, but as (it is in truth) the very word of God himself, the veracity of which is beyond all dispute or suspicion; of which there is this farther proof, that it worketh so efficaciously in you who believe, and produces such an happy change in your character, as may abundantly attest its Divine original. For you, 14 brethren, as soon as ever you embraced it, immediately became imitators of the heroic behaviour and conduct of the churches of God, which are in Judea, in Christ Jesus, as being under the influences of the same Spirit with them, though you had not been eye-witnesses of their example. For you also, with the like intrepidity of resolution, suffered the same things from those of your own tribe and country, (Acts xvii. 5,) as they [did] of their countrymen the Jews: Who treated them so rigorously and cruelly, as 15 the vilest of apostates. They call themselves indeed the peculiar people of God, but act in a manner most unworthy that Character, for they both killed the Lord Jesus Christ, and their own prophets, who foretold his appearance, and whom God in many distant ages of their commonwealth raised up unto them. And on the same principles also they have persecuted us, when we came among them as Divine messengers; and, on the whole, please not God, though they pretend to know him so well, and boast so loudly scr.

iii.1 Thes.
II. 13.

SECT.
iii.1 Thess.
II. 15.

- loudly of their interest in him; but in consequence of the wrong notion they form of him, greatly offend him, and are contrary to all men, full of contempt and malignity against all other nations, and behave towards them in the most perverse and unfriendly manner^a. Of which morose and odious behaviour, this is a remarkable instance, that they are continually forbidding us, the apostles and messengers of God, to speak and preach the gospel to the Gentiles, that they might be saved; and by thus setting themselves against the darling scheme of Divine Providence, and opposing the most important, even the eternal interests of mankind, they seem to act as if they desired to fill up the measure of their sins continually. But Divine wrath is speedily coming upon them, and will be carried to the greatest extremity, not at Jerusalem only, but every where else, in their various settlements in heathen countries^b.
- 17 But we, brethren, though necessarily separated from you for a very little season, and as it were for a few hours^c, in person, but not in heart being exceedingly desirous to see your face again, endeavoured it to the utmost. Therefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul in particular, once and a second time, but Satan, the great not God, and are contrary to all men;

16 Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles, that they might be saved, to fill up their sins always: for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost.

17 But we, brethren being taken from you for a short time, in presence, not in heart, endeavoured the more abundantly to see your face with great desire.

18 Wherefore we would have come unto you (even I Paul) once

^a Contrary to all men.] It is well known what invincible prejudices the Jews in general entertained against all other nations; and Elser has produced several passages from Tacitus and other heathen writers; in which they are represented as bearing an inveterate hatred against all the rest of mankind. (Elser. Obs. Vol. II. p. 274.) And nothing certainly could afford a stronger proof of this malignant temper, than that perverse opposition to so benevolent a scheme as the gospel, for which the apostle passes this severe censure upon them.

^b Not only at Jerusalem, &c.] Though the remarkable circumstances which attended the destruction of Jerusalem, so particularly represented by Josephus, who was an eye-witness of them, and so exactly corresponding to our Lord's prediction (see Vol. II. sect. clxi.) have fixed the attention of Christians, chiefly on that catastrophe; yet it is well known, that vast numbers of the Jewish nation were soon after destroyed in other provinces of the Roman empire, particularly under Trajan and Adrian: under the former, 460,000 men in Egypt and Cyprus, and under the latter, above 580,000, as Xiphilinus informs us from Dio; and the learned Mr. Loteman supposes these events to be referred to in the second apocalyptic seal, Rev. vi. 4. Compare Vol. II. sect. clxi. note ^m.

^c For a very little season or for a few hours.] The original is $\omega\sigma\tau\epsilon\ \mu\epsilon\gamma\alpha\lambda\alpha\ \omega\sigma\tau\epsilon\ \mu\epsilon\gamma\alpha$; for an hour's time; which is so figurative an expression, that I choose rather to express the sense in the paraphrase, than to follow the Greek literally, especially as $\omega\sigma\tau\epsilon$ has a signification rather more extensive than hour. It was several years before the apostle returned to them, but his mind was full of the ideas of eternity, which did, as it were, annihilate any period of mortal life. Dr. Whitby infers from this expression, that this epistle was written quickly after Paul's leaving Thessalonica, and consequently at Corinth, the first place where he made any long stay. The word $\mu\epsilon\gamma\alpha\lambda\alpha\ \omega\sigma\tau\epsilon$, in this connection, strongly expresses the apostle's affection for them, (compare John xv. 18, Gr. Vol. II. sect. clxxiv. note ^c.) and concern to leave them in an unsettled state. Compare chap. iii. 1.

once and again; but Satan hindered us.

19 For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?

20 For ye are our glory and joy.

great enemy of our usefulness and comfort, hath hitherto hindered us, by the many difficulties he laid in our way. But we will be sure to take the first opportunity of doing it; for what [is] our hope of appearing another day with comfort before the tribunal of Christ, or what our joy, or what the crown of rejoicing, which we expect then to wear? [are] not ye also among many others, whom Divine grace has given us as the fruits of our ministry; whom we hope for the honour of presenting before our Lord Jesus Christ at the day of his final appearance? For ye are now one of the most considerable churches with which I have been the happy instrument of planting; and I trust ye will then appear as our glory and our joy, as the seals God hath been pleased to set to my labours, and as amiable friends, in whose converse and love I hope to be for ever happy.

SECT.
III.
1 Thess.
II. 19.

IMPROVEMENT.

MAY Divine grace teach our souls ever to distinguish between Ver. the authority of the word of men and the word of God; that we may always set them at a due distance from each other, and may feel that peculiar energy of the Divine word with which it operates in all them that believe! May we experience this, whatever be the consequences, yea though we should be exposed to sufferings, severe as those which Jews or heathens at first inflicted on the professors, or even on the preachers of the gospel! Adored be that power of Divine grace that went along with it, so that when the envious disciples of Moses, after having slain the Lord Jesus Christ, as well as their own prophets, forbid his messengers to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, these faithful ambassadors of health and life feared none of their threatenings or cruelties, but courageously declared the matter as it was, testifying both to Jews and Greeks, repentance towards God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ! (Acts xx. 21.)

The Jews in the mean time filled up the measure of their sins, till wrath came upon them to the uttermost. And so will all the opposition that is made to the gospel end to those who are implacable and obstinate in it. They who believe not that Christ is He shall die in their sins. Whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken, but on whomsoever it shall fall, it shall grind him to powder. John 19 viii. 24; Mat. xxi. 44.)

Let the ministers of Christ, however Satan may attempt to hin-

SECT.
iii.

der them, go on faithfully and courageously in their work, and watch over the souls which they have gained. When absent from them in body, let them not be absent in heart; but let them be thinking of their state, and often caring and praying for them: for what is their hope, and joy, and crown of rejoicing in the day of the Lord, but the souls which God shall graciously give them as spiritual children, or to whom he shall render them useful, for training them up in those ways of holiness in which, by the blessing of God upon the labours of others, they might be so happy as to find them? May God give many such to all who serve him with their spirit in the gospel of his Son; and in the views of their increasing piety, may they daily anticipate the glory and the joy with which they hope at last to deliver them to their Divine Master!

SECT. IV.

As a farther illustration of his love, the Apostle informs the Thessalonians of his care to send Timothy to them from Athens, and of the great pleasure with which he received the tidings which that evangelist brought him; he also assures them that he was continually praying for them, and for an opportunity of making them another visit, in order to promote their edification, which lay so near his heart. 1 Thess. III. throughout.

I THESSALONIANS III. 1.

SECT.
iv.1 Thess.
III. 1.

SUCH is the affection we feel for you, and therefore, as we were by persecution separated from you, while as yet your church was in a very tender and unsettled state (Acts xvii. 10), we could not but be solicitous, to be more particularly informed how it fared with you. And, being able no longer to endure the uncertainty in which we were with relation to you, we acquiesced in the uncomfortable circumstances of being left alone^a at Athens, where we had some peculiar need of the countenance and comfort of an approved companion and friend; And sent Timothy, our dear brother, and a faithful servant of God, and whom we highly esteem, as our diligent and affectionate fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ, whom you had formerly known

1 THESS. III. 1.

WHEREFORE, when we could no longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone:

² And sent Timothy our brother and minister of God, and our a Left alone.] It seems from this circumstance, that Silas was absent from Paul while that apostle was at Athens, though some have been of a different opinion. Compare Acts xviii. 5, which seems farther to confirm that fact.

b Fellow-

our fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ, to establish you, and to comfort you concerning your faith;

3 That no man should be moved by these afflictions; for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto.

4 For verily, when we were with you, we told you before, that we should suffer tribulation; even as it came to pass, and ye know.

5 For this cause, when I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, lest by some means the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain.

6 But now when Timothy came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of known under that character ^b; we parted with him, inconvenient as it was, for your sakes, ^{800.} ^{IV.} ^{1 The.} ^{III. 2.} that, by making you a visit, at a time when we concluded you so much needed it, he might strengthen and comfort you, exhort and advise you as occasion required, concerning the evidences of your faith in general, and any particular branches of it in which you might need farther instruction. That no man might be ³ shaken and discouraged from his adherence to the Christian profession and hope, by the greatest severity of these afflictions with which we are surrounded for ye yourselves know that we are appointed to these, and that one part in the scheme of God in establishing the Christian church, was to raise a society of men, who should glorify his name, and illustrate the force of true ⁴ religion, by enduring the greatest extremities, in its defence with fortitude and cheerfulness. For even when we were with you, we did not flatter you with any vain hopes of an easy and pleasurable life, but plainly and candidly told you, before you engaged with us, that we should certainly be afflicted, as it came to pass in fact; and ye well know, from the very nature of things, and from comparing the religion you ⁵ have embraced with the tempers, prejudices, and interests of men, that there was the greatest reason to expect it. For this cause also, being (as I was just saying) no longer able to endure the uncertainty I was in with regard to persons that in such circumstances lay so near my heart, I sent to know the state of your faith under such violent assaults, lest by any means the tempter, taking the advantage of the weakness of human nature, might have tempted you to suppress the conviction of your minds, or at least the public profession of your faith, so as to return to idolatry again; and so our labour should with respect to you have been in vain, as in such a case it certainly would have been, whatever secret ⁶ persuasion of the truth of religion might have remained. But now Timothy, having returned to us from you, and having brought to us the good tidings of your continued faith, and fervent around-

^b Fellow-labourer.] It appears from Acts xvii. 14, that Timothy had been in those parts before, as Paul's fellow-labourer, and so no doubt but he was known to the Thessalonians, and his coming on this occasion would be the more agreeable to them.

c Indeed

SECT.
iv.Thes.
III. 6.

abounding love, and assured us that ye have always a good and affectionate remembrance of us, as your spiritual father in Christ, greatly desiring, if your providence might permit it, speedily [to see us again, as we also assuredly do [to see] you;

7 We were hereby comforted, brethren, concerning you, and found the happy effects of those heart-reviving consolations, in all our tribulation and necessity, which grew more supportable to us than it would otherwise have been, by means of this happy assurance of your faith, which God hath blessed us as the instrument of producing.

8 For now we do indeed live^e, we relish and enjoy life, if ye stand fast in the gospel and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, retaining strenuously that holy profession and precious faith which ye have embraced: whereas, were ye to be drawn aside to renounce it, our very heart would be wounded, and it would be bitter as death unto us. For what sufficient thanks can we ever render to God concerning you, for all the flow of holy joy with which we rejoice on your account, for your conversion and progress in religion, when we have been presenting ourselves before our God, and breathing out our heart at his footstool; Night and day enlarging upon this, as a petition which lay nearest to our very souls, and, if I may be allowed such an expression, superabundantly making it our request, to see your face, and to complete the deficiencies of your faith, by instructing you in any article of religion, which being so suddenly torn away from you, by the storm that was raised, we had not an opportunity of opening to you so clearly as

10 your edification might have required. And we still continue to urge the humble supplication; that God himself, even our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom the supreme government of the kingdom of providence is committed, may, by a secret but powerful interposition, so dispose and over-rule all things, as to clear and smooth our way to you, by removing these obstructions which at present remain; And, in the 12 mean time, yea above all, that the Lord Jesus Christ, by the powerful operation of his Spirit on your hearts, may cause you to be enlarged and to abound in love toward each other, and to all Christians, yea towards the whole human race,

even

of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also do to see you.

7 Therefore, brethren, we were comforted over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith:

8 For now we live if ye stand fast in the Lord.

9 For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God;

10 Night and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face, and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith?

11 Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, direct our way unto you.

12 And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one towards another, and towards

^e Indeed live.] It is well known, that in the sacred writings life is often put for happiness, and Dr. Whitby has produced many instances of it in his note here.

towards all men, even as we do towards you :

13 To the end he may establish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

even as we do indeed abound in affection towards you, and shall always rejoice in any opportunity of manifesting it, by whatever we may be able to do, or may be called to suffer for your sakes.

secr.
IV.
1 Thes.
III. 12.
13

May you feel this noble principle of universal goodness more and more active in your minds, that, by the experience of its efficacy, your hearts may be strengthened in every virtue, [and you] may at length [be] found blameless in holiness before God even our Father, at the appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints around him, in that illustrious day, when their sanctity and glory shall be completed, and all their labours and sufferings in his cause abundantly recompensed.

IMPROVEMENT.

NOT farther to insist on the tender affection of Paul to the Ver. Thessalonians, which has already afforded matter for so many profitable remarks, let us recollect, that as Christians, we also are appointed to afflictions, by the experience of which our fitness for heaven and our relish for our everlasting rest are to be improved. It was faithful and kind in the apostles, after the example of their great Master, to give us such admonitions; but let us not be moved by the apprehension of any sufferings that may await us, for he who hath undertaken to support and defend us, can make us more than conquerors; he can, even while we continue in this state of warfare, establish our hearts unblameable in holiness; and how blessed a connection will that have with our being presented faultless and blameless before the presence of his glory, when Christ shall appear with all his saints, and when the sanctity of each shall be a glory to their common master, as well as an everlasting blessing to every one of those spotless souls!

Let the ministers of the gospel nobly rise above all attachment to secular views, and make it their great business to advance in their hearers such a temper. Let it be their life, to see those Christian friends, whom God hath committed to their care, standing fast in the Lord. And, if they have reason to joy for their sakes before God, let them render their thanks to God for it, and night and day be urgent in their prayers for them, that whatever comfort they have may be continued, and that whatever is wanting in their faith and their love, may be perfected, by the Divine blessing on ministerial labours.

SECT.

SECT. V.

The Apostle addresses several practical exhortations to the Thesalonians suitable to their circumstances, and particularly recommends chastity, justice, charity, and prudence. 1 Thes. IV. 1—12.

1 THESSALONIANS IV. 1.

SECT.
V.
1 Thes.
IV. 1.

AS for what remains therefore, my brethren, in subserviency to this important view, of being thus presented with all the saints before the great tribunal, in the perfection of holiness and happiness, we now beseech you, and exhort you in the Lord Jesus, that as you have received repeated instructions from us, while we were among you, how you ought to walk^a, if you desire to adorn your profession, and to please and honour God, who hath bestowed upon you the favour of being called into it, so ye would abound ² more and more, labouring continually to advance in every amiable quality, and every christian grace. I will not largely insist on these things now, for ye know what commandments we gave you, in the name and on the part of the ³ Lord Jesus, whose servants we all profess ourselves to be, and whose authority we ought always to account sacred. Bear them constantly in your mind, and often charge on your souls the observance of them. for this is the will of God concerning you, [even] your sanctification; that as he hath chosen us from the rest of the world to be a people separate to his honour and service, we should not pollute ourselves with those abominations which are so common among the heathen, and particularly that ye should abstain from fornication, and all other kinds of lewdness so commonly practised among those who

1 THESS. IV. 1.

FURTHERMORE then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us, how ye ought to walk, and to please God, so ye would abound more and more.

² For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus.

³ For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication:

^a How you ought to walk, &c.] The French Testament renders the words thus, "We entreat and conjure you by the Lord Jesus, to follow our instructions as to the manner in which you ought to live, in order to pleasing God, and that you would make continual progress in it." This is one specimen, among many, of the paraphrastic strain of this version, which changes the metaphorical expressions for phrases of a plainer nature equivalent to them: but, as the version I here give makes a part of a para phrase, I thought it more convenient to keep nearer the original, though I have not made a point of giving what should be exactly a verbal translation. There is a medium between both, which I have at least attempted, and if I have not hit upon it, I hope it is not for want of diligence and care.

4 That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour;

5 Not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles which know not God :

6 That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter : because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you, and testified,

7 For God hath not called us unto uncleanness but unto holiness.

b The heathens who know not God.] Many have proved, by a variety of learned quotations, how much the politest nations among the ancients, and particularly the Greeks, were addicted to the most infamous kinds of uncleanness; and Dr Whitby's note on this place may furnish out a catalogue, not to be read without a mixture of commiseration and horror.

c Go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter.] Many interpret this of injur-who are ignorant of the true religion : Whereas it is now the declared pleasure of the great Former of our souls and bodies, that every one of you should know how to possess his vessel, this animal frame, in which this immortal soul is lodged, as a rich and invaluable jewel in sanctification and honour; using his body as an instrument of service to God, to whom it has been solemnly consecrated; not as if it were intended as an organ to debase the mind by sensuality, which would surely be the most dishonourable view in which it can be considered. Walk 5 not therefore any longer in the lust of concupiscence, contriving to indulge yourselves in gross and lascivious gratifications, even as the heathens do, who know not God^b, and are therefore ignorant of that pure and sublime happiness which arises from contemplating, adoring, and imitating him.

We have also told you, and we now repeat 6 it, as an injunction of the greatest importance, that it is the will of God, that no man should in these, or any other matters, over-reach, or defraud his brother in [any] affair^c. For though the fraud may be conducted in so artful a manner as to evade human conviction, and punishment^d, yet it is most certain, that the Lord himself, the final and universal Judge, to whom we are all ere long to render up an account, [is] the avenger of all such, as we also told you before, and testified with all possible solemnity. For God hath not called us, in so extraordinary a 7 manner, from the rest of the world, merely to a new name, or some different rites of external worship, while we are at liberty to indulge ourselves in uncleanness, as if we were patronized in the practice of it, merely by being numbered among Christians; but, as he is in himself perfectly holy, he hath called us to the love and practice of universal holiness, and would raise from ing their neighbour's bed, taking the word ω, αγγε in an ill sense, as Fucinus is used in Latin. This, no doubt, is included, but I see no reason for limiting the clause to such a sense. Clean hands in the Old Testament signifies those unpolluted with bribes, and therefore no certain argument against the more extensive signification I have preferred, can be drawn from the next clause.

SECT.
V.1 Thess.
IV: 7.

from among the degenerate children of men a society, who, by the purity of their morals, should do an honour to the true religion, and approve themselves to be indeed the offspring of the Most High.

8 In all these things we have faithfully delivered unto you the charge and message which we received upon the highest authority: he therefore who despiseth our testimony and admonitions, despiseth not man alone, but God, who hath also given us his Holy Spirit, and caused it to dwell within us, and to guide us in our discourses and writings, into the certain and infallible knowledge of his will.

9 I have been large on some of the preceding articles, knowing how much you were addicted, in your heathen state, to some of the vices I have exhorted you to avoid. But concerning brotherly love, or that peculiar charity and affection which one Christian owes to another, ye need not that I should largely write to you now, for ye yourselves are divinely taught to love one another. God, dwelling in our nature, hath given you the example and the precept, with all possible advantage, and his Holy Spirit, descending on your hearts, forms and fulfils

10 them to this great law of love. And indeed I must do you the justice to say, by what I can learn of you, that ye actually do it to all the Christian brethren which are in all Macedonia, whether at Philippi, Apollonia, Amphipolis, Berea, or elsewhere. But we exhort you, brethren, that ye abound in this benevolent and amiable disposition yet more and more, not only to those that are your own countrymen, but to all the children of our heavenly Father, however they may be dispersed in one part or another.

11 And, while many indulge to an enterprising temper, and are always undertaking some new design, to make themselves talked of, and to draw the eyes and observation of the world upon them, we advise you, that you make it your ambition to live quietly in the practice of those peaceful

8 He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit.

9 But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another.

10 And indeed ye do it towards all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more;

11 And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with

d He therefore who despiseth, &c.] I will not here argue at large, how strongly this verse speaks the inspiration of Paul in what he wrote, and consequently that of the sacred writers in general; but I wish what I have said on this subject, in the Essay on the Inspiration of the New Testament, in the third volume, of this work, p. 542, &c. may be seriously considered, and that the important truth established in it, may be perpetually borne in mind by all my readers.

with your own hands, (as we commanded you ;)

12 That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing.

peaceful and humble virtues which suit the genius of Christianity, and particularly that you do your proper business. And, as Providence hath placed most of you in such low circumstances of life, that you are obliged to maintain yourselves by your daily labour, we hope you will go on diligently and cheerfully to work with your own hands for that purpose, that you may not as idle drones become the burden of society, but rather may be able to do something for the support of your poorer brethren, as ye know we gave it you in charge, during the little time we resided amongst you. Attend to it therefore, that so ye may walk decently toward those that are without the inclosure of the church, and silence the clamours which the enemies of the gospel would be glad to raise against it, as making men idle and irregular; and [that] you may have need of nothing, but without being under a necessity of asking relief from them or any others, may be preserved from such degrees of extreme poverty as might expose you to their contempt, and into which frugal and industrious persons seldom fall, without some extraordinary Providence, which audibly and effectually bespeaks the compassion of their neighbours.

SECT.
V.
1 Thess.
IV. 11.

12

IMPROVEMENT.

WHO would not wish to be instructed in every thing which might conduce to our walking so as to please God? who would not delight in frequent exhortations, to abound in such a conduct more and more, that every day may improve upon the last, Ver. till we perfect holiness in his fear? Blessed be God the rules are plain, and our own conscience must bear witness to the reasonableness and goodness of them. This is the will of God, even our sanctification; that we should be honoured with his amiable image, and by sharing something of his moral character, may share something of that happiness which in the perfection of holiness he enjoys. He hath indeed given us a compounded nature, and hath appointed us for a time to struggle with its animal powers, that by a victory over them we may approve our duty and e Do your proper business.] This exhortation was peculiarly proper to the Thessalonians, as there seems to have been a meddling pragmatistical temper prevailing among some of them, 2 Thess. iii. 11, which tended much to the reproach of their profession.—As to the emphasis of the word ἀδικημάτων, compare 2 Cor. v. 9, and the note.

SECT.

V.

and obedience, and be fitted for a purser happiness above than this low state of being will admit. Let Christians therefore learn Ver. to possess their vessels in sanctification and honour, and not be captives to the mean lusts of concupiscence and uncleanness, as the 4 heathens, who not having the knowledge of God, were more excusable than we in those indulgencies for which the knowledge
 5 of themselves and of their own nature would nevertheless, in some degree, condemn them.

Let us, as we dread the displeasure and vengeance of God, the supreme Guardian of the rights of his creatures, take heed that we do not allow ourselves, when it is most in our power, to go beyond, or defraud our brethren in any matter, but endeavour to 6 shew, that we have indeed been taught of God to love one another, and that we have received into our very hearts that maxim which our gracious Redeemer has given us, That we should do unto others
 9 as we would they should do unto us. On this principle likewise, let us diligently employ ourselves in our own proper affairs, that instead of being the burdens of society, we may in our respective spheres be its supports; and, quietly attending to what lies within our own province, let us leave ambitious schemes and projects to others, thinking ourselves happy enough, if we may be approved by him
 11 who hath allotted to the inhabitants of earth their several parts, and will another day accept and reward them, not according to the distinction and elevation of their stations, but according to the integrity with which they have behaved themselves in them. So shall we secure a testimony even in the consciences of those that are without, who would perhaps ungenerously and unrighteously rejoice in an occasion of charging upon the gospel of Christ the follies 12 and irregularities of its professors.

They will never be able to charge any thing on the gospel itself if they take their ideas of it from the writings of these its authentic teachers. And let it be remembered, that they gave such abundant 8 evidence of the authority with which they taught that he who despiseth them despiseth not man, but God, from whom they derived the Spirit by which they preached and wrote. His voice let us hear with reverence, his dictates let us humbly obey. The hour is near in which he will assert, the honour of his word, and demonstrate to all the world the wisdom of submitting to its dictates.

SECT. VI.

The Apostle particularly sets himself to comfort his Christian friends, with relation to those that were fallen asleep in Jesus, by an animating view of that glory and happiness on which, at the general resurrection, they should enter in their complete persons. 1 Thes. IV. 13, to the end.

1 THESS. IV. 13.

BUT I would not have have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope.

14 For if we believe that Jesus died, and rose again, even so them also which sleep in

1 THESSALONIANS IV. 13.

I HEAR it with concern, that since I have been separated from you, it hath pleased God to remove some dear and valuable members of your society, and I wonder not that you are tenderly affected with such a stroke. But I would not have you ignorant^a, my dear brethren, concerning the true state of them that are thus fallen asleep in the faith of Jesus, that ye may not lament with such unbounded transports and excessive forms of mourning, as are practised by others, even by your heathen neighbours, who are ignorant of God, and have no well-grounded hope^b of an happy immortality, like that which in the gospel is imparted to you. For surely, if we do indeed believe those great and important doctrines which that Divine dispensation teaches us, that Jesus, the Son of God, died to expiate our sins, and that he rose again from the dead, that he might secure our final salvation, we may easily believe, that a scheme thus undertaken and prosecuted, shall not fail of its effect; but that, in like manner also, God shall

SECT.
VI.1 Thes.
IV. 13.

^a I would not have you ignorant, &c.] Mons. Saurin, in his long and learned criticisms on this text, which he thinks one of the hardest in the New Testament. (Saur. Ser. Vol. VI. No. 1) gives it as his opinion, that the desire which prevailed in Christians to see Christ, when he should appear to judgment, made them lament those of their brethren who died as cut off from that hope. In reference to which he assures them, that they should be in that respect entirely on a level with those of their brethren who should then be found alive. But it may be queried, even on this hypothesis, why he does not directly tell them, that there was no particular room for such lamentations on this account as they themselves, and many succeeding generations, were to die before the coming of our Lord. He acknowledges that the apostle did not urge that, because he did not then exactly know whether Christ's appearance would be in that age, or at some much more remote distance of time. And this ignorance was certainly consistent with the knowledge of all that was necessary to the preaching of the gospel. Compare Mark xiii. 32.

^b As others who have no hope.] Tully says (Tusc. Disp. i. 13.) "Who would lament the death of a friend, unless he supposed him deprived of all the enjoyments of life, and sensible of the loss of them?" How forcible a remark in the present connection! I see no reason at all to imagine, as some have done, that there is a reference to the notion of some Jewish zealots, that unredeem'd persons had no part in the resurrection. The apostle's arguments by no means levelled at such an apprehension, nor do I find any evidence that the church at Thessalonica was yet pestered with such corrupters of Christianity.

c H h o

SECT.
vi.
1 Thes.
IV. 14.

shall, by the exertion of that mighty power with which he hath clothed this triumphant Saviour, bring with him, in the train of his magnificent retinue, at his final appearance, all those of his faithful servants who sleep in Jesus^c. As they died under the direction of his Providence, and committing themselves to his care, it shall in due time appear, that they are not lost, though they may have waited long for the consummation of their glory. For this we now say to you, by the express word of the Lord^d, on the authority of an immediate revelation from Christ himself, and not merely on our own conjecture, or wish, that we, that is, those of us Christians who remain alive^e at the coming of the Lord to judgment, shall not so prevent those who are asleep, as to be glorified before them. For the Lord himself, our great and blessed Redeemer, arrayed in all his own glory, and that of his Father shall in that great day descend from heaven, with a triumphant shout, raised by millions in Jesus will God bring with him.

15 For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep.

16 For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the arch angel, and with the trumpet of God: and the

of

^c Who sleep in Jesus.] The words οἱ τὸ κοινοῦ, which we connect with κοιμηθέντες, and render sleep in Jesus, may be considered as making a separate clause, and may imply, that it is by the power and agency of Christ that God will bring with him those of his people that are departed out of this life. The phrase to express sleeping in Christ, is κοιμηθέντες ἐν ᾧ; compare ver. 16; 1 Cor. xv. 18. Archbishop Tillotson explains the expression here used, as appropriate to the martyrs, and renders ὁ ἐνεκα τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, for Jesus' sake; but it cannot be proved that the grief to which the apostle refers, related only to such, and the force of the argument plainly reaches farther. Tillotson's Works, Vol. II. p. 184.

^d By the word of the Lord.] I think no words can more plainly assert that, in what follows, he speaks by an express revelation from Christ, and consequently there can be no room for any interpretation that can suppose him at all mistaken in any circumstance of the ensuing account.

^e We, that is, those of us who remain alive.] This hath been interpreted by many, as an intimation, that the apostle expected to be found alive at the day of judgment; and on that interpretation, some have urged it as an instance of his entertaining, at least for a while, mistaken notions on that head, as if the day of the Lord were nearly approaching. But this is directly contrary to his own explication of the matter, 2 Thess. ii. 1, &c. as well as to other passages in which he expresses his expectation of death. Compare Phil. i. 20; and 1 Cor. vi. 14; 2 Cor. iv. 14; 2 Tim. iv. 6. Others have pleaded this passage in favour of that doctrine which teaches the resurrection of some most eminent saints, before the main body of believers, and this, as most of the patrons of this scheme have explained it, in order to share with Christ in the glories and felicities of his personal reign upon earth. But to me it seems most natural to suppose that Paul here speaks as one of the Christian body, though he was not one of that particular number concerning whom he directly asserts, what is here said. Thus Hosea says (Hos. xii. 3), God spake with us in Bethel; and the Psalmist. lxxvi. 6, we rejoiced, that is, at the Red-sea when divided; and lxxxi. 5. I heard a language I understood not, that is, in Egypt, though neither were in existence at the times when the facts referred to happened. It is very unjust in Orobio to represent this as an artifice of the apostle to invite people to Christianity, by the expectation of being taken up alive to heaven in a very little time. Lim. Col. p. 75. His explication of this matter in the next epistle is abundantly sufficient to absolve him of all such suspicions, and indeed the sincerity that appeared in his whole conduct, evidently shews him to have been incapable of any such design. Compare Lamotte on Insp. p. 133—141.

the dead in Christ shall rise first.

of happy attendant spirits. His appearance shall be proclaimed with the voice of the great archangel, even with the trumpet of God, which shall then sound louder than it did on mount Sinai when the law was given. And the dead in Christ shall all in a moment be awakened by it, and shall rise out of their graves in the first place; springing forth in forms of glory to the infinite astonishment, of the surviving world.

SECT.
IV.
1 Thess.
IV. 16.

17 Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord.

And afterwards we, that is, those of us who are left alive at the time when this most awful and important day opens, shall together with them, by a mighty and instantaneous operation of the Divine power, be snatched up into the clouds^h, in order to our meeting the Lord in the region of the air, where his throne shall then be erected; and we, having been openly acknowledged and acquitted by him, shall be assessors with him in that judgment to which wicked men and angels are there to be brought forth; and when the final sentence is passed upon them, shall return to heaven, with our re-ascending Saviour, and so shall we be with the Lord for ever, and all share a blissful eternity in the sight and participation of his glory. Therefore when your hearts are distressed with grief, for the loss of your pious friends, or on any other occasion which can arise in this mortal life, comfort yourselves and one another with these words; the tenor of which is so important, and the truth contained in them so certain, as being taught by the infallible dictates of the Spirit of God, and revealed to us by him, from whose fidelity, 18 Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

f With the voice of the archangel.] I cannot think, with Mr. Pierce, that the archangel is Christ himself, so called as the great ruler of angels. There seems an evident impropriety in thus varying the expression, if it be only intended to say, that Christ shall shout as he descends; nor are the scriptures, to which this learned writer refers (viz. 1 Sam. iii. 21; 1 Cor. i. 7, 8.) by any means parallel examples. See Pierce on Phil. ii. 9.

g The dead in Christ shall rise first.] It has generally been inferred from hence, that good men shall rise before the wicked, and 1 Cor. xv. 23, seems to favour it. But this text only asserts their rising, before the saints who are found alive shall be changed.

h Caught up.] Not, says Dr. John Scott, by the ministry of angels (Christian Life, Vol. III. p. 1204), but by the vigorous activity of our glorified body, which Mr. Piggot (Serm. ii. p. 67) supposes shall be refined to such a degree of spirituality as to be able to tread air; and Mr. Whiston has a notion analogous to it. (App. to Boyle's Lect.) I pretend not to determine on the nicety of questions like these. Only I cannot think the expression of being caught, or snatched up, suits the exertion of what shall then be a natural power; nor can I suppose that we shall have any thing to do with air in the state which is to succeed the great day, in which the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, 2 Pet. iii. 12.

SECT.
iii. fidelity, power, and grace, we expect this complete salvation.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. O! who can be sufficiently thankful for the strong consolations 18 which these Divine words administer! How many drooping hearts have been cheered by them in every age, while successively mourning over the pious dead! How often have we ourselves been driven to them, as to a sacred anchor, when our hearts have been overwhelmed within us, and if God continue us a few years longer, what repeated occasions may arise of flying to them again!
 13 Let us charge it upon our hearts, that we do honour to our holy profession in every circumstance, and particularly in our sorrows as well as our joys. When providence is pleased to make such breaches upon us, let us not sorrow as those who have no hope for our deceased friends, or for ourselves. Surely we cannot doubt the very first and most fundamental articles of our faith, the death 14 and resurrection of Jesus, the Son of God; and if we do indeed assuredly believe these, what a blessed train of consequences will they draw after them! and this consequence most apparently, that they who sleep in Jesus shall not finally perish, but shall be brought with him to grace his triumph.

And O what a triumph shall that be! Let us now anticipate the joy with which, if true believers, we shall then lift up our heads and see our complete salvation drawing nigh. What though we 15 die and moulder in the grave? the saints then alive shall not pre- vent us: though the last memorial of our names may long have perished from the earth, it shall appear that they are written in 16 heaven. And when the Lord himself descends from heaven with that earth-rending shout, when the trump of God shall sound, his dead shall live, like his dead body shall they revive; they that dwell in the dust shall arise and sing, for his dew is as that falling upon herbs, and the earth shall cast forth its dead. (Isa. xxvi. 19.)

But who can now conceive the rapture with which so many mil- lions shall start up at once from their beds of dust, all arrayed in 16 robes of glory, and spurning the earth in which they have been so long intombed and all that is mortal and corruptible, shall soar aloft

[As being taught, &c.] The MSS. of New College in Oxford, and the Barbarine Library (No. 1 of each), add to λγους πταισις the words τῆ πνευματικῆς, comfort one another with these words of the Spirit. And though I see no reason to believe that addition authentic, yet, as the sense is just and right, I have expressed; in the it paraphrase, as I often do in such cases; that if peradventure any thing that belonged to the original has been omitted in the received copies (which I hardly suspect,) the reader may one way or another meet with it.

aloft in one joyful company with those who shall then be found alive, to meet the Lord in the air, forming a mighty host, bright as the sun, clear as the moon, and awful as an army with banners ^{SECT. VI.} 17 (Cant. vi. 10); they shall soar to meet their Lord, attracted by Divine love, and borne on in their flight by an almighty power. We shall ascend to him, we shall be owned by him, we shall be seated near him; for Christ who is our life shall appear, therefore shall we appear with him in glory; (Col. iii. 4.)

Nor shall it be merely the triumph of one day, or of any limited period, how long soever. It is the promise of his faithfulness and of his love, that so we shall ever be with the Lord. It is a glory that never shall decay, a meeting secure from all danger, from all possibility of future separation. In what circumstance of affliction shall not these consolations be felt? What torrent of tears shall they not be able to stop? What groans of distressed nature shall they not be sufficient to turn into songs of joy? Thanks, everlasting, ever new, ever growing thanks be to God, who always causeth us to triumph in Christ, in the views of such a felicity! And let the whole choir of saints, the living and the dead, unite in one joyful Amen.

SECT. VII.

The Apostle strenuously exhorts the Thessalonians to a diligent preparation for that important day of Christ's appearance, of which he had been discoursing above. 1 Thess. V. 1—11.

1 THESS. V. 1.

BUT of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you.

2 For yourselves know perfectly, that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night:

1 THESSALONIANS V. 1.

IHAVE told you that the solemn day of universal judgment will certainly come, and have been endeavouring to lead your minds to those views of it which must be most reviving to every true believer: but concerning the particular times and seasons of this grand event, with which the œconomy of providence in this world is to close, and some very wonderful occurrences which are to precede it, I am satisfied, my brethren, that you have no need of my writing to you accurately and largely. For ye yourselves do already assuredly know, as wherever we come, we make it one of our first doctrines, that the great day of the Lord, to which our eyes and hearts are so much directed, comes just like a thief ^{SECT. VII.} in the night, and will surprize the inhabitants ^{1 Thess. V. 1.} a Cometh like a thief.] Mr. Blackwall justly observes the remarkable emphasis of this passage. A thief comes upon people when they are bound in sleep, and they awake

SECT.
vii.1 Thess.
V. 3.

bitants of the world in general by a dreadful alarm, when they are sleeping in the deepest security. For when they shall be most ready to say, All things about us are in perfect peace and safety, and no evil of any kind threatens us, then sudden destruction shall come upon them, and seize them as inevitably and painfully as travail comes upon a woman with child, whose days are accomplished, and they shall not be

⁴ able by any means to escape it. But I am persuaded that you, my brethren, are not sleeping in darkness; but that, as you have the light of the gospel shining around you, it is your desire to act so agreeably to its dictates and to maintain such a sense of the great and important prospect it opens upon you, as to have no reason so apprehend, that the day of which I speak, or the day of death, which shall consign you to its unalterable doom, should come upon you as a thief, or surprise you in an unprepared state.

⁵ For ye are all by profession, the children of the light, and the children of the day, as ye call yourselves Christians, and I trust are so, not in name only, but in truth. Since we are not of the light, nor of darkness, if we really answer our profession, by which we are so indispensably obliged, to endeavour to resemble the Divine Being in holiness, and to maintain a temper and conduct which should not fear examination and

⁶ discovery: Since this therefore is the case, let us answer the engagement, and not sleep as the rest of mankind [do]; but let us watch and be sober, that we may not be obnoxious to any un-

⁷ reasonable and unwelcome surprise. For they who sleep, generally choose to sleep in the night, and they who are drunken, if they have not quite outgrown all common sense of decency, are drunken in the night; whereas the day is the season of wakefulness, sobriety, and labour. Let us not therefore, by our negligent and dissolute behaviour, seem, as it were, to turn the

⁸ day into night. But let us Christians, who, as I said before, are the children of the day, be sober, and keep on our guard against our spiritual enemies, putting on the breast-plate of faith and love,

³ For when they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape.

⁴ But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief.

⁵ Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness.

⁶ Therefore let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober.

⁷ For they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night.

⁸ But let us who are of the day be sober, putting on the breast-plate awake in amazement and confusion, being found unarmed and in an helpless posture: panzs come upon a woman, when perhaps she is eating, drinking, or laughing, and thinks of nothing less than that hour.

And here it is said, not that the day of the Lord will come thus, but that it is actually coming, which increases the awfulness of the representation. Blackwall's Sac. Class. Vol. I. p. 200.

plate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation.

9 For God hath not appointed us to wrath; but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ.

10 Who died for us; that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.

11 Wherefore, comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do.

love, which will defend us against their mortal attacks; and [for] an helmet, the lively hope of that eternal salvation which God hath promised, and which, if rightly understood, may be abundantly sufficient to bear us through all the dangers which may lie in our way to it.

And, blessed be God, there is room for arming ourselves with such an hope, for God hath not, as he justly might have done, destined us to bear for ever the final consequence of his wrath, to which our disobedience to him had rendered us obnoxious: but he hath been pleased to appoint us to the obtaining of that great salvation set before us in the gospel by our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath procured it for all true believers, and will assuredly at length bestow it upon them. Be therefore continually mindful of that compassionate Redeemer, who not only subjected himself to the many burdens and inconveniences of mortal life for our sakes, but even died in all the ignominy and agony of the cross for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him^b; that while we live, or when we die, the life and happiness of our immortal souls should be secure, in an union to him which death itself shall never be able to dissolve. Therefore comfort yourselves and one another with the thoughts of this great salvation, and edify each to those continued improvements in the life of holiness, which may correspond to so glorious a hope. This is most apparently your duty, and, as I know many good and valuable things of you, I am also persuaded that you do indeed make conscience of it.

IMPROVEMENT.

SINCE we continually see so many around us suddenly surprised into the eternal world, and fixed in that state in which judgment will

^b Whether we wake or sleep, &c.] Some interpret this still more literally than I have done, as if he had said, "Whether Christ comes in the night, when we are sleeping on our beds, or in the day, when we are awake, and busy in the pursuit of our common affairs." But as sleeping had just before been put for death, it seems more natural to interpret this clause, as speaking of the state of believers, whether alive or dead. And then I think it must contain a direct proof of the life of the soul, while the body is sleeping in the grave. God forbid, that any should understand these words, as intimating that Christ's death is intended to secure our salvation, whether we take our watchful care of it or not. Yet alas, the generality of Christians live as if that were the genuine and only interpretation!

SECT. vii. will find them, let us be very careful, that the day of the Lord may not overtake us as a thief, but that we maintain a continual watch.

Ver. How many are at this hour speaking peace and safety to themselves, over whose heads instantaneous destruction is hovering, such a destruction that they shall never be able to escape, never able to recover from it!

5 Let us endeavour to awaken ourselves and each other. Are we not indeed all children of the day? Let us rouse ourselves, and use the light, that by it we may dispatch our labours, and favoured by it, be guarded against the most sudden attacks of our spiritual enemies. Let us be sober and vigilant, lest our adversary the devil break in upon us by a surprise, which the unexpected weapons by which he attacks us may render yet more dangerous.

8 Our own armour is described and provided, if we seek it from the magazine of God. Let faith and love ever defend our breast. Let the hope of salvation cover our head. Let us adore the Divine clemency and mercy, that we are not appointed unto wrath, but enjoy the views of such a salvation, to be obtained by Jesus Christ. As he hath done his part to procure it for us, having died for this important purpose, let us exert ourselves to the utmost in our pro-
10 per sphere for securing it, that we may lay hold on eternal life.

Then may we be happily indifferent to life or death: while we continue in the body; when that is sleeping in the grave and our souls remain in the invisible world; and when our sleeping dust shall be roused, and both soul and body live in unremitting vigour and energy, beyond the need of that repose which is now so necessary,—still in each of these different states we shall live with him; and he will make the progression of the soul from one state of being to another, its progression to stages of increasing holiness and joy.
11 In the persuasion of this, let us comfort, exhort, and edify each other, and we shall feel the energy of the exhortations we give, and the sweetness of the consolations we administer.

SECT. VIII.

The Apostle concludes his epistle with a variety of short practical exhortations and advices. 1 Thess. V. 12—to the end.

I THESSALONIANS V. 12.

I THESS. V. 12.

SECT. viii. I HAVE exhorted you to endeavour to comfort and edify one another, but I would not by this be understood as intimating, either that the proper work of your ministers is to be taken out of their hands, or that any slight is to be put upon them in the execution of it. On the con-
I Thess. V. 12. trary,

AND we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labour

bour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you;

13 And to esteem them very highly in love for their works sake. And be at peace among yourselves.

41 Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men.

trary we beseech you, brethren, to know, to reverence, and respect those that labour among you in that important office, and preside over you in the name of the Lord^a; whose business it is publicly to instruct you, and personally to admonish you, as occasion shall require. It is in love to his church, that Christ hath appointed such officers, and you will find the benefit of their assistance in the whole of your Christian course. I would therefore advise and charge you to esteem them exceedingly in love, on the account of their work, in which they are the representatives of him who is the great Shepherd of the sheep. [And] for their sakes as well as your own, let me farther press you to be at peace with one another, and to guard against the first risings of any thing which might alienate your affections; as it is impossible for you to conceive how much mischief might spring up in the society, from causes of this kind, which may seem in their beginnings too inconsiderable to be regarded. And we also exhort you brethren, that you would all in a proper manner concur with your pious ministers, overseers, and elders, in all proper acts of Christian discipline; and likewise that ye endeavour by private addresses, as Providence gives you an opportunity, to promote the interests of true religion in the hearts of each other. And in this view, admonish them that are disorderly^b, and unruly, neglecting and proudly refusing to keep the rank which God hath assigned them; comfort the feeble minded, whose courage and resolution is ready to fail them, under the many difficulties with which in present circumstances you are surrounded; succour the weak and infirm, whether in body or mind, and be long-suffering toward all, not ready to drive the justest censure to an excess,

SECT.
viii.

1 Thes.
V. 12.

13

14

^a Preside over you, &c.] Προσαμαρτυροῦσιν may signify those who preside over your assemblies and moderate in them. There were certainly many persons endowed with miraculous gifts in this church, and there might have been danger of great irregularities, such as prevailed in the church at Corinth (chap. v. 19—21), if some had not been appointed to preside over the rest during the time of public exercises. Such officers there also were in the Jewish synagogues, as is well known. Compare 1 Tim. v. 17. See Bar. Misc. Vol. I. p. 81—84.

and the note on Heb. xiii. 17. But it is evident that ministers, by virtue of their general office, may be said to preside over Christian assemblies, even though there were no such peculiar need of their interposition, to moderate or direct the exercise of their gifts who were officiating in public.

^b Are disorderly.] So ἀτάκτοι is properly rendered. It is well known to be a military term, expressing the character of soldiers who keep not their ranks, and will not know their colours.

c Be

SECT.
viii.1 Thes.
V. 15.

excess, till every softer and more gentle method has been tried. And whatever injury any of you may have received, whether from professed friends, or from avowed enemies, see that no one render to any evil for evil, but always pursue that which is good: endeavouring to the utmost to promote the happiness of all about you. Maintain this temper both towards each other, that is, towards all your fellow-Christians, and towards all men, not excepting your enemies and persecutors; sure by this means either to mollify their hearts, or at least to approve your own conduct in the sight of God, and to make whatever evil you suffer the occasion of obtaining from him blessings which will infinitely counterbalance it. And, in expectation of this, be always rejoicing^c, in the midst of your trials and afflictions, knowing that your complete redemption is approaching, and that in the mean time you have always the presence of your God and your Saviour, from which you may derive unutterable satisfaction and delight, sufficient to support you under all your sufferings. And, in order to maintain and improve this holy joy, pray incessantly^d. Be constant in your stated devotions at their returning seasons, and endeavour to keep your minds habitually prepared for those pious ejaculations, which have so happy a tendency to promote the Christian temper, or for any sudden call you may have to address yourselves more solemnly to the Divine Majesty. And, whatever your circumstances may be, remember not only your dependence on God, but your obligation to him, and in every thing give thanks; since it is certain you can never be encompassed with such afflictions as not to have much greater cause of thankfulness than complaint. And this cheerful grateful spirit you should be concerned to maintain, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus, with regard to you Christians; as by giving you his Son, and with him all the invaluable blessings of his covenant, he has laid a foundation

15 See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men.

16 Rejoice evermore;

17 Pray without ceasing.

18 In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.

^c Be always rejoicing.] The words ἡμεῖς χαίρομεν may express the form of a salutation, as if he had said, may you always be prosperous and happy; but, as they are put among so many other short exhortations, I think this version much preferable.

^d Pray incessantly.] That is, at all proper seasons. So the burnt offering presented every morning and evening, is called perpetual. Lev. vi. 20. Compare Luke xxiv. 53, with Acts ii. 46, 47. See also John xviii. 20.

19 Quench not the Spirit.

20 Despise not prophesyings.

21 Prove all things: hold fast that which is good.

22 Abstain from all appearance of evil.

tion for perpetual thankfulness, that may justly support the demand.

Moreover, that this temper may be preserved in your minds, take heed that ye quench not the sacred flame of the Holy Spirit in any of his influences, as you know it is his great office to excite and maintain every pious and devout affection in the soul. Especially be careful, that ye do not damp it, by indulging in any degree to a sensual or malevolent disposition, which must so naturally provoke him to withdraw both his gifts and his graces. And, as a regular attendance on Divine ordinances will greatly tend to cherish his influences, and a neglect of public worship proportionably obstruct them, despise not the holy exercises of prophesyings ^f, in which the ministers of Christ interpret scripture by a singular inspiration, or speak to men by way of exhortation or comfort; but listen to them with reverence, and own the authority of God as speaking in his appointed messengers. Yet be upon your guard that ye are not imposed upon in an affair of so much importance, and take not every forward assertion for an oracle from God; but try all things with attention, examine the validity of the pretensions which are made to extraordinary inspiration, and when you have discussed them with impartiality and diligence, then resolutely hold fast that which is good, and be not prevailed upon to deny or reject it on any considerations.

Remember also, that in order to preserve your innocence, it will be necessary to guard against circumstances of strong temptation, and things concerning the lawfulness of which you may have just suspicion, although you cannot absolutely pronounce them to be criminal. I exhort you therefore, as you value your safety, to abstain from all that has so much as the appearance

[Quench not the Spirit.] This has generally been expounded as referring to the gifts of the Spirit, the exercise of which in themselves or others, should not be hindered. Compare 1 Tim. iv. 14, 1 Cor. xiv. 39. The phrase here used, according to some, particularly Lord Barrington (Miscel. Sacr. Vol. I. p. 110.) has a reference to the descent of the Spirit as in flames of fire, as he supposes there may also be in the word ἀνεκκρύβω, 2 Tim. i. 6. See the note there.

[Despise not prophesyings.] This caution as explained in the paraphrase, may perhaps intimate, that the neglect of a due regard to prophesyings, which some were too ready to despise, might be a means of blasting even those more splendid gifts, which they might be tempted to prefer to them.

SECT.
viii.

of evil, and from whatever may be likely to prove the occasion of sin.

1 Thess.
V. 23.

And while I thus urge you to proper diligence and caution on your part, I join to my counsels my most ardent and affectionate prayers for you. May the God of peace himself, that God who hath now reconciled us, and is become the source of all prosperity and happiness, sanctify you entirely, in all the parts of your nature; and [I pray God that] your whole constitution, or frame, your rational spirit, your animal soul, and your *body*s, animated by it, may be so kept blameless, by Divine grace now, as to be presented with the greatest honour and acceptance at the appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ,

24 whensoever it shall be. This I desire, and cheerfully hope it, for faithful [is] he who hath called you to the Christian faith, who also will do this; since [it] is what he has graciously promised to all true believers, whom he hath committed to the care of Christ, as their Shepherd, who will give them eternal life, and will raise them up in the last day.

25 This is the glorious gospel we preach, and that we may be successful in preaching it, I entreat you, brethren, to pray for us; for we greatly need and greatly value the prayers of

26 our fellow Christians. And when ye assemble together, in token of your mutual affection, and agreeably to the custom which hath long prevailed, salute all the brethren present with an holy kiss; and let the sisters in like manner salute each other, taking care to conduct this action

27 with the strictest modesty and propriety. As I write these things, not merely for the perusal of this or that particular friend into whose hands they may first fall, but for general use, and, as the importance of them is very great, I adjure you

25 And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly: and I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

24 Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it.

25 Brethren, pray for us.

26 Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss.

27 I charge you by the Lord, that this epistle

23 g Your whole constitution, &c.] I wish I had known better how to render ἀποκλυθησθε ὅλως, which being followed by το πνευματικὸν ψυχῆν, &c. ought not, as in our versions, to be rendered as an adjective to the first. It signifies the whole frame of nature allotted to you. It is very evident, that the apostle, in the following words, refers to a notion which, as the learned Vitringa has very accurately shewn, Vitr. Obs. lib. cap. iii. 4.) prevailed among the rabbies as well as the philosophers, that the person of a man was constituted of three distinct substances, the rational spirit, the animal soul, and the visible body. He seems to suppose, from Heb. iv: 12, the two former may be separated; and some have thought that he intimates, 1 Cor. xiv. 14, 15, that one may know what the other does not. This is not a place to state or examine this notion at large; it certainly derives great weight from this text. My curious readers may consult, besides the commentators, Hallet on Scrip. Vol. I. p. 39, &c.

pistle be read unto all the holy brethren.

28 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you, Amen.

you, by the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ, committed to me, that this epistle be read to all the holy brethren of your church, at some time when you are all gathered together for Divine worship. And, that you may be sure it is genuine, I add with my own hand my general benediction. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ [be] always with you, to support that principle of true Christianity which he hath implanted in your souls, till the purposes of his love be completed in your everlasting salvation. Amen.

SECT. viii.

1 Thes. V. 27.

28

IMPROVEMENT.

WHAT a variety of excellent instructions does this short section contain! yea, how much is expressed in some of its shortest sentences! But how hard it is for our degenerate hearts to learn these lessons which so few words are sufficient to express! This habitual joy in God, this constant disposition to prayer, this thankful temper, that upon every call may overflow in thanksgiving, this abstinence from every appearance of evil. "Blessed Lord! we need a better spirit than our own to teach us these things. May thy grace be with us, and may none of us quench the Spirit, nor despise those ordinances which by his heavenly communications he so often owns!" Let us endeavour, by the daily importunity of prayer, to engage more of its efficacious and purifying influences, to sanctify the whole frame of our nature, our spirits, our souls, and our bodies; that we may so understand and choose, so love and delight in Divine things, and maintain so regular and constant a command over our appetites of flesh and blood, and all the irregular propensities of animal nature, that we may be continually fit for the appearance of Christ, and be more like what we hope we shall be, when presented before the presence of his glory.

To promote this, let us watch over one another in the Lord. Let Christian societies preserve a regular discipline, with a due mixture of zeal and tenderness. Let the friendship of private persons be rendered mutually subservient to religious improvement, and let a due regard be ever paid to those who labour among them, and preside over them in the Lord. They will not require a blind submission to their dictates, if they rightly understand the gospel they are to teach. They will allow, they will encourage, they will urge their hearers to prove all things, which even the apostles themselves, with all their plenitude of inspiration, did not think it beneath them to do. But they who thus candidly enquire, and are

Ver.

16

17

18 19 20 14

12

21 are

SECT.
viii.

are determined to hold fast what is truly good, knowing how excellent an office the ministry is, knowing how much the edification of the church depends upon it, will esteem those that bear it

Ver. very highly in love, for their work's sake, and in whatever instances they may be constrained, by what they judge to be the evidence of truth, to differ from their brethren, or even from their 13 teachers, will be solicitous to maintain harmony and love in the societies to which they belong, as it becomes them to do who are the disciples of that wisdom from above, which hath taught them inseparably to connect their regards to purity and peace.

THE END OF THE FAMILY EXPOSITOR ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

THE
FAMILY EXPOSITOR:

OR, A

PARAPHRASE

ON

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

THESSALONIANS.

WITH

CRITICAL NOTES, AND A PRACTICAL IMPROVEMENT OF EACH SECTION.

A

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO THE
PARAPHRASE AND NOTES
ON THE
SECOND EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

IT has been already observed, that the first epistle to the Thessalonians was written from Corinth, about the year of our Lord 52; and as Timothy and Silas appear, from the inscription of this second epistle, to have been still with the apostle, it has generally been concluded, that he wrote it while he continued in the same city, and not long after the former. See Vol. III. § 41, *note*ⁱ.

The general design of it is to confirm the Thessalonians in their Christian profession, and to comfort them under the sufferings to which they were expos'd. Besides which the apostle sets himself to rectify some mistaken apprehensions they seem to have entertain'd about the coming of Christ; and to direct them in the exercise of Christian discipline towards some irregular members of the society.

This epistle (which, like the former, bears St. Paul's name, with those of Timothy and Silas, in the inscription) begins with a devout acknowledgment to God, for the eminent attainments which the Thessalonians had made in religion, and particularly for the zeal and fidelity with which they adhered to the Christian cause in the midst of persecution. To support and animate them under their trials, the apostle reminds them of the distinguished honour that would be conferred on all the saints, at the coming of Christ, and the vengeance that would at the same time overtake all the enemies of the gospel, assuring them of his constant prayers for their farther improvement in the Christian character, in order to their attaining the felicity that was promised: Chap. i. throughout.—But, lest by mistaking the meaning of what he had said or wrote to them at any time upon that subject, or by any other means they should be deceived into an opinion that the judgment-day was near at hand, he informs them, that before this awful period there would be a grand apostacy in the church, and an antichristian power, which he calls the man of sin, would arise, and greatly obstruct the progress of the gospel, arrogantly assuming to itself the Divine authority, and by pretended miracles leading multitudes into the grossest and most fatal delusions. Some beginnings of this spirit he observes were already discoverable, and as soon as those restraints which then lay upon it were removed, it would break out in all its force, and continue to spread its malignant influence, till it should be finally destroyed by the coming of Christ: Chap. ii. 1—12. These views lead him to express his thankfulness to God, that the Thessalonians had escaped this corruption which began so early to prevail in the church, and had given such proof of their entering into the true spirit and genius of Christianity, by the happy effect their belief had produced upon their lives and characters. But lest they should think themselves secure, he exhorts them to steadfastness and constancy in their profession of the truth, and adds his earnest supplication for their increasing comfort and establishment. At the same time he desires their prayers that his labours might be attended with the same success amongst others as they had been amongst them; and that he might be delivered from the opposition that was made to him by unreasonable men, expressing withal his cheerful confidence in their continued regards to the instructions he had given them, ver. 13.—Chap. iii. 1—5.

The apostle, having borne so honourable a testimony to the character of the Thessalonians in general, proceeds to give them directions for their conduct towards some irregular members of the society, and charges them to withdraw themselves from those that behaved disorderly, and neglecting the proper business of their calling, busied themselves impertinently in the concerns of others. He exhorts such to attend to their own affairs, and carefully to provide for their own subsistence, that they might not be a burden to others. And to add greater weight to his admonitions, he reminds them of the example he had set them while at Thessalonica, in maintaining himself by the labour of his own hands, though, considering his character as an apostle, he had certainly a right to have been supported at their expence. If any one notwithstanding should refuse to comply with this exhortation, or with those he had given them in his former epistle, he directs his Christian friends to exclude him from their familiarity and friendship, that he might be made sensible of his fault; yet he advises them to treat him not as an enemy, but to admonish him as a brother. The apostle having thus sufficiently instructed the Thessalonians to their duty on this important article, concludes with his usual salutation, written with his own hand verse 6, to the end.

The attentive reader will easily perceive that this, though the shortest of all St. Paul's epistles to the churches, is not inferior to any of them, in the sublimity of the sentiments, and in that excellent spirit by which all the writings of the apostle are distinguished. Besides those marks of its genuineness and Divine authority, which it bears in common with the rest of these epistles, it has one peculiar peculiar to itself, from the exact representation it contains of the papal power, under the characters of the man of sin, and the mystery of iniquity. For, considering how directly opposite the principles here described were to the genius of Christianity, it must have appeared, at the time when this epistle was written, highly improbable to all human apprehension, that they should ever have prevailed in the Christian church; and consequently a prediction like this, which answers so exactly in every particular to the event, must be allowed to carry its own evidence along with it, and to prove that the author of it wrote under a Divine influence. For a farther illustration of this argument, see Dr. Benson's Dissertation on the Man of Sin.

A
PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE
TO THE THESSALONIANS.

SECTION I.

The Apostle expresses his joy in the constancy with which the Thessalonians adhered to the Christian cause, and animates them against the persecutions to which they were still exposed, by the prospect of that glory that would be conferred upon them at the coming of Christ. 2 Thess. I. throughout.

2 THESS. I. 1.

PAUL, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians, in God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ :

2 Grace unto you, and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 We are bound to thank God always for you

2 THESSALONIANS I. 1.

PAUL and Sylvanus, or Silas, and Timothy, being still continued together, renew the address we formerly made to the church of the Thessalonians ; which is now by Divine goodness in a state of union and friendship with God, our great and ever-blessed Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ : having been so happy as some time since to receive the gospel, and still to retain the profession of it. And we must now, 2 as before, express that sincere benevolence, which reigns in all our hearts towards you, by wishing, as we then did, the communication of grace to you, and abundance of peace, tranquillity and happiness, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

SECT.
i.
2 Thes.
I. 1.

We sincerely sympathize with you in all your 3 trials, yet we are sensible, that we ought always to

SECT.

i.

2 Thes.

1. 3.

to give thanks to God on your account, brethren, as it is fit and reasonable, because your faith, notwithstanding all that is done to blast it and trample it down, groweth exceedingly, and the love of every one of you all towards one another aboundeth more and more; your faith drawing new confirmation from your sufferings, and your sense of them engaging you tenderly to pity, and to do your utmost for the relief of those who share in them, and at the same time endearing to you that one body which the world so cruelly hates, and so maliciously endeavours to destroy. And these good dispositions are, through the Divine grace, so remarkable in you, that we do ourselves indeed boast of you in all the churches of God to whom we come, on account of your unwearied patience and lively unshaken faith in the midst of all your persecutions, and the various tribulations of one kind and another which you endure: [Which shall,] on the whole appear to [be] so far from proving inconsistent with the honour of the Divine government, that, on the contrary, they shall terminate in a glorious and advancing display of the righteous judgment of God^a, that ye may be approved in some degree worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer; that ye may appear by these trials to be possessed of integrity and patience, of such meekness and superiority to this transitory world, as to be fit for those seats of superior dignity and blessedness on which you are to enter. It shall also be the means of displaying the Divine justice, in the punishment to be inflicted on your implacable enemies; for [it is] a most righteous and honourable thing with God to repay tribulation to them who bring tribulation on you, accounting with them in the great day for all the evils they have inflicted on you unprovoked, and while you were engaged in the most equitable and benevolent cause. And, on the other hand, it will appear equally suitable to the honour of the Divine government, to repay unto you who suffer this tribulation rest with us, if not in the present world, where we you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all towards each other aboundeth:

4 So that we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure:

5 Which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer:

6 Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you;

7 And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus

^a A display, &c.] Perhaps display may farther imply, that the sufferings of good men, and the triumphant prosperity of their persecuting enemies, should not only terminate in such a display of Divine vengeance, but that those seeming irregularities do even now declare, that there shall be such a day of retribution.

^b From

sus shall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels,

8 In flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ :

9 Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power ;

10 When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day :

11 Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would count you worthy do not ourselves expect it, yet at last in the revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven, with his mighty angels, who shall be the ministers of his power in the execution of his great and awful judgment. And nothing can be more comfortable to the persecuted saint, than to think of this illustrious appearance, when Jesus shall descend in his Father's glory and his own, surrounded with flaming fire, to execute vengeance on those who know not God, but presumptuously neglect and despise the intimations, yea and the express declarations of his will, with which he has favoured them ; and especially to inflict deserved punishment upon those who obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, though they have received it in all its evidence.

They who add the rejection of that to all their other crimes, can expect neither remedy nor mercy, but shall assuredly be punished [with] eternal destruction, which shall as it were, break forth like lightning upon them, from the face of the Lord^b, and drive them from his presence, as it will be utterly impossible for them to stand against his glorious power, which will be armed for their ruin, and shine forth with irresistible brightness and majesty, When he shall come to be glorified in the full assembly his saints, and to be admired^c in the efforts of his almighty power and love, for the complete salvation of all them who believe. They shall be accomplished in that glorious day, to which our faith and hope have been so long directed, and in which the promises of his covenant do so remarkably centre. It is the hope and joy of all his people, and it is yours in particular ; because our testimony among you was credited, and you have given substantial evidences, that your faith was cordial and sincere. In which regard, as we rejoice in what is already done, and have the tenderest concern that the precious seed we have sown may answer the hope with which we see it

^b From the face of the Lord.] Bishop Hopkins has justly observed (Hopkins' Works, p. 470), that this phrase expresses, not only that they shall be expelled from that joy and glory which reigns in the presence of Christ, but that his presence shall appear active in the infliction of their punishment, so that they shall, as it were, be blasted with the lightning of his eye.

^c To be admired.] This strongly implies, not only that the saints themselves shall admire at what he does for them, so far above all their expectations and conceptions, but that it shall reflect an admirable glory upon our Redeemer, in the judgment of all who shall be spectators of it.

^d Good

secr.
i.
2 Thes.
I. 11.

it springing up, and at length advance to full maturity, we continue to pray always for you, that our God would, by the working of his grace, render you more and more worthy of [this] high and holy calling, and would fulfil in you all the good pleasure of [his] goodness^d, all that amiable and happy temper, which his paternal regard to our happiness engages him to recommend and require. And to speak all in one word, that he would accomplish and perfect the work of faith with power, that is, would powerfully impress upon your hearts the great principles of that religion which he hath revealed to you, and which you have embraced; since nothing can tend more effectually to produce and nourish every good disposition in your mind.

12 That so the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, while you act in a manner so suitably to the relation you bear to him: and that you may also be glorified in him, may now have the honour of approving yourselves his faithful servants, the excellent of the earth, and may for ever share in the glory he hath prepared for such; according to the grace of our merciful God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ, by whom it is so plentifully bestowed upon us.

thy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power:

12 That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

IMPROVMENT.

Ver. How wisely has the apostle chosen the representation we have now been reading, to promote the glory of our Saviour's name by strengthening the saints who are already established, and awakening any who might be careless and irregular, by the very same considerations, which may so justly awe and intimidate the enemies of the church! How forcible in all these views is the description we here read, of the glorious and triumphant appearance of our Lord! Let it be ever placed before our eyes. He shall surely come in flaming fire, to take vengeance on all his enemies.

6 The troublers and persecutors of his people shall have their peculiar share in it, and it is most righteous with God that they should.

Yet

[d Good pleasure of his goodness.] Mr. Blackwall would render it the benevolence of his goodness, and says, it is the shortest and most charming representation any where to be found, of that infinite goodness which surpasses all expression, but was never so happily and properly expressed as here. Blackwall's Sac. Class. vol. I.

p. 242. We may add, that ωδύνη seems at once to express, that it is sovereign pleasure, and also that he feels, as it were, a sacred complacency in the display of it. And for that reason I choose rather to retain, with our received version, good pleasure, than to substitute the word benevolence in its stead.

Yet it is not intended for them alone, but for all who know not God, and who obey not the gospel of Jesus Christ. How diligently should we examine, what our knowledge of God is, and what our obedience to his gospel! whether the one be merely speculative, and the other verbal, or our knowledge practical, and our obedience sincere and universal! Everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power, is a vengeance dreadful enough, one would imagine, to awaken even by its distant sound, all who are not sunk into the last and lowest degrees of insensibility. Who can stand in his presence when once he is angry? Who can resist his power? But there are a happy number, who shall be glorified by him and, which should give us peculiar joy, in whom he also shall be admired and glorified, in that day and for ever. The holy and blessed creation of God shall see to all eternity, from what ruin Jesus could raise, and to what felicity he could exalt, those who were once the captives of Satan, the slaves of sin, and the heirs of death and hell. May the expectation of it influence our hearts in a suitable manner! May all the good pleasure of God's goodness be fulfilled in us, and the work of faith with power! Then while our faith groweth exceedingly, our mutual love will abound, our patience will be adequate to every trial, and we shall be approved, as in some measure, through Divine grace, worthy of that kingdom to which God hath called us.

SECT. i.

SECT. II.

Paul cautions the Thessalonians against expecting the day of judgment immediately, and foretels the appearance of antichrist that was first to come. 2 Thess. II. 1—12.

2 THESS. II. 1.

NOW we beseech you, brethren by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him,

2 THESSALONIANS II. 1.

ISPOKE in my former letter of the coming of Christ, and I have just been mentioning it to you again; but I am afraid you should misunderstand what I have written upon that subject, and therefore I must beseech you, brethren, with respect to the intended and much desired appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering

SECT. ii.

2 Thes. II. 1.

a The appearance of our Lord.] Cra- dock would render $\alpha\pi\epsilon\sigma\tau\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\upsilon\sigma\iota\sigma\iota\varsigma$, concerning the appearances, as if he had said, with relation to what I wrote in the former epistle of Christ's coming, and our being caught up in the air to meet him (compare

1 Thes. iv. 17,) supposing $\alpha\pi\epsilon\sigma\tau\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\upsilon\sigma\iota\sigma\iota\varsigma$ to be used for $\alpha\pi\epsilon\sigma\tau\epsilon\lambda\epsilon\upsilon\sigma\iota\sigma\iota\varsigma$ here, as it certainly is, 1 Cor. viii. 25; and Vitringa Observ. lib. i. cap. vi. § 6) has said so much to vindicate it, that I could not but prefer this rendering. Mr. Howe takes it as we do in our translation, and

SECT.
ii.2 Thess.
II. 2.

thering together unto him, of which I then spoke, That ye be not soon moved from [the steadiness of your] mind, nor troubled, either by the suggestion of any pretended spirit of prophecy and revelation in others, or by the report of any word, which we may be said to have dropped, or by the sense which any may put upon what we have written in the former epistle, which you have really received, or any other which may be brought to you, as from us, as if the great day of Christ were just at hand^b, and to be continually looked for. Let no man deceive you by any means which he may use so as to persuade you of this, lest finding yourselves mistaken in that expectation, you should be brought to doubt of the faith you have received, or in apprehension of so speedy a dissolution of the world, you should be less attentive to some of its concerns than duty or prudence will require. For you may be assured, with respect to this great and important day, that [it shall not come] till there come first an amazing and shameful apostacy^c in the Christian church itself; and the man of sin be revealed, that antichristian power, which is to raise itself by such enormous mischiefs; yet it is so surely doomed to destruction, by the just though long delayed vengeance of God, that I cannot forbear calling him that assumes it, the son of perdition, as our Lord himself called Judas the traitor (John xvii. 12); I now speak of one who opposes himself to the interests of true religion, by arts and enterprizes in former generations unknown, and, as pride often

2 That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit nor by word, nor by letter, as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand.

3 Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come except there come a falling-away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition:

4 Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God or and speaks of it as the most solemn adjuration in the Bible (Howe on the Spirit, vol. II. p. 79); and then shews how pernicious the consequences of that error might have been, which the apostle endeavours so so solicitously to guard against.

^b The day of Christ were at hand.] Yet it was what the primitive Christians confidently expected, and some tell us, they were the more desirous of martyrdom, that they might not be spectators of so dreadful a scene as they supposed it would be. See Reeve's Apol. vol. I. p. 30. But if it really were so, it was an instance of a double mistake in these good men.

^c An apostacy.] Dr. Whitby understands this, either of the revolt from the Romans, or the falling away of many Christian converts to Judaism, through prejudices in favour of the perpetuity of the Mosaic law, or expectations of the temporal kingdom of the Messiah, or the fear of persecution; on each of which topics he enlarges with great propriety. And Vitringa is large in shewing, that great apostacy prevailed in the Christian church, between the days of Nero and Trajan. (Observ. lib. iv. cap. 7.) Yet I have thought it my duty to explain this difficult but important context, as referring to what Mr. Joseph Mede, with so great propriety, calls the apostacy of the latter times, and I must refer to his learned and judicious writings on this head, and to Dr. Benson's Dissertations on the Man of Sin, to vindicate the reasonableness of an interpretation which I have by no means room to discuss at large.

d Above

or that is worshipped: so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God.

often goes before destruction, insolently exalts himself above all that is called God, or the object of religious worship^d, taking upon him to controul Divine institutions, and to model every thing according to his own arrogant pleasure so that he himself, as God, sets himself in the church, which is the temple of God, shewing himself with such pompous parade, and such despotic authority assumed over the consciences of men, that so far as actions can speak, he in effect asserts, that he is God, nothing human, and indeed nothing created, having a right so to dictate.

SECT.
ii.
2 Thess.
II. 4.

5 Remember ye not that when I was yet with you, I told you these things.

This is an event of so great importance, that I have formerly mentioned it. Remember ye not, that being yet with you, though I spent so very little time among you, I nevertheless told you these things, and gave you such warnings concerning them as I imagined you could not so soon have forgot? And now, though it is a tender subject, which it is not convenient to speak of in too explicit a manner, I persuade myself, that ye know what restrains him from being revealed in (what otherwise might seem) his own time. For the mystery of iniquity, the hidden design of corrupting and overthrowing Christ's kingdom, which has so many artful ways of insinuating itself into the minds of sinful men, and of introducing its own tyrannical, avaracious, and ambitious schemes into the church, does already in some measure work^e, amidst

6 And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time.

7 For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth, will let, until

d Above all that is called God, &c.] The usurpation of the papacy in Divine things is so unequalled, that if these words are not applicable to it, it is difficult to say, who there ever has been, or can be, to whom they should belong. The manner in which the pope has exalted himself above magistrates is equally remarkable and detestable; but I do not apprehend it so immediately referred to here, as his taking upon him to controul every thing in religion. Σεισμημα has exactly the signification here given it. See Acts xvii. 23.

e The mystery of iniquity doth already work] As Dr. Whitby explains the man of sin, of the rebellious and unbelieving Jews, he must of course explain this, of the turbulent and seditious principles which evidently prevailed among them; and it is agreeable to his scheme to interpret the impediment spoken of in the next clause, of Claudius Cæsar, whose favours obliged them so, that they could not immediately break out, but who was soon taken away by a violent death, which gave them the opportunity they seemed so much to wish for. See Whitby in loc. But it appears much more reasonable to understand the passage before us of the anti-christian spirit which began to work in the Christian church then, in the pride and ambition of some ministers, the factious temper of many Christians, the corruption of many Christian doctrines, the imposing unauthorised severities, the worship of angels, &c. of all which things the papacy, availed itself, for acquiring and exercising its iniquitous dominion; and so he that hindereth will refer to the imperial power, of which we shall presently speak, but of which prudence obliged St. Paul to write with a caution, which unavoidably occasioned some obscurity.

† There

sect.
ii.

2 Thess.
II. 7.

amidst all the peculiar engagements to the most humble, disinterested, and upright conduct, which an age and ecclesiastical state like ours brings along with it. Only there is one that hindereth, till he be taken out of the way^f, secular powers at present are a restraint, but when that is taken away, and different scenes in Providence open, these iniquitous principles, that are secretly fermenting, will break out in all their force. And then the ungodly one shall be revealed, and appear as it were unveiled in all his native deformity; even he who shall bring the greatest infamy and the greatest misery on the Christian world. Nevertheless, though his reign may be of some considerable duration, it shall not be perpetual; for the Spirit teaches us to regard him as sentenced to inevitable ruin, as one whom the Lord will certainly at length destroy; and how firmly soever he may seem established by human policy and power, he shall find himself unable to withstand the breath of his mouth, which shall kindle all around him a consuming flame, in which all his pomp and pride shall vanish. And indeed he will not only in some measure humble and abase, but utterly eradicate and abolish him, by the resplendent brightness of his coming, when truth shall beam in upon men's minds with all its energy, and its most formidable enemies shall fall before it.

9 In the mean time, the monster of iniquity shall prevail, [even he] whose coming is according to the energy of Satan, whose interest he shall reestablish, where it seems to be overthrown. That malignant and deceitful spirit shall therefore endeavour to promote this antichristian kingdom to the utmost, by all lying powers and signs and wonders^g, by a variety of fictitious miracles, so artfully contrived and so strongly supported by an abundance of false testimonies that until he be taken out of the way.

8 And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming:

9 Even him whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs, and lying wonders,

^f There is one that hindereth, &c.] Dr. Geddes very properly explains this of the Roman Emperor, who would not suffer ecclesiastical power to grow to an exorbitant height, while he held his seat at Rome. See Geddes' Tracts, vol. ii. p. 10. and as many good modern commentators give it the same turn, so it is observable that Tertullian, Augustine, Chrysostom, all agree in saying, that antichrist was not to appear till after the fall of the Roman empire. See Archbishop Tillotson, Vol. II. p. 193.

^g Lying powers signs and wonders.] It is certain that the construction will very well allow us to refer $\psi\epsilon\upsilon\delta\epsilon\varsigma$ to all the preceding words, as well as the last; and nothing seems so natural as to refer the whole to the fictitious miracles of the church of Rome, which have grown up to such a degree of extravagance and effrontery, as even to make their own popes ashamed
h Energy

10 And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish: because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved.

11 And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie;

12 That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

that many shall be entangled, deceived, and undone by them. SECT. ii.

And, in the conduct of this most iniquitous design, recourse will be had to all manner of unrighteous deceit, which shall be managed with the utmost art and address, among those wretches, who shall many of them finally perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved by it, but preferred those secular views which such dishonest practices promoted, to the great prospects of their everlasting happiness in an invisible world. And for this cause, when they have for a limited time been permitted to trifle with the message of his mercy and the strivings of his Spirit, God will in righteous judgment give them up to a reprobate and insensible mind, and will send upon them the energy of deceit^h; he will suffer them to deceive others, till they are deceived themselves too; so that they shall believe the lie which they have so long taught: They that may all be condemned at last, who believed not the truth, though offered to them with sufficient evidence, but, on the contrary, had pleasure in unrighteousnessⁱ; and imposture, when it might serve their present interest, to which all considerations of conscience and honour, religion, and future hope, were sacrificed. And this I leave upon record, that such as are not entirely incorrigible, may be alarmed by this dreadful representation, and that others may be warned to stand at the remotest distance from the tents of these wicked men, and though it should be at the greatest hazard, to maintain the cause of God and of truth against them. 2 Thes. II. 10.

IMPROVE-

^h Energy of deceit.] Those most ridiculous popish legends, which have yet gained such credit as to be admitted into their public offices, furnish out a most affecting comment upon these words.

ⁱ Had pleasure in unrighteousness.] I cannot but think this refers to many of the priests and others in the Romish church, who impose on the people knoten delusions, merely out of regard to secular interest; and it wears so dreadful an aspect on such, and on those, who on the like principles, act the same part in the Protestant world, if such there be, that I cannot but hope it may be the means of producing in time some great reformation, when it shall please God powerfully to impress on the professed teachers of others a serious sense of the importance of their own salvation and to make them feel how contemptible all worldly emoluments are, when compared with truth of doctrine and purity of worship and discipline.

^k Divine

IMPROVEMENT.

SECT.
ii.

LET us behold with humble reverence the depths of the Divine counsels and judgments: God hath been pleased to suffer the craft of Satan to display itself, in reducing from his allegiance a great part of the Christian world, yet has he taken the wise in his own craftiness, so far as to make that very apostacy from Christianity an additional proof of its Divine original. Who Ver. that had only examined the genius of that holy religion, could 3 have imagined that such a mystery of iniquity should have arisen 7 in it, and that man of sin have been revealed? Surely, when the particulars of the description come to be compared with the accomplishment, it may seem owing to some judicial infatuation, that men of deep policy and great penetration, with this very passage of scripture in their hands, should have suffered the marks of antichrist to be so very apparent, even in many instances, beyond what might have seemed absolutely necessary 4 for establishing that secular kingdom which they sought; particularly, that the pope on high days should set himself on a high throne, in the temple of God, to be there solemnly adored, and should have permitted his parasites so expressly to boast that he is God, and to give him, in some of their licensed and authorised works^k, Divine titles.

The scandalous and extravagant pretences which the followers of the papacy have made to miracles, exceeding in number, and some of them in marvellous circumstances, those of Christ and 9 his apostles, plainly display the energy of Satan, that father of frauds, pious and impious. And the most incredible lies, which they have, by solemn and irrevocable acts, made essential to their faith, shew the strength of delusion, beyond what could have been 11 imagined, had not fact led us into the theory. How dreadful is it to think of some of the expressions which the spirit itself uses, when speaking of these artifices of deceit!—that they should be abandoned by God to believe a lie, that they may all be damned who have pleasure in unrighteousness,—that they may bring 12 upon themselves eternal aggravated damnation. Who would not tremble, who would not grieve for so many of our fellow men yea of those, who degenerate as their form of Christianity is, we must yet call our fellow Christians, who are thus dishonoured, enslaved, and endangered? The Lord grant that they may not be utterly undone! Let them despise us, let them by most solemn execrations annually repeated, devote us to destruction, and prepare ^k Divine titles.] See Mr. Barker's sermon at Salter's-hall, in the lecture against Popery; and Mr. Chandler's account of the conference in Nicholas-Lane.

pare against us all the instruments of it in their power, yet will we still pray for them. The Lord grant that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are led captive by him at his pleasure! (2 Tim. ii. 26.) Let us recommend to Divine compassion the souls drawn after artful and wicked leaders, in the simplicity of their hearts, and take comfort in this thought, that the time will come, when the Lord shall destroy this son of perdition with the breath of his mouth and the brightness of his coming. 8 May the remnant of God's people among them take the alarm, and come out from them in time, and be separate, that they may not be partakers with them in their plagues; (Rev. xviii. 4.)

SECT.
ii.

SECT. III.

Paul returns thanks to God for his mercy to the Thessalonians in supporting them hitherto, and addresses such exhortations to them, and prayers for them, as might most effectually conduce to their continued establishment, desiring also their prayers for him amidst his various labours and dangers. 2 Thess. II. 15,—to the end. III. 1—5.

2 THESS. II. 13.

BUT we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth.

2 THESSALONIANS II. 13.

SUCH corruptions as these will at length arise in the church, and we have hinted that something of this spirit is already beginning to work. But blessed be God that so little of it appears among you; on the contrary, we are sensible that we ought always to give thanks to God for you, brethren, whom we have great reason to address, as beloved of the Lord, because that cordial zeal with which you have embraced the gospel, and that resolution with which you retain it in the midst of afflictions and persecutions, give us ground cheerfully to conclude, that God hath, of his wise counsels and abundant grace, from the beginning of his work and plan for the redemption of men, chosen you to eternal salvation, for a participation of which you are prepared by that sanctification, which is the work of the Holy Spirit on your hearts, and that belief of the truth, which hath so effectual a tendency to promote it.

SECT.
iii.2 Thess.
II. 13

14 Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

This is God's appointed way of obtaining an interest in this salvation, to which he hath called you by our gospel, even to the obtaining the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ; that glory which his mercy hath prepared, and to which his faithful care shall at length conduct all his obedient followers,

14

SECT.

iii.

2 THESS.

II. 15.

lowers, in which they shall fully enjoy the rich provisions of his love, and be made like him in holiness and happiness. Therefore, brethren, let me exhort you to stand fast, and strongly to retain the instructions which you have learned of us, whether by word or by our former letter, as you may be assured you have there a genuine representation of the contents of those important doctrines with which we are intrusted. And may our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God even our Father, who hath loved us in so surprising a manner, and given [us] by his gospel such a fund of everlasting consolation, and such good hope through his overflowing grace, when without it, we could not have had any glimmering of hope, or prospect of comfort for ever.

17 May he, I say, by the rich communication of his love and mercy, comfort your hearts, and may he strengthen and confirm you, making you ready for every good word and work, that his name may be glorified, and your present satisfaction and future reward may abound. As for what remains, I shall not enlarge, but must beseech you, brethren, that ye would pray for us, that the word of the Lord may run a free and unobstructed course every where, and be greatly glorified^a, as through his grace [it is] among you;

III. 1

2 And that we, whom he hath honoured with the office of dispensing it, may be delivered from unreasonable^b and wicked men, who are endeavouring as much as possible to prevent the propagation of the gospel, by destroying or confining us. We cannot wonder at it, for all men have not faith^c, and there are so many corruptions opposing its progress, and they are so powerfully abetted by the great enemy of souls, that we have rather reason to admire the Divine agency, in making it so successful as it is. But whatever difficulties we meet with, this is our comfort, that the Lord Jesus Christ, to whom we devote our labours,

15 Therefore, brethren, stand fast and hold the traditions, which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle.

16 Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation, and good hope through grace,

17 Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work.

III. 1. Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified even as it is with you,

2 And that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men: for all men have not faith.

3 But the Lord is faithful, who shall stablish

^a May run and be glorified.] Some think these words allude to the applause given to those that made a speedy progress in the races, which constituted so important a part of the Grecian games.

^b Unreasonable.] Bishop Wilkins observes that αἰσῆ may signify absurd, contumacious, persons, who are not to be fixed by any principles, and whom no topics can work upon. Wilkins of Nat.

Rel. p. 34. Many such remain among us even to this day.

^c Faith,] By faith some understand a principle of honesty, which may encourage a confidence to be reposed in them. Howe of the Spirit, Vol. II. p. 192. But I rather understand it of that upright and candid disposition which would engage men to receive the testimony of the apostles.

establish you, and keep you from evil.

4 And we have confidence in the Lord teaching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command you.

5 And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ.

labours, and have committed our souls, is invariably faithful; who will strengthen and keep both us and you from the evil one and all his works. He will indeed preserve us from every thing that would on the whole be hurtful to us, and over-rule to our truest good what has the appearance of evil. And we have a cheerful confidence in the fidelity and grace of our blessed Lord, with respect to you, that by his powerful influence you are and will be established in every good resolution, so that in every instance ye both do and will do the things which in his name we give you in charge. And may we have the pleasure of seeing this our confidence happily answered more and more! May the Lord direct your hearts into the more vigorous and constant exercise of the love of God, and into the exercises of that patience under all your trials and afflictions which become the disciples of Christ^d, and is agreeable to his example.

SECT
iii.
2 Thess.
iii. 3.

IMPROVEMENT.

How wisely and happily does the apostle unite the views of the grace of God and the duties of men, while he represents our choice to salvation in a light so worthy of God, since this salvation is still to be obtained through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth. Our spirits must be sanctified by the operation of the Divine Spirit: the truth must be not only speculatively, but powerfully and practically believed, or all our hopes will be vain. But surely, were it possible that salvation could any other way be obtained, it would be much less desirable, or rather, that which did not imply a sanctified spirit, and an heart open to receive and obey the truth, would not deserve the name of salvation. Blessed be God, who in this view hath called us to obtain salvation and glory by Jesus Christ, even God our Father who hath loved us. From him do these everlasting consolations flow. It is by his blessed and gracious operation we are strengthened and established in every good word and work. His fidelity stands engaged to do it, if we humbly commit ourselves to him, and wait upon him. The prayers of the apostles, dictated no doubt from above, concur with the promises to encourage our hopes, that he will

Ver.
13

14 16
17
Chap.
iii. 3.

^d The patience of Christ.] We render it, the patient waiting for Christ, but παρουσία τοῦ χριστοῦ may rather signify Christian patience, or that patience with which Christ himself suffered the many injuries and afflictions through which he passed.

SECT. iii. will direct our hearts into the love of God and the patience of Jesus Christ. On the exercise of that love and that patience doth the

Ver. happiness of life chiefly depend. Too ready are our weak hearts
5 to wander from it, and to faint under the difficulties that lie in our way. Let us call on him to preserve and maintain the graces he hath implanted, that they may be exerted with growing vigour and constancy even unto the end.

2 Unreasonable and wicked men will oppose the progress of the gospel, which hath so powerful a tendency to promote holiness and comfort; and as there are those that have not faith, they will be ready to labour its destruction. But when the prayers of Christians are frequently engaged, that the word of God may run and be glorified, there is great reason to hope that much of their perverse opposition may be over-ruled to most contrary purposes, so that the wrath of man shall praise him, and the remainder of that wrath be restrained; (Psal. lxxvi. 10.)

SECT. IV.

The Apostle concludes his epistle with giving some directions as to the strenuous exercise of discipline, with respect to some disorderly persons, and with renewed prayers for the prosperity of the church at Thessalonica. 2 Thess. III. 6—to the end.

2 THESSALONIANS III. 6.

SECT. iv. AZEALOUS regard for the honour of our Divine Master requires me to inculcate on the churches under my inspection, a strict care in the exercise of discipline; and I heartily wish there were nothing in your circumstances which particularly demanded my farther admonitions on that head. But, as many good men are ready to be too remiss here, from a fear of displeasing others, and making themselves enemies, we solemnly charge you, brethren, in the awful and beloved name of our Lord Jesus Christ, the credit and progress of whose religion is so nearly concerned in the matter, that ye withdraw yourselves from any brother, whosoever his rank, circumstances, or profession may be, who in the conduct of his life walks irregularly, and not agreeably to the instructions which he hath received from us, with regard to the grand rules of Christian morality. I speak freely on this head, for ye yourselves know how it becomes you in this respect to imitate us; for we were not in any

3 THESS. III. 6.

NOW we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly and not after the tradition which he received of us.

7 For yourselves know how you ought to follow us: for we be-behaved not ourselves disorderly among you.

8 Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but wrought with labour and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you:

9 Not because we have not power, but to make ourselves an example unto you to follow us.

10 For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat.

11 For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busy-bodies.

12 Now them that are such we command, and exhort, by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work any instance irregular among you, but endeavoured to behave so as to recommend and enforce our doctrine by our example. Neither did we eat any man's bread at free cost, when we had an opportunity of subsisting gratis, at the expence of any particular persons or families, but with diligent labour, and frequently with very tedious and wearisome toil, we wrought with our own hands, in that profession which we had learned, and this night and day, that we might not be burdensome to any of you, and give you the least room to suspect that we had any secular views in the doctrine we brought you, or that indolence led us to engage in preaching it. Not that we are destitute of authority, from the reason of things, and the express commission of Christ himself to take a moderate subsistence from the persons in whose instruction we employ our time and strength; for the Lord himself hath ordained, that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel: but we declined using that liberty, that we might exhibit ourselves to you [as] an example, that ye might imitate us in a frugal and industrious life. And ye know, that, even when we were yet with you, we were so fearful of any irregularity in this respect, that we expressly gave this in charge to you, that if any one would not work, neither should he eat; that no idle drones should consume the common stock, and quarter himself freely on the diligent and laborious, but rather be brought under a necessity of working, to relieve his own want, if he would not do it from a sense of social duty and good order.

We now insist upon this the more largely, 11 for we hear that there are some among you who walk irregularly, not prudently working at all for their own honest subsistence, but impertinently busy in attending to the concerns of others. They who are of such a character, 12 therefore, we solemnly charge and tenderly entreat, by the dear and venerable name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that working with quietness, and silently pursuing their proper business, they eat what

* Night and day] This expression seems to intimate, that the apostle was sometimes obliged to sit up a part of the night at his business, as a tent-maker, that he might have the day at leisure to preach to those that came to him for religious instruction.

b Faint

SECT.
iv.2 Thess.
III. 12.

what may with justice be called their own bread not supporting themselves with what has been purchased by the labours of others, while they continue unprofitable to society.

work, and eat their own bread.

13 And as for you, my brethren, the wiser and sounder part of the church, I would fain animate and exhort you, that ye faint not, nor be discouraged, [while] you are engaged in a course of well-doing^b: prosecuting those actions which are fair, beautiful, and honourable, however men may censure you, or whatever difficulties may lie in your way, yea, though some should

13 But ye, brethren, be not weary in well-doing.

14 ungratefully abuse your goodness. But if any one is not obedient to our word, whether spoken to you during our short abode, or signified by this, or my former epistle, set a mark upon that man, whoever he be, and have no familiar converse with him, that so, seeing himself shunned by his brethren, whose esteem it is natural for every one to wish, he may be ashamed, and by that shame may be recovered^c from those irregularities which have engaged you to avoid his company, and made his friendship for the pre-

14 And if any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed.

15 sent infamous. Yet account [him] not as an enemy, nor do any thing in the least to hurt him in his secular affairs, or to exasperate his irregular passions, but admonish [him] as a brother, and with faithful love to his soul, as well as a tender concern for the edification of the church, and credit of religion, labour for his recovery.

15 Yet count him not as enemy, but admonish him as a brother.

16 And now, to conclude, may Jesus, the great Lord of peace, who hath established concord between heaven and earth, and so effectually provided for uniting the hearts of men in the most pacific and friendly bonds, himself give you peace at all times by every means. May all the dispensations of his Providence, in every place and circumstance of life, concur to advance the serenity and happiness of your minds; and for this purpose, may the Lord continually [be] with you all.

16 Now the Lord of peace himself give you peace always, by all means. The Lord be with you all.

17 Thus far I have dictated to the person whose assistance I use in writing this; but now I will take the pen myself, and add the salutation by the hand of me Paul, which is the token in every epistle

17 The salutation of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token

^b Faint not while well doing.] Didote gives it this excellent turn; though some may abuse your liberality, be not deterred thereby from works of charity.

would render ἐπισημαίνω, that he may be reclaimed by shame; but I thought it better to insert the additional words in the phrase, than the version.

^c By that shame be recovered.] Some

^d The

ken in every epistle :
so I write.

18 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ
be with you all. Amen.

epistle ^d, for so, to prevent counterfeits, I write that the several churches may be secure that what is thus signed is genuine. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ [be] with you all, and may you enjoy all the happy consequences that flow from the most plentiful communication of it ! To which I am sure you will put your hearty amen, as I do mine.

SECT.
IV.

2 Thes.
III. 18.

IMPROVEMENT.

MAY the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, given in a richer abundance to his churches, animate and engage them to maintain that discipline which is so necessary to his honour and to their own comfort and edification. Scarcely can we say which is more to be lamented, the neglect of the thing, or the abuse of the name. It never could be the design of the wise Legislator of the church, that secular terrors should be pressed into his service, that fines, imprisonments, and civil incapacities should be the result of censures passed in his peaceful and benevolent name. Irregularities, in those that call themselves his followers, are indeed to be observed, and discountenanced. Offenders are to be admonished, and if lighter admonitions succeed not, they are to be avoided : but still in a view of recovering them by an ingenuous shame (if any remainder of it be left in their hearts) from those practices, which, if connived at, would soon become the shame of the society. Thus far therefore let us resolutely carry our censures, separating scandalous persons from our sacramental communion, and declining that familiar converse with those who are so separated, which might lead them to think we privately disregarded these censures which had in public so awful a form ; yet at the same time let us not treat them as enemies, or as those of whose recovery we have no hope, but remember the tenderness of brotherly love, amidst all the severest acts of brotherly reproof, and the common tie of humanity, to those whom we are commanded to regard only as heathens or publicans.

May

d The token in every epistle.] I think it very evident, from this and several other passages, that Paul, not being very familiarly used to Greek characters, and perhaps to save time, every moment of which he knew how to estimate, used to dictate to some ready scribe, perhaps sometimes while his hands were employed in the labours of his trade. And this may account for some small inaccuracies of style at which little minds have been offended, and which some, who seem to carry their scrupulosity to an excess, have been over solicitous to vindicate, but which they, who read with any thing of the temper of the writer, will easily know how to excuse. What was hinted before in this epistle, (chap. ii. 2.) may be an intimation that some fictitious letters were early written in his name, by which St. Paul might be induced to add this token with his own hand.

SECT.
iv.

May there be, in the professed disciples of Jesus, a care to avoid and discourage that sloth and petulance which would make men Ver. busy in other people's matters, while they are quite negligent of their own. Let us remember the example of the apostle, and be solicitous to eat our own bread. So shall we be most likely to enjoy inward peace and satisfaction of mind, and find that relish in the possession of a little which the largest supplies would not give to them who are conscious to themselves of sloth or dishonesty.

Some worthless people there have always been in every station of life, and under all religious professions, and some idle drones, who are ready to abuse the bounty of others better than themselves. But let us not from hence seek a mean excuse for refusing to such as really stand in need, acts of liberality and charity. Let us not be weary in well-doing; the time of rest and reward will come. While we are waiting for it, the presence of the Lord of peace may be expected, if we take care to adorn his religion by the usefulness, as well as the meekness, of our behaviour, in this world of misery and provocation, through which he hath appointed us to pass, and through which he has himself condescended to pass before us, to make our way safe and our exit happy.

THE END OF THE FAMILY EXPOSITOR ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

THE
FAMILY EXPOSITOR:

OR, A

PARAPHRASE

ON

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

TIMOTHY.

WITH CRITICAL NOTES, AND A PRACTICAL IMPROVEMENT OF EACH SECTION.

A

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO THE
PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO TIMOTHY.

TIMOTHY, to whom this epistle is addressed, was a native of Lystra, a city of Lycaonia, in the Lesser Asia. His father was a Greek, but his mother, (whose name was Eunice) a Jewess (Acts xvi. 1.) and, as well as his Grandmother Lois, a person of an excellent Character, (2 Tim. i. 5). The pious care they took in his education soon appeared to have its desired success; since we are assured by the apostle, that from a child he was well acquainted with the holy scriptures. It is not certain when he was converted to the Christian faith; though it is not improbable but it might be in the first visit that Paul and Barnabas made to Lystra, mentioned Acts xiv. when the apostle was stoned by the malice of the Jews and left for dead, to which he refers, 2 Tim. iii. 10. However this be, when St. Paul came unto those parts again, he had the satisfaction to find, not only that Timothy continued stedfast in the profession of Christianity, but was in great esteem with the churches at Lystra and Iconium for his distinguished piety and zeal. The discovery of so excellent a temper promised fair for eminent usefulness, and could not fail of recommending him to the peculiar regard of the apostle, who from that time seems to have fixed upon him as his companion and assistant in his labours. But, as he was a Jew on the mother's side, he judged it prudent that he should be circumcised before he entered upon his ministerial office: after which, he did not scruple to ordain him in a solemn manner by the imposition of hands (1 Tim. iv. 14: 2 Tim. i. 6), though he was at that time probably not much more than twenty years old. (Compare 1 Tim. iv. 12) From this time we often hear of him as attending the apostle in his travels, and assisting him in preaching the gospel; and from Heb. xiii. 23, we may gather, that he shared with him in his sufferings as well as his labours; to which we may add, that St. Paul has thought fit to join his name with his own in the inscription to several of the epistles, viz. 2 Cor. Philip. Coloss. 1 and 2 Thess. and Philem. He appears in every respect to have been eminently qualified for the important office with which he was invested; and the honourable terms in which the apostle always mentions him to the churches, and the confidence which, notwithstanding his youth, he reposed in him upon all occasions, are sufficient to give us a very high idea of his character. And perhaps there was no one of all his companions and fellow-labourers whose sentiments and views of things so exactly corresponded with his own. He appears from their first acquaintance with each other, to have been particularly concerned to form him for usefulness; and no doubt his principal view, in taking him at first as the companion of his travels, was, that he might be more immediately under his inspection, and enjoy the advantage of his more free and familiar instructions. No wonder then, if the apostle looked upon his pupil with peculiar complacency, and even parental affection, when he saw him answer his fondest expectations, and fill up with so much honour the station he had assigned him. No wonder, on the other hand, that Timothy should discover a filial reverence for a person of St. Paul's venerable character, with whom he had been so intimately connected, and from whom he had received so many and such important favours.
his

It is well known, that the date of this epistle hath been greatly disputed: to enter largely into the controversy would far exceed the limits allotted to these Introductions. However, as in a work of this kind the reader may expect some notice should be taken of a question which is of some importance, and as he may not be furnished with those authors*, who have treated it more fully, I shall here give some account of the principal hypotheses relating to it, and state the evidence with which they are respectively attended.

The hypothesis which seems to have prevailed most generally, is, That it was written about the year of our Lord 58, when Paul had lately quitted Ephesus on account of the tumult raised there by Demetrius, and was gone into Macedonia, Acts xx. 1. And this is the opinion of many learned critics, ancient and modern; particularly of Athanasius, Theodoret, Baronius, Ludovic, Capellus, Blondel, Hammond, Grotius, Salmasius, Lightfoot and Benson.—On the other hand, Bishop Pearson endeavours to prove, that it could not be written till the year 65, between the first and second imprisonment of Paul at Rome; and L'Enfant, without any hesitation, goes into this hypothesis.

It is universally allowed that St. Paul must have written this first epistle to Timothy at some journey which he made from Ephesus to Macedonia, having, in the mean time, left Timothy behind him at Ephesus; for he expressly saith to Timothy, 1 Tim. i. 3, I be- sought

* See Pearson Op. Post. Diss. 1. C. ix. § 5. p. 75, &c.
Benson's Propag. of Christianity, vol. II. p. 167—170.
Witsii Meletem. C. ix. § 3—5.
Boyse's Works, vol. II. p. 292—297.

sought thee still to abide at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia. Bishop Pearson accordingly, in order to prove that the date of this epistle was as late as he supposes, having observed that we read only of three journeys of Paul through Macedonia (viz. Acts xvi. 9, 10; Acts xx. 1; and ibid. ver. 3), endeavours to show, that it could not be written in any of these, and must consequently have been written in some fourth journey, not mentioned in the history, which he supposes was about the year 67, after Paul was released from his first imprisonment at Rome.—That it was not written at the first or third of these journeys is readily allowed, and it appears from the whole series of the context in both places; but it is the second that is generally contended for.

Now the Bishop supposes, that the epistle was not written at this second journey, because it appears from Acts xix. 22, that Paul did not leave Timothy then at Ephesus, having sent him before into Macedonia, and appointed him to meet him at Corinth. See 1 Cor. iv. 17; xvi. 10.—To this it is answered, that though Paul did indeed send Timothy from Ephesus, yet, as we are told that Paul made some stay there after that (Acts xix. 22,) Timothy might be returned before the tumult, and so the apostle might, notwithstanding, leave him behind at Ephesus, when he himself set out on his journey for Macedonia (For it should be observed, that he changed his scheme, and, before he went to Corinth, where he had appointed Timothy to meet him, spent some time in Macedonia; from whence he wrote his second epistle to the Corinthians in company with Timothy, who came to him in his return from Corinth, and continued with him while he remained in these parts.) Now that Timothy returned to Ephesus before the apostle departed, will indeed appear very probable, if (as Mr. Boyse argues from Acts xx. 31, compared with chap. xix. 8, 10) St. Paul spent three years at Ephesus, and in the neighbouring parts, and sent Timothy away nine months before the tumult: which would leave him time enough to perform his commission, and return to Ephesus before the apostle had left it. (See Family Expos. vol. III. sect. 43, note^c, p. 189.)—To which it may be added, that it appears from 1 Cor. xvi. 10, 11, which epistle was written from Ephesus, that Paul expected Timothy, after his journey to Macedonia and Corinth, would return to him at that city.

The Bishop further objects to the epistle's being written at this second journey, mentioned Acts xx. 1; that when the apostle set out he proposed to go into Macedonia, and visit the churches there and in Greece, which must necessarily take up a considerable time; whereas in his epistle to Timothy he speaks of his intention to return very soon. (1 Tim. iii. 14; iv. 13.)—But it is natural to suppose, that some unforeseen accident might detain him longer than he designed; and, being disappointed of some assistance he expected from Macedonia, he might afterwards send for Timothy to come to him, who, as the passage by sea might be dispatched in a few days, might arrive at Macedon before the apostle wrote his second epistle to the Corinthians.

The bishop further argues, that it appears from the epistle to Titus, as well as from some passages in his epistle to the Philippians, and to Philemon, that Paul actually made another journey into those parts after his first imprisonment at Rome, in which journey he left Titus behind him at Crete, which lay in his way from Rome, (Tit. i. 5.) Now it must be allowed the bishop, that the supposition which Salmasius makes is not at all likely, that Paul touched at Crete when he was going from Achaia to Macedonia, for then he carried a collection with him, (Cor. xvi. 1—5; Acts xxiv. 17), and therefore it was not probable he would go so much out of his way; and when he was about to sail into Syria, and heard that snares were laid for him, (Acts xx. 3), it is not to be supposed that he would go into the mouth of them; or that he would take up his time in preaching at Crete, when he was in haste to be at Jerusalem, (Acts xx. 16;) or that he would winter at Nicopolis, (Tit. iii. 12) when winter was passed, and he desired to be at Jerusalem before the passover.—But then it hath been observed, that perhaps the epistle to Titus might be among the first Paul wrote, and his voyage to Crete, one of the many events before his going up to the council at Jerusalem, which in his history of the Acts, Luke not being in company with him when they occurred, had entirely passed over; and of which there are, notwithstanding, some traces in St. Paul's epistles; particularly 2 Cor. xi. and Rom. xv. 19. Or if it be allowed that the epistle to Titus was written by Paul after his first imprisonment, it will not follow from thence, that the first epistle to Timothy must have been written at the same time. This is a brief account of the arguments for Bishop Pearson's hypothesis, that this epistle was written about the year 65, with their respective answers.

On the other hand, it is pleaded in favour of the first mentioned hypothesis, namely its being written in the year 58.

(1.) That when Paul wrote his first epistle to him, Timothy was a young man, (1 Tim. iv. 12, Let no man despise thy youth) which is also referred to, 1 Cor. xvi. 10, 11. Now supposing he were only 16 years old when he was converted to Christianity, which was in the year 46, he would in the year 58 be about 28 years of age; but in 65, the time when Bishop Pearson supposes the epistle was written, he would be 35, and past a youth, 30 being the age at which the Levites were, according to the law, to enter upon their office. And whereas it hath been objected to this observation, that even in his second epistle, which is supposed to be written some years after his first, he is cautioned to flee youthful lusts; it may be replied, that though he were indeed at that time in the meridian of life, yet ye was not out of the reach of such temptations, though the season of youth be more peculiarly liable to them. Besides, the admonition might be intended to suggest this thought, that having outgrown youth, he ought to be so much the more superior to them.

(2.) It is observed, that the state of things in the church of Ephesus in 58, better suits the contents of the first epistle than it does in

65. For instance, it appears from chap. i. 3, 4, 6, 7, and other passages, that those corruptions which the apostle speaks of as greatly increased and risen to a considerable height, when he met the elders of Ephesus at Miletus, and when he wrote his second epistle, were just beginning to creep into the church at the time of his writing the first.—To which it may be added, that from the particular instructions Paul, in his first epistle, gives Timothy about ordination, it seems as if the church of Ephesus, and those in the neighbourhood, had few or no bishops at the time it was written; from whence it appears extremely probable, that the meeting between Paul and the elders or bishops, of Ephesus at Miletus, must have been after the writing of this epistle. Mr. Drury, on the other hand, hath pleaded, that when Paul addressed the elders at Miletus, he speaks of these things as future, (Acts xx. 29 :) which, when he wrote his first epistle to Timothy, were actually accomplished; such as the trouble they met with from Judaizing teachers, &c. which are the persons he supposes we are to understand by grievous or ravening wolves, in the forecited passage of the Acts: and therefore the epistle must be written after that interview. But to this it is replied, that the ravening wolves, of which the apostle there speaks, were heathen persecutors, and not such seducers as should arise among themselves.—Some have further objected, that even in his epistle to the Ephesians, the apostle does not speak of those evils as having risen to such a height in the church, as he does in his first epistle to Timothy, though the epistle to the Ephesians was undoubtedly written after the interview at Miletus: therefore the first epistle to Timothy must be written some length of time after that interview. To this it may be justly replied, that, without supposing the apostle to intimate in his first epistle, that the evils referred to had actually prevailed so far, it is certain, from that part of Luke's history which precedes Acts xx. that there was such a bigotted zeal for the Mosaic law, among some professing Christians, as would justify the caution given to Timothy; especially, considering that a great many Jews were always resident in Ephesus. And though in the epistle to the Ephesians, Paul says nothing of Judaizing teachers (nor of the wolves and perverse men who should arise, against whom it is certain, he had before the date of it cautioned the elders at Miletus,) yet many of the advices he gives in that epistle, as well as in this to Timothy, would be of great use in preserving Christians from such dangers. But,

(3) The argument on which the principal stress hath been laid, in order to prove the date of this epistle to be about the year 58, is taken from the solemn prophetic declaration which Paul made when he took his leave of the elders of Ephesus at Miletus, that they would never see his face any more, (Acts xx. 25 ;) from whence it is inferred, that he must have written his epistle to Timothy before that interview; since in that he not only expresses a full expectation of returning, but speaks of his having just left Ephesus when he set out upon his journey for Macedonia.—The chief objection objection to this seems to arise from 2 Tim. iv. 20, where St. Paul acquaints Timothy, that he had left Trophimus sick at Miletum, plainly intimating that he had lately been visiting those parts; which admitting that epistle to have been written but a short time before his death, will indeed prove that he took another journey into Asia after his first imprisonment: but we cannot certainly infer from thence that he must have been at Ephesus. Dr. Whitby and other critics have observed, that the Miletum here mentioned was in Crete, and consequently, not the same with Miletus near Ephesus, where the apostle had that interview with the elders so often referred to. If it should appear to any most probable on the whole, that St. Paul did take such a journey after his first imprisonment, and make a visit to Ephesus; in order to reconcile it with Acts xx. 25, he must make this supposition, that most of the ministers or elders of Ephesus, and of the neighbouring parts were, by that time, either dead or removed.—From this detail of the arguments in favour of both these hypotheses, the reader may determine for himself which bids the fairest for truth. See Family Expositor, vol. III. sect. 45, notes^b, ^c. Compare sect. 43, note^c, and sect. 46, note^r.

Upon examining the contents of this epistle, it appears, that it was principally intended to direct Timothy in managing the affairs of the church while he abode at Ephesus; and particularly to instruct him in choosing proper persons to be set apart for the ministry and other offices in the church, as well as in the exercise of a regular discipline. Another part of the apostle's design was to caution this young evangelist against the influence of those Judaizing teachers, who by their subtle distinctions and endless controversies, had corrupted the purity and simplicity of the gospel; to press upon him a constant regard, in all his preaching, to the interests of practical religion, and to animate him to the greatest diligence, fidelity, and zeal, in the discharge of his office.

In pursuance of this design, the apostle, after having saluted his beloved pupil with his usual affection, and reminded him of the reasons for which he left him behind at Ephesus, takes occasion, from the idle speculations and Jewish controversies that had been unhappily introduced into the church, to assert the practical nature and tendency of the Christian doctrine, and from thence to remonstrate against the absurdity of opposing the gospel, out of a pretended zeal for the law; when in reality the great end of the law was much more effectually answered by the gospel, as it not only restrained men from the more open and notorious acts of vice, against which the law was more immediately levelled, but was calculated to raise its votaries to the most sublime heights of virtue, chap. i. 1—11. The apostle, having mentioned the gospel, cannot forbear digressing, in the fulness of his heart, to express the affectionate sense he had of the Divine goodness in calling him, who had been a persecutor, to the Christian faith and ministerial office, and observes that this favour was extended to him, though so unworthy, as an encouragement to those that should believe believe in every future age, ver. 12—17. He then goes on to recommend to Timothy a conscientious care in discharging the duties of that sacred office he had committed to him, and reminds him of the fatal miscarriage of some who had apostatized from the faith. In pursuance of this general exhortation, he directs that prayer should be offered up for all men, and especially for princes and magistrates; as it was the great design of Christianity to promote the peace and welfare of communities, and the happiness of the whole human race. And as the prudent behaviour of all the members of the society was of great importance to the credit of religion, he advises the women to maintain the strictest decency in their dress, as well as modesty and reserve in their whole deportment, walking as persons professing godliness; and forbids their teaching in public assemblies, as inconsistent with that due subjection to the other sex which he enforces from the scripture-account of the fall, ver. 18, to the end, and chap. ii. throughout.—As one very important part of Timothy's office was to ordain ministers and officers in the church, the apostle proceeds to instruct him in the qualifications necessary both for bishops and deacons. A bishop, or pastor, he describes as a person of a blameless and exemplary character, distinguished for his temperance, moderation, and charity, the husband of one wife, prudent in the management of his own family, not lately converted to the Christian faith, but well furnished with knowledge, and in good repute with his heathen neighbours. His directions for the choice of deacons are nearly the same, which he concludes with representing the advantages that would attend the faithful discharge of that office; chap. iii. 1—13. And, that Timothy might be the more concerned to follow his instructions, he speaks in very high terms of the importance of the charge committed to him, and the sublime and excellent nature of the Christian dispensation. Yet he assures him the Spirit had expressly foretold, that apostates should arise in the church, who would corrupt the purity and simplicity of the gospel, requiring abstinence from marriage, and from various kinds of meats, which God had left indifferent, and teaching other doctrines equally false and pernicious, ver. 14, to the end, and chap. iv. 1—5. As many of the precepts he had given him were of universal concern, he exhorts him to inculcate them upon the society committed to his care, leaving those idle tales, of which the Jewish rabbies were so fond, and confining his discourses to the great truths of practical religion: these, he observes, were the foundation of all their hopes as Christians, and the advancement of these was the great end of all his labours and sufferings. And to render his ministry among them successful, he recommends it to him, to maintain such a purity and sanctity of manners as might not only secure him from that contempt to which his youth would otherwise expose him, but render him a worthy example to the flock. With the same view, he exhorts him to use the utmost diligence in exercising and improving the gifts with which God had honoured him, for the edification of the church and the salvation of souls, ver. 6, to the end.—The apostle then proceeds to lay down some directions for Timothy's conduct towards persons in different circumstances of life, advising him to suit his manner of address to their respective ages and standing in the church. This leads him to give some rules in relation to those widows who were entrusted by the society with some peculiar office, and maintained in the discharge of it out of the public stock. None were to be admitted into this number, but those who, being advanced in life were destitute of any other support, and had maintained an exemplary character for piety, charity, and every good work; for he observes the many irregularities into which persons in younger life were often betrayed, was a sufficient reason for excluding them from such a trust; chap. v. 1—16. St. Paul further directs that a peculiar honour should be paid to faithful ministers, and no accusation received against them, but on the credit of two or three witnesses. And, as a due care in the exercise of Christian discipline was of so much importance to the credit of religion, he gives him a most solemn charge to observe the strictest impartiality in the execution of this difficult part of his office. On the same principles, he admonishes him not to engage too hastily in setting apart any to the ministry, lest he should make himself partaker of their guilt; and, from the variety of men's characters, intimates the necessity of prudence and caution in his manner of treating them. To all which he adds some advices relating to the behaviour of servants towards their masters, whether they were heathens or Christians, ver. 17, to the end, and chap. vi. 1, 2.—The apostle having finished his instructions to Timothy in relation to the pastoral office, exhorts him to avoid those false teachers, who instead of insisting upon the great truths of practical religion, amused their hearers with trifling controversies, which only served to raise a spirit of envy and contention in the church, while at the same time, under a pretended zeal for the truth, they were really carrying on their own mercenary views. This leads him to caution Timothy against all approaches towards a covetous temper, which he represents as the root of all evil, and to press upon him a constant and growing regard to vital practical godliness, as of the utmost consequence to his own and his people's happiness; chap. vi. 3—12. To give yet greater force to his admonitions, the apostle concludes with a most solemn charge to Timothy, as in the presence of God and Christ, to maintain the purity of the Christian faith as he had received it from him, that it might be preserved uncorrupt till the glorious appearance of Christ at the great day.—After which, he inserts, by way of Postscript, an exhortation to the rich, not to be puffed up with their wealth, but to employ it in acts of charity and beneficence, that they might secure to themselves eternal life: and closes all with renewing his earnest request to Timothy, to keep that gospel he had entrusted with him, and carefully to avoid those empty speculations and vain sophistries by which some had been ensnared, ver. 13, to the end of the epistle.

PARAPHRASE AND NOTES

ON

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

TIMOTHY.

SECTION I.

The Apostle Paul, after having saluted Timothy with much affection, and mentioned the reasons of his leaving him at Ephesus, remonstrates against the absurdity of opposing the gospel, out of pretended zeal for the law of God. 1 Tim. I. 1—11.

1 TIM. I. 1.

PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the commandment of God our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ, which is our hope;

2 Unto Timothy, my own son in the faith:

1 TIMOTHY I. 1.

I PAUL, an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ according to the gracious appointment and command of God our Saviour, and of the Lord Jesus Christ, [who is] the foundation of all our hope of true happiness in this world and the next, send ² this epistle to Timothy, [my genuine son^a in the faith], in whom I see those unfeigned graces of true piety, which God hath wrought in his heart by my means, and which I have myself by his grace experienced in my own. May grace, mercy,

SECT.
i.Col.
1 Tim.

^a My genuine Son.] It is not certain from the history, that Timothy was at first converted by Paul: compare Acts xvi, 1, 2. It seems therefore that he calls him his son, chiefly to express the parental affection he had for him, and the complacency he found in that assistance he had received from him in the work of the ministry, and in the filial reverence and affection which this excellent young minister expressed to him; nor can we doubt but Timothy had received much confirmation in Christianity from the apostle.

Jewish

SECT.
i.1 Tim.
1. 2.

mercy, [and] peace ever be upon thee, from God our almighty and ever gracious Father, and from Christ Jesus our Lord, through whom he communicates these blessings to sinful men.

- 3 As I entreated thee to continue at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia (Acts xx. 1). that thou mightest charge some who seemed inclinable to introduce their own corrupt notions into the church, that they should not teach other doctrine, contrary to the certain truth I had delivered to them, [so] I hope thou wilt still be mindful of the exhortations I gave thee, and 4 [act] strenuously upon them. In pursuance of these views, I depend upon it, that thou wilt caution [and admonish them] not to regard Jewish fables^b, and endless genealogies, which, intricate as the investigation of them is. the Judaizing teachers are so fond to trace, as thinking so many privileges to depend upon them, which indeed afford matter of troublesome and angry debates, rather than godly edification in the faith of Christ, or in any of the duties of an 5 holy life. But let it always be remembered and considered, that the great end of the gospel-declaration is to promote in the mind a temper directly opposite to this, even a principle of love, and all the genuine expressions of it that can proceed from a pure heart and a good conscience, supported and animated by an undissembled faith in the great doctrines it reveals. But 6 these are noble and generous things, from which, some having greatly wandered, have turned aside to vain and empty discourse and harangue, which could have no tendency to edification, but only express their own pride and folly, and 7 feed that of others. Desiring to be teachers of the law, and assuming as magisterial airs as any of its professed doctors can do^c, and yet in the mean peace, from God our Father, and Jesus Christ our Lord.

3 As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine,

4 Neither give heed to fables, and endless genealogies; which minister questions, rather than godly edifying, which is in faith: so do.

5 Now the end of the commandment is charity, out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned.

6 From which some having swerved, have turned aside unto vain jangling;

7 Desiring to be teachers of the law, understanding neither what

^b Jewish fables.] To what a monstrous degree these fables are brought by the rabbies, few are entirely ignorant, though few are so unhappy as fully to know. It is probable, this wild romantic humour might in some measure prevail as early as the apostle's days, and may be referred to here. By the genealogies afterwards mentioned, I do not, with some commentators, understand the aeons of the gnostics, but tables of lineal descent, by which the Jews endeavoured to prove their right as priests and Levites, or their alliance to the house of David, all which were apparently vain, in the circumstances in which the Jews then were, and in those to which every Christian knew they must quickly be reduced.

^c Teachers of the law.] The word is here νομιολογισται, which we render in the evangelists, doctors of the law; and though it is not used exactly in that sense here, yet there seems to be some reference to it. This is urged as an argument, that the false teachers here referred to could not be the gnostics, who declared an aversion to the law; not to insist on the agreement of Irenæus, Clement, and Jerom, in plac-

SECT.
I.
1 Tim.
I. 7.

what they say, nor whereof they affirm.

mean time, neither understanding what they say nor concerning what they so confidently affirm, while they vent these precarious fancies of their own, as if they were indubitable and self-evident truths, the first principles of all science, human or divine.

8 But we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully ;

But while I say this, I am very far from having the least design to reflect upon the law of Moses, or upon the precepts of God's natural law: for we well know that the law [is] good and excellent, reasonable in its constitution, and most profitable in its tendency, if a man use it lawfully ; and according to its original intention. As knowing this, that the law, established,

9 Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for man-slayers, as we know that in question to be, with penal sanction, is not made in a direct and immediate reference to a righteous man, who will indeed be a law to himself; but in order to restrain the irregularities and enormities of the lawless and ungodly, and to preserve society from their assaults. Of these it speaks, to these it directs its menacing voice, even to the impious and [profligate] sinners, to the unholy and profane, who disregard the rights both of God and man, to murderers of fathers and of mothers, or other assassins. To fornicators and Sodomites, to those who steal men, that they may sell them for slaves,

10 For whoremongers, for them that defile

ing Valentinus, Carproccates, and Basilides the founders of that sect, much lower

d If a man use it lawfully] This plainly intimates, that there were some who abused the law, borrowing a pretence from it to condemn some of the best of men, and to subvert the gospel. And whereas some had represented Paul as an enemy to the law, he here denies and disproves the charge. The design of the Mosaic law was to direct the conduct of those to whom it was given, and to humble them under a sense of their sin, but it could not be intended to save them by a perfect conformity to it, which was τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, what the law could not do. Rom. viii. 3.

e A law is not made in reference to a righteous man.] Δικαιοῦ νόμος; ἢ κήται Some would render it, does not lie against a righteous man; but I do not find that this interpretation of the word κήται in this connection, can be justified by sufficient authority, nor would it be very easy to clear up the apostle's argument on that interpretation. The thought seems evidently to be this, That a law (for there is no article to determine or confine it to the Jewish) is chiefly intended to restrain men from actions injurious to the public. What it says therefore chiefly relates to crimes and their punishments; but the genius of Christianity is so sublime, and the character of Christians in the general (at that time) so good, that there is no need of insisting on legal sentences denounced against such enormities, in order to keep them in the course of their duty. I can hardly think with Diodate and L'Enfant, that by the mention of these crimes he intimates, that their Jewish teachers were such wretches as those here spoken of, as if he had said, one of the chief uses of the law is to condemn such as themselves. Such monsters could never have maintained a party in religion, but he might choose these instances, as precepts of the law in particular lay against each of them, and as the discourses of these teachers might be a sort of common place, almost entirely levelled against the worst of crimes, and so less suited to the edification of believers. To inculcate it so much upon them, and especially to pretend to condemn them out of it, was therefore an irregular and improper use of the law.

SECT.

i.

1 Tim.

I. 10.

slaves. It addresses to liars and perjured persons, and in a word, it is intended to guard against whatever is contrary to wholesome doctrine and good morality, that it may restrain and controul the authors of mischief, and mark them out as the objects of universal abhorrence and just punishment. And these things are condemned by every Divine revelation, and by that which we teach in the strongest terms, according to the known tenor of the glorious gospel of the blessed God, with which I was intrusted. This guards against the smallest deviation from the strictest rule of rectitude, and the secret abominations of the heart, as well as the grosser scandals of the life: so that for any out of pretended zeal for such a law to oppose the gospel, must certainly argue the greatest ignorance, or the greatest malice and hypocrisy, that can be conceived.

file themselves with mankind, for men-stealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine, 11 According to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. CHRIST is indeed our hope, or we have nothing which can 1 deserve to be called hope. For in us he is the hope of glory. On him therefore let us build, to him let us with the most joyful con-4, 6 sent commit our souls, and dismissing all vain questionings and endless unprofitable controversies, ever attend to godly edifying, 5 and bear in our memories and in our hearts, the great end of the commandment. And may the great God of love, work that love in our hearts which is so justly represented in that view; love proceeding from a good conscience, and from faith unfeigned.
 8 We rejoice in the gospel, and let us reverence the law, and endeavour to use it lawfully and properly. Let it regulate our lives;
 let it awaken our consciences, and lead us to look for a better righteousness than this alone can afford. Blessed be God, that it 9, 10 is providentially made the means of restraining many who act on motives merely legal, from much wickedness, which they might otherwise commit. But let the glorious gospel of the blessed God intrusted to the apostle, be the great foundation on which our souls 11 build. It is glorious indeed: may the great Author of it ever be blessed, and the great end of it answered in our hearts, not only in preserving us free from those gross enormities of which the apostle has given so black a catalogue, and against which the law was more immediately directed, but in forming us to a stricter obedience, a sublimer purity, and more exalted hope, than any other dispensa- tion which God himself has given could inspire.

SECT.

SECT. II.

The Apostle makes a digression to express, in lively terms, the affectionate sense he had of the Divine goodness, in calling him, though most undeserving that favour, to the Christian faith and ministerial office. 1 Tim. I. 12—17.

1 TIM. I. 12.

AND I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry;

¹³ Who was before a blasphemer and a persecutor, and injurious. But I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly, in unbelief:

¹⁴ And the grace of our

a Blasphemer.] He had the greater reason to acknowledge this guilt, as he had not only spoken evil of Christ himself, but encouraged and even compelled others to do so. Acts xxvi. 11.

b Did it ignorantly.] If Paul had an opportunity of knowing more than some others (compare Luke xxiii. 34), yet perhaps, being then a scholar at Gamaliel's feet, he might not have been present on the spot when any of Christ's miracles were performed, as Christ spent but little time at Jerusalem. The popular cry was so strongly against him, and the Pharisees and rulers, treated him with so much contempt, and were so full of malignity against him, and so ready to advance the most slandrous reports to the prejudice of

1 TIMOTHY I. 12.

I HAVE just been mentioning the glorious gospel of the blessed God as committed to my trust, and as I always recollect that favour with pleasure, so I would now, in a particular manner, return my thanks to Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath strengthened me for the arduous duties of such a calling, that he accounted me faithful, and reposed so great a confidence in me, putting me into the sacred office of the ministry? Who was before a most impious blasphemer^a ¹³ of his holy name, and a cruel persecutor of his people, and an injurious oppressor of them in contempt of all rights, human and divine. But I obtained that mercy, which probably would never otherwise have been extended to me, because though I acted in a very rash, savage, and criminal manner, yet I did not therein contradict the sentiments of my conscience, but did [it] ignorantly^b in unbelief; whereas if I had knowingly opposed what I apprehended to be truth, out of regard to secular interest, I should doubtless have been left to perish under a judicial blindness of mind and hardness of heart. But ¹⁴ the grace of our blessed Lord superabounded towards his character, that it is the less to be wondered at, that this rash hot youth was borne down by the torrent. Yet we see how far Paul was from thinking all this, and whatever could be added to it, a sufficient excuse. Instead of insinuating with some, that the miracle wrought for his conversion to Christianity was a reward for his extraordinary integrity and virtue, while a Jewish zealot, he speaks of himself as one of the greatest sinners upon earth; and thereby shews, by the way, how much guilt a man may contract without acting directly contrary to the convictions of his mind, if he has neglected an impartial care in forming his principles of action.

SECT.
II.1 Tim.
I. 12.

SECT.
ii. wards me, being attended with the exercise of 1 Tim. faith and love which is in Christ Jesus, and which I. 14. by the influence of his Spirit and grace was implanted in my heart, thereby giving life and joy to my profession.

15 I cannot therefore but mention this, as what [is] a most faithful infallible saying, and worthy of all acceptance, of being universally received and admitted by every one who hears it, and of being welcomed to the heart, as well as gaining the assent of the understanding, that Christ Je- sus, the eternal Son of God, though originally possessed of Divine glory with the Father, came with infinite condescension into the world in which we dwell, that he might save from final condemnation and ruin miserable sinners; of whom it becomes me ever with all humility to confess that I am chief. For surely there never was, nor ever will be, a display of richer and more sovereign grace than that which recover-

16 ed and transformed me. But it was in a great measure for this cause that I obtained the mercy of which I was so unworthy, that in me, as the chief of sinners, Jesus Christ might display, and as it were, exhibit, to the view of the whole world an example of all long suffering, as a pat- tern for the encouragement of those who should afterwards believe on him, even to the remotest ages of time, in order to the obtaining eternal

17 life. And now, when I consider it in this view, I cannot forbear bursting out into a song of praise, and saying, to the supreme King of universal nature, who reigns through all the unknown extent of boundless ages, and unmeasurable space, who is possessed of eternal glory and im- mortal life, though invisible to mortal eyes; even to the only wise, living and true God, [be] ho- nour and glory for ever and ever, for this and every other display of a wisdom unsearchable, and a goodness inexhaustable! Amen.

our Lord was exceeding abundant, with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

15 This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief.

16 Howbeit, for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting.

17 Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

IMPROVEMENT.

WHO can wonder, that a person of Paul's experience and piety, should thus, on the mention of the gospel, digress to indulge his reflections on that singular and astonishing interposition of Divine grace, by which he had been brought to embrace it, and honoured with the charge of it! Who can wonder, that such

such blasphemies, and such outrages as he had uttered and committed, such a zeal for persecution as he had exerted, should leave SECT.
ii.
 deep impression on his heart, and engage him, notwithstanding Ver.
 all his care in the externals of the law, and blameless as he was 13 touching all its righteousness, to call himself the first, the chief of *sinner*s, and to celebrate that as superabundant grace, which had 14 been extended to him !

Well was he, who had received it, thereby fitted to proclaim it to all the world. Let us gladly receive it from the pen of this once malignant and blasphemous persecutor, but now holy and happy apostle, as a most certain truth, and worthy of all accep- 15 ance, that Christ Jesus, the Son of God, hath, in unutterable and inconceivable compassion, come into this world of ours to save sin- ners, even the chief of them. Let us thankfully accept this abridg- ment of the whole gospel, and apply to the Saviour thus triumphant in mercy, with whatever aggravated guilt our consciences may charge us. Let us also remember, that Paul obtained mercy not on his own account alone, but that the compassions extended to him might be considered as an example of what this gracious 16
 Redeemer is ready to extend to all them who, like him, shall believe. Let us pause upon it, till our hearts glow within us in all thankful acknowledgement of his mercy, and then let our lips burst forth in praise to the king eternal, immortal, and invisible, to the only wise 17
God, who hath found out such an admirable way at once to glorify his justice and his grace in pardoning and accepting the chief of sinners in his Son. May our hearts be more and more disposed to celebrate his power, wisdom, and goodness, and to begin those songs of praise upon earth, which we hope will be our everlasting employment in heaven !

SECT. III.

The Apostle, after recommending to Timothy a conscientious care in the whole of his behaviour, gives and enforces several directions relating to prayer, and to the conduct of women professing godliness. 1 Tim. I. 18—to the end, and chap. II. throughout.

1 TIM. I. 18.

THIS charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the

1 TIMOTHY I. 18.

THIS charge which I am now going to give, SECT.
iii.
 I solemnly commit unto thee, my son Timothy, as a matter of the highest importance to thy usefulness and success in the ministerial office. 1 Tim.
I. 18.
 As indeed there is nothing which I more earnestly desire, than that thou mayest, according to former prophecies concerning thee, with which holy

SECT.
iii.1 Tim.
I. 18.

holy men of God, who knew thee in younger life, were inspired (being animated by a cheerful and believing remembrance of them,) maintain with holy alacrity and resolution a good warfare, even that noble and glorious struggle in which thou art engaged, under thy Christian, and especially thy ministerial character, against those enemies that oppose the gospel, and the salvation of men. Go on therefore resolutely, retaining the great principles of the Christian faith^a, and with it the exercise of a good conscience: which last some having thrust away, and obstinately opposed its just dictates and remonstrances, concerning faith have made shipwreck upon the rocks of surrounding temptations, and so have lost all that precious treasure, by which, had it been wisely guarded and improved, they might have been for ever rich and happy. Of which [number], among others, is Hymenæus and Alexander^b, with whom thou Timothy art not unacquainted, and who once professed a great regard to the gospel; but they are now turned apostates, and have behaved in so outrageous a manner, that I have, according to that extraordinary apostolic power with which God hath invested me for such purposes, solemnly delivered them both over unto Satan, that they may learn by what they now suffer in their afflicted and diseased bodies, not to blaspheme the truths of Christ, or to revile his faithful servants, in such profane and wicked language as they have sometimes used when speaking of them.

II. 1. But I will proceed in the charge which I proposed to address to thee, that, by a diligent and vigorous performance of thy duty, thou mayest be secure from falling into that miserable state in which thou seest others who once seemed to set out well. I exhort thee therefore, first, as it is the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare;

19 Holding faith, and a good conscience; which some having put away, concerning faith have made shipwreck:

20 Of whom is Hymenæus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme.

II. 1. I exhort therefore, a Faith.] As it is here distinguished from a good conscience, it is plain that faith here signifies, an assent to the truth of Christianity, and consequently all arguments drawn from hence, against the doctrine of the perseverance of the saints, must be very inconclusive.

b Hymenæus and Alexander.] Probably this Alexander is the person mentioned Acts xix. 33, who might become worse and worse after Paul's departure from Ephesus, emboldened by his absence: so that the apostle might now be determined to deliver him up to Satan, to inflict upon him certain pains and evils, which might possibly reclaim him. Compare 2 Tim. iv. 14, and note there. Mr. Reynolds justly and finely observes (Lectur to a Deist, p. 256,) that when the apostles mention the names of apostates, and censure them with such freedom and severity, it affords a plain argument that they knew themselves to be entirely out of their power: for if they had been conscious of any thing to be feared from their discovery, they would have endeavoured to manage them more artfully, that they might not provoke them to the uttermost.

c Supplication

fore, that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men.

² For kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.

³ For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour.

⁴ Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.

⁵ For there is one God, is a duty of great importance in itself and highly subservient to thy success in every other branch of this office, that earnest supplications, repeated prayers, affectionate intercessions, [and] cheerful thanksgivings, be made by thee, and those whose devotions may in any degree fall under thy direction, for all men, for the whole human race, whether Jew or Gentile, Christian or Pagan, friends or enemies: And particularly ² for kings, and all who are in any exalted stations of life; that their hearts may be so influenced, as at least to tolerate the gospel, that we who are by the principles of our religion taught to abhor every thing which would be injurious to them, may not be injured by them, but may be permitted to pass a peaceful and quiet life, while we are desirous to conduct ourselves, not only without offence, but in a useful and exemplary manner, in all piety and gravity, attentive to the several duties which we owe both to God and our fellow-creatures. For this [is] good and ³ acceptable in the sight of our Saviour God, who is the great Guardian of the rights of society, and never meant to encourage his ministers or people to violate or disturb it out of any pretences of a religious nature: Who indeed wills ⁴ that all men should be saved, and come to the acknowledgment of the truth of his gospel, which they will be most likely to do, if they see the professors of it behaving in the manner I now recommend, and avoiding all occasions either of public or private offence. Let us therefore ⁵ accustom ourselves to take proper views both of God and of mankind, for it is the grand fundamental

1 Tim. 1 1

^c Supplications be made.] That any man should ever have understood this phrase as a charge given to Timothy to compose a liturgy for the use of the clergy and people of Ephesus, appeared very surprising to me, when I saw it quoted from one Erasmus Warren, by Mr. Pierce: (Ibid. p. 411): but that the great and good Bishop Bull should have given so unnatural a turn to the phrase, as I find he has done in his Posthumous Sermons, Vol. II. No. 13, p. 543, &c. was such an instance of weak attachment to party prejudices, as is almost ready to make me weep.

^d Will have all men to be saved.] It is far from being my design, in any of these notes, to enter deep into controversy, but I must confess I have never been satisfied with that interpretation which explains all men here merely as signifying some of all sorts and ranks of men; since I fear it might also be said, on the principles of those who are fondest of this gloss, that he also wills all men to be condemned. On the other hand, if many are not saved, it is certain the words must be taken with some limitation, which the following clause, he wills their coming to the knowledge of the truth, must also prove. The meaning therefore seems to be, that God has made sufficient provision for the salvation of all, and that it is to be considered as the general declaration of his will, that all who know the truth themselves, should publish it to all around them, so far as their influence can extend.

^e The

sect.
iii.

1 Tim.
II. 5.

mental principle of our religion, that [there is] one God, the Creator of all, the gracious Father of all his creatures, who is no respecter of persons, and one Mediator between God and men, even the man Christ Jesus^e, who hath not undertaken to plead for this or that nation or party of men alone, but whose kind office in the court of heaven, where he now dwells, extends in some degree to the whole human race, and who refuses not the blessings he has procured to that with sincerity and humility cast themselves 6 upon him. Let us make his extensive grace familiar to our mind, and live and act as those who remember our relation to that Saviour, who gave himself a ransom for all, so that no nation, no rank, no condition of men are excluded from the benefit of his death; to be attested in due time to the most distant regions of the world, that they may be called to put in their claim for that pardon and salvation which he hath purchased by his blood for all those who should believe in him.

7 This is the declaration of that glorious gospel, of which I was appointed an herald, to proclaim the grace of it all abroad, and was sent forth as an apostle, to attest that great and essential doctrine of it, the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. (I speak the truth in Christ^f, as thou Timothy well knowest. I lie not in pretending to such an extraordinary mission), and I was not only in general ordained to this ministry, but by peculiar destination was appointed to be a teacher of the Gentiles in this holy faith, and in the whole system of truth which it comprehends.

8 I therefore give it in charge to them, and to thee, with that authority which it becomes one who is so expressly called to this high office; and I will in particular, that, as prayer is so important a duty, men pray in every place, that over all the world, and not only in the temple, or synagogues

God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus ^g

6 Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time.

7 Whereunto I am ordained a preacher, and an apostle, (I speak the truth in Christ, and lie not,) a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity.

8 I will therefore that men pray everywhere,

^e The man Christ Jesus.] Though the union of the Divine nature with the human, qualified Christ for the office of Mediator, yet I think this plainly shews, that it is in his human nature we are to consider him as discharging it.

^f I speak the truth in Christ, &c.] Paul uses such solemnity in asserting this doctrine, as the Jews were so much averse to it, and were ready to charge his preaching the gospel among the Gentiles, either upon the want of a due regard to his own nation, or some view of avarice or ambition; looking on the Gentiles as most detestable creatures, and probably growing more inveterate against them, in proportion to the degree in which they were compelled to permit them to dwell in their own holy land, and often to associate themselves with them.

where, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting:

goggles of the Jews, it be performed; in public assemblies, in families, and in secret retirements. And let them not only be taught in the general to perform it, but instructed as to the particular manner of doing it, that they may still be holding up holy hands^g, undefiled with any pollution and cruelty, sensuality, or unrighteous gain. Let it also be performed without wrath, with the most placid and composed mind, and most mild and benevolent affection, and without doubting^h too, with a lively faith in the power and wisdom, the goodness and faithfulness of God, and a cheerful dependence on all those gracious promises by which he encourages our addresses.

sacr
iii.

1 Tim.
11. 8

9 In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair or gold, or pearls, or costly array;

10 But (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works.

*In like manner*ⁱ [I would charge] the women also, who are to be considered as comprehended in the former precepts, that they be particularly careful to adorn themselves^k only with decent apparel, with modesty and sobriety, neither exceeding in the article of unnecessary and inconvenient expence, nor in the least degree intrenching on the strictest decorum. I have many reasons, both relating to themselves and others, to wish that they may not place their ornament so much in plaited hair, or gold, or pearls, or rich and costly garments; But in what is itself infinitely more valuable, and much better becomes women professing godliness, and the gospel of Christ as the great rule of it, in good works: which will render them amiable in the eyes of God himself, and of all wise and virtuous persons with whom they converse. They

g [Lifting up holy hands.] The expression of holy hands may allude to the custom of washing their hands before solemn prayer, which has prevailed not only among the Jews, but among heathens and Mahometans, that they might hereby express their desire of toward purity. And the caution against wrath might be more suitable, as the many injuries which the Christians received from their persecutors might tempt them to some imprecations against them, not agreeable to the gentle and benign genius of their religion. And would to God this might always be considered, that they who are to lead the devout of others in free prayer, may not mingle their own angry and irregular passions with their addresses; than which I assuredly believe, scarce any thing can be more displeasing to God, more reproachful to Christian assemblies, or more seardalously offensive to persons of a right temper and disposition.

h [Without doubting.] Some would render χωρίς ἐπιλογισμῶν, without debating, or disputing; but I think the more common interpretation preferable, as it suggests another very important thought, that is, the necessity of faith in prayer, according to the account given of it in the phrase.

i [In like manner.] Some explain this, as referring to what was to be attended to in their assemblies; but I think it evident that it refers to the charge the apostle had given to Timothy with such solemnity, in the beginning of the preceding sentence.

k [Adorn themselves, &c.] Estius very justly observes, that this discourse concludes with yet stronger force against foppety in men.

1 Adam

SECT.
iii.

1 Tim.
II. 11.

They will no doubt be diligent in frequenting the public worship of God in your assemblies. And let the woman there learn in silence, with all becoming submission to those who associate, and with the regard due to such a congregation. But I permit not a woman to teach publicly, nor to usurp authority over a man, which she might seem to do, by officiating under the character of a preacher. But, on the contrary, I charge her to be in silence at such a time. And indeed this is agreeable to what was intimated at the beginning of the world, and which passed in the earliest scenes of it. For Adam was formed

13 the first^l of the human species, from the dust of the earth, being under God, its acknowledged lord and proprietor, and then no suitable companion being found for him, among all the creatures which came to pay him their homage, Eve was produced, from a rib taken out of his side, and presented as one whom God intended for a partner and helper to him. Gen. ii. 18—22.

14 And it is farther to be recollected, that at the fatal entrance of sin into the world, Adam was not immediately deceived^m by the fraud of the serpent, but that artful seducer chose to begin his attack on the woman, who being deceived by him, was first in the transgression, and prevailed upon Adam by her solicitations to offend. Now it should be an humbling consideration to all her daughters, that their sex was so greatly interested in the introduction of guilt and misery, and make them less forward in attempting to be guides

11 Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection.

12 But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.

13 For Adam was first formed, then Eve.

14 And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression.

[Adam was formed the first.] It is plain the apostle does not mean to put the whole of his argument upon the priority of the man's creation, in point of time, for on that principle the birds and beasts would have the pre-eminence even to Adam. But he refers only to the human species, and to the regard which God expresses for the ease and comfort of man, by making the woman to be his companion and assistant. So that it is the same thought in fewer words, which is expressed more largely, 1 Cor. xi. 8, 9. The man was not created for the woman, but the woman for the man, and this I have endeavoured to express in the paraphrase.

[Adam was not immediately deceived.] Diodate observes here, that the sacred history does not say that the man was deceived at all, thereby perhaps intimating his apprehension, as Milton long afterward represented it, that Adam, out of an excessive tenderness for his wife, offended against his better knowledge, at her persuasion, without expecting such effects from the forbidden fruit as she did. But certainly this is making the matter much worse on the man's side than on the woman's. I rather think the apostle hereby intimates, that the tempter chose to make his first attack on the woman, as in her original and most glorious state the inferior, and consequently less fit in future life to take the lead in important affairs. As it seems in the general reasonable to suppose, that much the same proportion of understanding may be observed in the respective sexes, and though there may be some excepted cases, yet that they are not so many as to affect the main force of the argument.

n Child-birth.]

15 Notwithstanding, she shall be saved in child-bearing, if they continue in faith and charity, and holiness with sobriety.

guides to others, after such a miscarriage. Yet let them not be despised or upbraided on this account, considering on the other side, that she was also happily instrumental in producing the great promised Seed, (Gen. iii. 15,) who was derived from a woman without any human father; and so they shall be saved, as I may say, by child birth^u: if there be a suitable readiness, not only to profess, but to obey the gospel; and if they continue constant in the exercise of faith, and love, and holiness, with that sobriety of temper and conduct which I have now been recommending, and which both religion and prudence concur to recommend to all, and to that sex in particular.

st. cr.
iii.
1 Tim.
II. 15.

IMPROVEMENT.

MAY every Christian learn by these apostolical dictates to retain faith and a good conscience, and be very solicitous that no exactness in the former be thought sufficient to compensate for a defect in the latter. Soon will that faith itself suffer shipwreck, where a good conscience sits not at the helm; or rather soon will it serve only as a talent of gold, to a man sinking in the sea, to plunge him so much the deeper. It will be a part of the character of one who desires to preserve a good conscience, to maintain a benevolence of heart towards the whole human race, and to breathe out that benevolence in prayer which at the same time expresses and increases it. And while all men have a share in it, kings and princes, in whose behaviour and temper the happiness of so many thousands are concerned, have a peculiar claim to

Chap.
i. 19.

Chap.
ii. 1.

[in Child-birth.] I have taken what on attentive deliberation seemed the most probable sense of this much controverted and very obscure scripture; and it is that in which the learned and judicious Dr. William Harris acquiesces. (Harr. on Mess. p. 54.) Mr. Locke (on Rom. vii. 5.) understands it, of being carried safely through child-bearing, as the like expression, συντηρηθῆναι ἐν τῷ τοκεῖ, seems to signify, 1 Cor. iii. 15, (see the note there,) which sense Dr. Whitty endeavours to illustrate at large: not indeed as an absolute promise, which fact shews it is not; but as a general intimation, that pious women might cheerfully commit themselves to God, in the hour of nature's distress, if they trusted in God, maintaining charity, withal, persevering in chastity, and strictly adhering to the laws of temperance in every other respect. Mr. Pyle, from 1 Tim. iv. 3, v. 10—Concludes, that the apostle refers to some of those false teachers that condemned marriages as unlawful, or at least comparatively unclean. But I can by no means acquiesce in either of these senses; nor suppose, as some others have done, that παιδείαν signifies the education of children: though I am very sensible, a due care in that respect is one of the most important duties and services which can be imagined to concur within the verge of female life.

SECT.
iii.

to our devout remembrance. Above all, let us pray for our own, that they may continue, as blessed be God his present majesty, hath long been *, and we have reason to hope his successors will be, the ministers of God for good. May our life, under such a government, be in one sense as well as another quiet and peaceable, and may it be conducted in all godliness and honesty. Thus shall

4 we do our part to subserve that gracious will of God, to effect which he hath done all that it was proper for him to do, that all men may be saved, as our walking in the truth may bring many to the knowledge of it. May that knowledge prevail more and more

5 in the world, that the one God may be universally adored, through the one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus, in whom Deity dwells, and whom, with the Father and the Holy Spirit, we worship, as exalted above all adoration and praise.

7 This only begotten Son of God became a man, that he might give himself a ransom for us, a ransom for all who should believe in him. Blessed be God, that we have received this important testimony, received it from Paul the apostle, received it from that faithful herald of such astonishing grace, who was divinely appointed to be a teacher of the Gentiles, and who to this day is teaching us by his writings, and in every section of them giving us lessons of infinite importance.

8 May we learn, from what he teaches us here, not only the object to whom our prayers are to be directed, and the persons from whom they are to be offered, but likewise the temper from which they are to proceed. May our hands be holy, and our hearts overflowing with love, and firmly established in faith unfeigned, resting on the promises we lead, and rejoicing in an assured hope, that the eternal JEHOVAH, who so long since styled himself the hearer of prayer, (Psal. lxx. 2,) will not now say to any humble and upright souls, Seek ye me in vain. In all our conduct, let us remember we are in his presence, and let a concern to please him, and to adorn

9 our profession, run through every action of our lives. Let it direct our expences and our dress. Let it engage us to maintain a constant decorum in every circumstance, sacred or civil; to be in a due

15 subjection to our superiors, and to continue in faith and love, in holiness and sobriety.

13 Let the sex, to whom the concluding instructions of this section are peculiarly addressed, while they are humbled in the remembrance of that original effence, in which Eve, our first mother so unhappily

* The author had the happiness to write this in the twenty-fourth year of King George II. that father of his people, by whom we enjoy great quietness, and by whose providence very worthy deeds are done unto this nation, which we should accept always, and in all places, with all thankfulness.

unhappily led the way, rejoice in the great victory of the seed of the woman over the serpent. And let the other sex, on which this was bestowed as a gift of so great value, that God judged it necessary to complete the felicity of paradise in its untainted bloom, never manifest the odious effects of the fall, by ungenerously upbraiding the daughters for the mothers' fault, at the distance of so many generations; but rather rejoice, that, as by the woman came transgression, so by her came redemption too. And let us all join in improving so invaluable a favour, and endeavouring to express our gratitude for it, by acting aright according to the several relations which we sustain in life.

SECT. IV.

The Apostle instructs Timothy in the qualifications to be attended to in those who were to be set apart to the office of a pastor, and deacon in the church. 1 Tim. III. 1—13.

1 TIM. III. 1.

THIS is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work.

I TIMOTHY III. 1.

[IT is] a faithful saying, most certain in itself, and worthy of being always acknowledged and attended to, that if any one earnestly desireth the episcopal or pastoral office, he desireth a good work. To feed the church of Christ, and to take the oversight of it, is indeed a very laborious employment; but it is also very honourable, and greatly tends to advance the glory of God, and to promote the good of mankind, if it be discharged in a proper manner. A bishop therefore, or an overseer of the flock of Christ, must be blameless in every respect, with regard to his moral character, since any thing which may be amiss in him will tend to bring a reproach upon his office, and greatly to obstruct his usefulness. It is particularly requisite that if he be a married man, he should be the husband of only one wife^a, for if he have more than

² A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good beha-

^a The husband of one wife.] Mr. Hallet and Mr. Whitson both infer from hence that second marriages are unlawful to the clergy; and the Muscovites suppose that one wife is so necessary, that no man can become a bishop till he be married, nor continue to exercise that office longer than his wife lives. Perrys's Russia, p. 230. But circumstances may be so adjusted, that there may be as much reason for a second marriage as for the first, and as little inconvenience of any kind may attend it. Upon the whole, therefore, it seems to me most reasonable to believe, that (as there is no express precept in the Bible, requiring a man who had several wives at the time of his embracing Christianity, to divorce or dismiss all but one) the Divine wisdom might judge that it was a proper medium, between encouraging polygamy, and too great a rigour in condemning it, to fix such a brand of infamy on this irregular practice.

SECT.
iv.1 Tim.
III. 2.

than one at a time, or have divorced a former without sufficient excuse, and taken another during her life, it is an irregularity by no means to be countenanced in a person from whom it is natural to expect such exemplary purity of manners. It is also necessary that he be watchful, and not one of a slothful and indolent temper, who would sleep over so high and sacred a charge; that he be prudent and steady in his behaviour, regular and decent, guarding against those little indecorums which expose men to contempt, even where there is nothing grossly vicious in their conduct. And it is particularly desirable, that he be given to hospitality^b; as Christians, who travel from one place to another, will naturally go to the minister's house, if they are strangers in the place, and expect, on account of their common profession, to be received there. He must also be a person of such natural abilities, and so instructed in the doctrines of Christianity, as that he should be fit to teach^c publicly, as well as to preside in other respects. Not one that sitteth long over wine, or any other kind of strong liquor, or that has so little government of himself, as to be ready to strike those that displease him. He must not be attached to any method of sordid and dishonourable gain^d, but must be moderate in all his desires and passions, not given to contentions, not a lover of money, so as to take a pleasure in hoarding it up, even if it be justly and properly behaviour, given to hospitality, apt to teach ;

5 Not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre ; but patient, not a brawler, not covetous ;

tice, by prohibiting any man, let his character be ever so extraordinary, to undertake the ministry, while he had more than one wife, and to discourage it in those already converted by such passages as Mat. xix. 9, and 1 Cor. vii. 2.

b Given to hospitality.] Let it be observed once for all, that as there were then in the eastern countries few houses of public entertainment, hospitality was a virtue more particularly seasonable and necessary than among us ; I mean so far as it related to accommodation of entire strangers on their travels.

c Apt to teach.] The bishop of Winchester lays some stress on our not meeting with any directions relating to ordination in this enumeration of the offices of a bishop, or presbyter ; (for so candid and judicious a writer could not but acknowledge they are here words of the same signification) But it is strange he should not have observed, that nothing is here said of administering the sacrament, which concur with many other circumstances to shew how far the apostle was from intending a full representation of all the pastoral duties. And it may be added, that the directions he afterwards gives to Timothy, on the head of ordination, may suggest instruction in this respect to all ministers. And it must be submitted to consideration, whether the omission of any charge to Presbyters, enjoining them to obey their bishop as a person of superior authority, does not weigh much more one way, than the omission pleaded above can avail the other. See Homily of Episcop. p. 390.

d Attached to sordid gain.] It is remarkable that this phrase is seldom or never used in the New Testament to express any gain, but that which is made or procured by the covetousness of Christian ministers ; and never surely does an eagerness or greediness in pursuit of money appear more dishonourable and sordid than in persons of that noble, but alas ! too often prostituted profession.

4 One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection, with all gravity;

5 (For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?)

5 Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil.

7 Moreover, he must have a good report of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach, and the snare of the devil.

properly his own. It is also evidently desirable, that he should be one who presides well over his own house, having his children, if he be a father, in subjection with all gravity, that their follies may not bring a reproach upon the family, and by consequence in some measure upon himself; For if any one cannot preside over his own house, 5 in such a manner as to preserve a due decorum in the family, where he has such a natural authority, how shall he be able to take care of the church of God, where there will be such a diversity of persons and tempers, over which it will be impossible for him to maintain an equal inspection and influence? A bishop also should 6 not be one newly converted to Christianity, lest not having had a sufficient acquaintance with its principles, nor establishment in the duties it teaches, he should be lifted up with pride, in consequence of his distinguished character, and arrogate to himself an authority and dominion which God never intended for him. [And] should this be the case, he might easily fall into the condemnation of the devil, who was intoxicated with self-conceit, and so rose up into mad rebellion against God, that he might obtain that greater exaltation to which he imagined his own excellency gave him a claim⁶. It is necessary 7 also, in order to a pastor's filling up this important office with a becoming dignity, that he have a good report of those that are without, lest he should otherwise fall into reproach, and in consequence of that he taken in the snare of the devil, who will easily know how to graft temptations

SECT.

IV.

1 Tim.
III. 4.

⁶ Who presides well over his own house, &c.] Exactly parallel to this is a wise saying of Cicero, when directing princes to take care of their families: "It is impossible that he who knows not how to govern and reform his own family, should rightly govern and reform a people." Conf. Mor. p. 58.

[Condemnation of the devil.] Many have imagined that the first instance of Satan's pride was an afflictation of equanimity with God, but others have thought that it was improbable, and have concluded it was the breach of some positive law, either relating to the manner in which God required to be worshipped, or the order and station of the angelic squadrons, or refusing some appointed ministry to some lower world, or rejecting the dominion of God's incarnate Son, who might in general be revealed as the future Head of angels as well as men. This last is the scheme which Milton prefers, and it is insisted upon at large in Rev. Quer. of the Ang. World, 2. xvi. p. 12—28. But though it is certain the crime was pride, our conjectures may never be able to determine what was the particular instance; nor is the inquiry by any means necessary.

⁷ Swear of the devil.] Some have explained the word Διαβόλος, of some human slanderer, but it seems to me much more natural to understand it in the sense it has just above, where I think it must signify, our great infernal enemy. And it is easy to see, that Satan might graft many dangerous temptations on the evil report which a man might have incurred by any scandal, before he entered on the ministry; either attempting to draw him to the rejection of former

SECT.
iii.
1 Tim.
III.

tions upon that circumstance, to draw him aside one way or another, from that strictness and correctness of behaviour which suits his distinguished station.

This may suffice concerning the principal order of ministers in the church of Christ, bishops, pastors, or elders. In like manner [let] me now say something relating to the other order. I mean that of deacons, who are more immediately appointed to serve tables, and especially to take care of the poor. (Acts vi. 2.) Concerning these I would observe, that it is of importance, that they likewise [be] grave in their deportment, that they may avoid that contempt which the excesses of levity are ready to produce. They should not by any means be double-tongued, deceitful, or inconsistent in their words, as they may chance to come into different companies; nor addicted to much wine, which will render them utterly unfit for their office; nor greedy of dishonourable gain, which may tempt them to violate their engagements to the church, and appropriate its stock lodged in their hands to private uses, rather than those charitable purposes for which it was collected. In one word, let them be persons well instructed in the doctrines of Christianity, and retaining the sublime and long concealed mystery of our holy faith, not merely as a point of speculation, but practice; and let it ever be held in a pure and undefiled conscience, and those only chosen into this office who seem conscientious men in the judgment of charity. And let even these be first proved and tried for a while, and then, if they be upon trial found to be blameless, let them use the office of a deacon.

11 In like manner, [let] the wives of the deacons, and therefore much more of the bishops, [be] grave and sober in their deportment, not according to the example of the great enemy, that malignant spirit, who has his very name from thence, false accusers of the brethren and others. Let them also be watchful for occasions of doing good former evils, from an apprehension, that he had very little reputation to lose by a new fall, or weakening his hands in efforts of usefulness, by a fear, that the remembrance of those past irregularities would render his attempts less effectual.

8 Likewise must the deacons be grave, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre.

9 Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience.

10 And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless.

11 Even so must their wives be grave,
no

Thoughts worthy the consideration of all who design themselves for the ministry, and especially to be recollected, when persons, who have been remarkably profligate, are desirous of undertaking it, or returning to it.

not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things.

12 Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well,

13 For they that have used the office of a deacon well, purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith, which is in Christ Jesus.

good, and guard against every temptation to evil, and let them be faithful in all things which are committed to their care, lest their imprudent and unfaithful conduct should bring the character of their husbands under suspicion.

Let the deacons, as well as the bishops, be the husbands of only one wife, and let them be men of prudence and resolution, governing their children and other members of their own houses well; that no irregularity at home may disgrace the society they belong to. It is necessary to be thus cautious, though their ministry be but of an inferior rank, for they who have discharged the office of a deacon well, procure to themselves, not only a fair report in the general, but very often a good degree^h of farther advancement in a higher office; and they lay a foundation for great boldness in professing the faith which is in Christ Jesus. Their acquaintance with the affairs of the church will render them more capable of defending it, than many others can. And the honourable testimony borne to their character, by advancing them to this trust, and continuing them in it, will also embolden them to plead more freely, and engage the more respectful attention.

SECT.
IV.
1 Tim.
III. 11.

IMPROVEMENT.

THE teachers of others, and those who preside in the highest offices which Christ has founded in his church, may learn from this passage their duty as well as their dignity and honour. Let them remember, the work they have desired and engaged in is a good work. Let them think and speak, not arrogantly and tyrannically, but respectfully and solemnly of their office, and let them cultivate all these excellent qualities, which may fit them to discharge it aright; sobriety and vigilance, gravity and hospitality, the strictest temperance, the most diffusive benevolence. Let them rise far above those low views which are to worldly minded ministers the occasion of so many scandalous contentions, which so often establish a separate interest, and produce a secret and mutual aversion between them and their people.

Let

^h A good degree.] As a learned education was not, in this age of extraordinary gifts, so necessary in the superior officers of the church, as it has since been; and as it is highly probable deacons might frequently officiate as occasional teachers in public assemblies: it might be matter of prudence, to choose their elders, or set out of the deacons, to which the apostle here evidently refers.

SECT.
IV.

Let the churches of Christ attend to this charge, to direct them in the choice of their pastors; and let ministers of standing and reputation, under whose guidance the matter may in part fall, be very careful that they do not encourage any to undertake the work who are deficient in these things: things of such importance, that it is certain no genius and learning can make up for the want of them. If deacons, in their inferior station, are to be free from such stains, and to be remarkable for such virtues as are here described, how much more should the pastors themselves be so, to whom the inspection of the deacons is also committed?

Let the ministers of Christ therefore study to excel in them more and more. And let such as are but lately entered on their work, though not novices in the language of the apostle, yet be on their guard, lest they be lifted up with pride, and so fall into the condemnation of the devil. But from this lurking and insinuating evil who is secure! Let all ministers learn to draw an occasion of exercising humility, from what might in another view seem a temptation to vanity, a survey of the dignity and excellency of their office. For how justly may this humble them when they reflect on the many imperfections which attend their discharge of it!

To conclude, let all, who are in any degree distinguished in the church, be excited to a care of presiding in a proper manner over their own families: and since it is evident that the apostolic rule allows of marriage, and supposes that by whatever doctrine of devils it might be forbidden, it would generally be practised by the ministers of Christ, let them however take care to make choice of companions in conjugal life, who may adorn and bless the houses to which they belong, and lessen, rather than increase, the difficulties inseparable from their own station and office.

SECT. V.

Though he hoped quickly to have an interview with Timothy, the Apostle recommends the care of the church to him: in which view he raises his idea of the charge he received, and represents the difficulties attending the faithful execution of it, in consequence of those pernicious doctrines which false teachers would endeavour to introduce. 1 Tim. III. 14—to the end. Chap. IV. 1—5.

1 TIMOTHY III. 14.

SECT.
V.

THESE things which thou hast now been reading concerning the character of persons who are to be intrusted with the office of bishops

1 TIM. III. 14.
THESE things write I unto thee, hoping
to

1 Tim.
III. 14.

to come unto thee shortly :

15 But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth.

16 And without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the bishops and deacons, I write to thee, hoping to come to thee shortly^a. But if I delay, I give thee these instructions, that thou mayest know how it becomes thee to converse in the house of God, in which thou hast the honour to bear so high an office; even in that house, which is the church of the living God. But I will not neglect the matter farther, contenting myself with reminding thee, that the very pillar and ground of the whole system of gospel-truth^b, upon which the support of the entire edifice depends, And 16 which is confessedly great, beyond all controversy and contradiction, is the mystery of godliness, that wonderful and sublime doctrine, which it is our great business to assert and enforce, and which has so evident a tendency to promote true godliness in all its branches; God was manifested in the flesh of our blessed Redeemer, in whose human nature the incarnate Deity dwelt; and thus he was justified in and by the Spirit, whose extraordinary communication, in the midst of all the meanness of human nature in its suffering state, vindicated his high claim, and marked him out, in the most illustrious manner, for the Divine Person he professed himself to be. He was seen of angels, and gazed at by them in various circumstances of his life and death, as a most astonishing and instructive spectacle. He was preached among the Gentiles, who were invited to embrace his religion, upon assurance of being received to equal privileges with the Jews. He was also believed on in the world, many of the most distant nations already coming in to the

SECT.
V.
1 Tim.
III. 15.

Christian

^a Hoping to come to thee shortly.] It seems evident from hence, that Paul intended to have come back to Timothy at Ephesus in a little time, but was providentially called another way; but it can by no means be concluded from hence (as has been shewn in the introduction), that Paul wrote this epistle to Timothy after his first imprisonment at Rome.

^b The pillar and ground of truth.] Though it is as Dr. Lightfoot has observed, very true, that this title is sometimes given by the rabbies to the members of the great sanhedrim, at least when assembled together, yet no interpretation of this text seems more precarious than that which refers it to the church. That had just before been called a house, and therefore cannot naturally be called a pillar, or foundation. Yet if it were to be granted, it would only prove, that the church was to support Christianity from age to age (which it has certainly done), not that any particular church is infallible. But it is well known, that many good critics refer this descriptive clause to Timothy, agreeably to that figure by which Peter is called a pillar, Gal. ii. 9. Compare Rev. iii. 12. But, I think, had this been the construction, the accusative case would have been used to agree with τὸν understood. I therefore choose to end the sentence with the word ἐκείνου, and begin the next with τοῦ, as in the version and paraphrase; and then the whole system of evangelical truth is considered as resting on this pillar and basis, as ἐπισημασθῆναι may signify.

SECT.
v.1 Tim.
III. 16.

Christian profession, and pressing for a share in the benefit of it. And at length, when his ministry on earth was completed, he was received up into glory, and seated on a throne in the heavens, where he presides over all things for the good of his church, and answers nobler purposes with regard to it than his corporeal presence here could have done.

IV. 1

These great doctrines of our holy faith are worthy of being recollected by every Christian, and of being insisted upon by every minister. But the Spirit of Divine inspiration, in the scriptures of truth^c, and in evangelical prophets; particularly in me, expressly saith and testifies, that in the last times^d, in ages yet to come, some who are under the dispensation of the gospel, and make great pretences to zeal in its interests, shall apostatize from the purity of the original faith; giving heed to deceitful spirits, who shall endeavour to impose upon them by false, though specious appearances, and to various doctrines of demons^e, and particularly such doctrines relating to the spirits of dead men, as the devil, the great author and abettor of lies, shall suggest to them for the most pernicious purposes. For they will come to be worshippers of dead idols, and departed spirits; as in Israel also they worshipped them; through the hypocrisy of the most abandoned and shameless liars^f, spreading their errors the Gentiles, believed on in the world; received up into glory.

IV. 1. Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils.

2 Speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their

c In the scriptures of truth, &c.] I have paraphrased this clause in its greatest extent, because, as there are some passages in the Old Testament which have been supposed, though I think not very expressly, to look this way, it is highly probable that others, who had the gift of prophecy (as we are sure many at that time had), might predict so memorable and important an event as Paul certainly had done before. See 2 Thess. ii. 1, &c. But the inspiration of the New Testament in general rests on much stronger evidence than what arises from this clause.

d In the last times.] Though it is certain that (as Dr. Whitby here proves at large) the phrase of the last days does often signify the concluding period of the Jewish church, and the first age of Christianity; yet I cannot perceive, that it is so confined to this, but that the whole period, or time under the reign of the Messiah, may be spoke of in this language.

e Doctrines of demons.] Archbishop Tillotson follows Mr. Joseph Mede in explaining this, as expressing worship paid to the spirits of the dead. Tillotson's Works, Vol. II. p. 53. But, though this be undoubtedly one branch of that diabolical doctrine which the church of Rome hath followed, I see no sufficient reason for limiting the phrase to that detestable tenet.

f Through the hypocrisy of liars, &c.] A very ingenious critic (many of whose remarks on scripture deserve attention) has urged the authority of Epiphanius, for inserting into the former part of this verse the following words, as spoken by the apostle, Εσθηται γαρ νικησις λαλεουσις, ως και εν τω Ιεραρχι εισηρασθησαν. Epiph. Har. 78, p. 1055. Ed. Col. But the credit of one copy cannot be so considerable, as to warrant such an addition to the sacred text especially considering how late that citation was made, and how absolutely impossible it would have been, after the time of Epiphanius, to have corrected all the copies, by erasing from them these words, of which no trace is any where else to be found. I rather think that this father, very far to be sure, from being a correct writer, has confound-

SECT.
V.

to that dispensation, and therefore to expire when the authority of that law was to cease.

IMPROVEMENT.

Chap.
iv. 1.

WHAT the Spirit of God expressly spake has been so expressly accomplished, as plainly to prove the Divine original of this oracle, and of all that are connected with it. The grand apostacy of the latter days, is made manifest, the seducing spirits have effectually done their part, the world has given heed to them, and wandered after them; so that doctrines of devils have almost cast out from his own church the doctrine of Christ. No testimony of hypocritical liars hath been wanting to confirm the fraud to the utmost of their power, and the whole conduct of it seems to declare to how dreadful a degree it is possible for conscience to be seared. Marriage has been forbidden, while the pardon of fornication, adultery, and incest, have been rated at a certain price by that grand merchant of the souls of men, who hath ventured to call himself the vicar of Christ upon earth. By him men have been taught to place the greater part of religion in abstaining from meats, in attending unintelligible jargon, instead of the service of God's sanctuary, and in transforming the high solemnities of the simplest and most rational worship that ever was instituted, into a ceremonious farce. Adored be Divine Providence and grace, that any parts of the once dark domains of this man of sin have been awakened to assert the purity of the Christian faith and worship, and to seek to purge away the reproach and infamy which such adulterations had brought upon the name! Blessed be God that our attention is diverted from these trifles and monsters, these mysteries of folly, and mysteries of iniquity, to the great mystery of godliness! Let it be familiar to our thoughts. The manifestation of God in the flesh! A sight which the angels, beheld with wonder, while the blessed Spirit sealed the authority of God's incarnate Son, and attested his gospel among the Gentiles, till the world, was brought to believe in him; so that he looked down from the throne of glory, to which he was received, and saw his own oracle fulfilled, If I am lifted up, I will draw all men unto me, (John xii. 32.) May this mysterious, yet resplendent truth be strenuously maintained, and practically preached, by all the ministers of the gospel; may they shew, in every other respect, that they know how to behave themselves aright in the house of the living God; and may many by these means be brought to believe and to know the truth in its vital energy.

Chap.
iii. 16.iii. 15.
iv—5.

Then

Then will the common enjoyments of life have an additional relish being received with thanksgiving, and sanctified by the word of God and prayer.

SECT.

VI.

SECT. VI.

Paul gives many good advices to Timothy, to attend to the great essentials of religion, patiently to endure all afflictions, to behave with the most exact decorum and exemplary care, and to study to improve the gifts with which God had honoured him for the edification of the church and the salvation of souls. 1 Tim. IV. 6, to the end.

1 Tim. IV. 6.

IF thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith, and of good doctrine, wherunto thou hast attained.

1 TIMOTHY IV. 6.

IF thou shalt be careful frequently to suggest these great and weighty things^a, of which I have now been writing to the brethren who are committed to thy charge, and to remind them of their importance with becoming zeal and affection, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, and shalt act as may be expected from one who has been nourished up from his very childhood in the words of faith and of good doctrine, which thou has accurately traced out, and followed with suitable diligence. But these profane and old wives fables^b, of which many of the Jewish allegorical and traditionary teachers are so fond, do thou reject as things altogether unworthy of thy regard, and rather take care strenuously to exercise thyself in those doctrines and practices which have the most immediate tendency to promote real godliness. For that bodily exercise^c, about which many are so solicitous, and in the pursuit of which they go through so many fatigues, in preparing for, and attending the public games, is profitable to but very little^c, the best

SECT.

VI.

1 Tim.

IV. 6.

^a But refuse profane and old wives fables, and exercise thyself rather unto godliness.

^b For bodily exercise profiteth little: but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life

^a Suggest.] Raphelius on the place justly observes, that this is the exact signification of the word πειθεμανος. For the import of προκαταθηνας; see on Luke i. 3.

^b Old wives fables.] This undoubtedly signifies Jewish traditions. Compare chap. i. 4. 6; Tit. i. 14. If they were such as those with which the rabbinical writers, so far as I have had an opportunity of judging of them abound, nothing ever better deserved the name, they being not only the most incredible, but the most insipid and senseless tales any where to be met with.

^c Bodily exercise is profitable to little.] Γυμνασια. It seems much more reasonable, with Dr. Whitby and Dr. Edwards (on Script. Vol. II. p. 167, 168, to refer this to the celebrated exercises at the Grecian games, (of which Dr. West has given so entertaining and useful an account in the Dissertation prefixed to his Pindar) than

to

SECT.
VI.1 Tim.
IV. 8.

best rewards of it being of a very transient and fading nature; but true. substantial, practical godliness is profitable to all things, having the promise both of the present and future life^d, naturally tending to promote our real happiness in this world, and being surely and alone effectual to secure the blessedness of the next. This [is] a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance; receive it therefore and retain it carefully, and inculcate it upon those who are committed to thy charge, or whom thou mayest be concerned in setting apart for the ministry. For the advancement of this godliness is the end of all the hardships we encounter; while we both pass through the most fatiguing labour, and suffer the sharpest reproach and the most violent outrage, because we have hoped, and continue to hope, in the protection and favour of the living God, who is the Saviour and Preserver of all men^e, by his gracious providence, and especially of the faithful souls who cordially believe and sincerely obey the gospel: for whom he reserves the most invaluable blessings of a future state, and whom he will guide safely to it, through all the dangers of this. These, my dear Timothy, are things of the greatest importance^f, and therefore give them solemnly in charge, and teach them to all, as thou hast opportunity.

life that now is and of that which is to come.

9 This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance.

10 For therefore we both labour, and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, especially of those that believe.

11 These things command and teach,

And,

to those severities of the Jewish Essenes which some other commentators mention. These strenuous exercises might promote strength and courage, they would naturally raise high emulation, and the victors received great honours, and sometimes valuable immunities and privileges. Perhaps, indeed, some of these might hardly balance personal injuries they might meet with in them; and many had suffered much who received no reward at all. But the apostle stands not on this: he plainly intimates, that where men succeeded best, the greatest advantages they received by their victory all fell infinitely short of those which true religion secures.

d Promise of the present and future life.] Godliness, under the New Testament dispensation, has no particular promise of health, or reputation, or wealth, or any other individual blessing, though in its natural consequences it wears a most friendly aspect upon all, but it has the promise of comfort and happiness in general; and that declaration of Christ, that the good man shall receive an hundred fold, even in the midst of persecution, if that should be his lot, (Mark x. 30,) might alone be sufficient to vindicate the apostle in his assertion. I have often wondered, that so great a man, as the present Bishop of London, should suppose a reference here to the covenant with Noah, by which he supposes the original fertility of the earth was restored after the deluge; since there are so many other temporal promises made to the righteous; and the benefit of this is common both to good and bad men, admitting his lordship's hypothesis as to the sense of it. See Dr. Sherl. on Prop. p. 111.

e Saviour of all men.] This seems a title parallel to that in Job. vii. 20; Preserver of men, but he is especially the Saviour of believers, as he extends to them the noblest and most important deliverance.

f These are things of the greatest importance.] The following expression, of giving them in charge, shews, that these words refer not merely to what was mentioned in the former clause, but to the whole preceding discourse.

g In 12 Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

13 Till I come give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine.

14 Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.

g In spirit.] Some explain this of an industrious improvement of the gifts of the Holy Spirit, and have urged it as a proof, that Timothy was possessed of such extraordinary endowments of this kind, as raised him far above the rank of an ordinary minister. That he had miraculous gifts is certain, compare verse 14; but the proof of it from these words, which admit another sense so naturally and fairly, must be very precarious.

h Gift—by the imposition of the hands of the presbytery.] The presbyters seemed

And, that thou mayest inculcate them with the greater efficacy, let it be thy care to behave in such a manner, that no man may be able to despise thy youth: but, on the contrary, let thy whole behaviour command a reverence to it, while others see that, young as thou art in years, thou art old in wisdom, piety, and universal goodness. Be thou therefore an example to all the faithful in prudent and useful speech, in a grave, steady, and consistent conversation, in unbounded love, and in a candid yet zealous spirit, in uniform and incorruptible fidelity, and in unspotted purity, by which all suspicion of evil shall be avoided, and even all occasion of apology superseded. And till ¹³ I come back to Ephesus, to take thee along with me, if Providence favour my purpose of returning, or if not, till I may have an interview with thee elsewhere, make the best improvement of thy time, as considering the greatness of thy work, and the various furniture which it requires. In this view, attend to reading the scriptures and other useful writings, and to the important care of exhortation, and to teaching both in public and private. Neglect not, by proper and strenuous exercise, to rouse and cultivate that gift of God's Holy Spirit which is in thee, which was given thee in a large and sensible effusion on that ever-memorable day when thou wert set apart to thy sacred office by the ministration of those who had the gift of prophecy, by which they were enabled and excited to foretel something extraordinary concerning thee. With such a token of his special presence did God honour the imposition of the hands of the whole presbytery ^h, who concurred with me in recommending to have laid on their hands with Paul, when Timothy was solemnly set apart to the ministerial work; and, as the Spirit was often given by the imposition of the apostles' hands alone, compare 1 Tim. i. 6; Acts viii. 17, 18, we cannot suppose those of Paul would be less efficacious in this circumstance. See Mic. Sac. Vol. II. Ess. n. p. 70. It is strange that a man of Mr. Slater's good sense should have thought of interpreting presbytery here of the whole college of the apostles. There is no reason at all to believe that there were

SECT.
VI.
1 Tim.
IV. 12.

SECT.
VI.1 Tim.
IV. 15.

commending thee to his blessing by that solemn rite. Meditate therefore on these things, which I have now been writing thee by way of direction and charge; be always employed in attending to these things, that thy improvement in all that can conduce to the honourable and faithful discharge of thine office, may be made manifest to all around thee. In a word, remember that thou art surrounded with numberless temptations, and that the trust committed to thee is 16 a matter of infinite importance. Take heed therefore to thyself, to thine own temper and conduct; and take heed to [thy] doctrine, both with respect to the matter and manner of thy teaching, and continue in them, making this the whole of thy business and care. The fatigue indeed may be great, and many of the restraints to which thou mayest be subjected for the present, disagreeable, but the happy consequence will counterbalance all; *for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and thy hearers*¹. It will be the means, not only of delivering thine own soul in the great day of account, but of improving thy happiness to unknown degrees; and though it is not in thy power to command success, yet thou hast great encouragement to hope, that God will so bless thy labours, as to make thee instrumental in delivering many souls from death, and raising them to complete and everlasting felicity.

15 Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them: that thy profiting may appear to all.

16 Take heed unto thyself, and unto thy doctrine; continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. 6 IT is doubtless a very great advantage to Christians, and especially to the ministers of Christ, to have been nourished and educated now together, or that any of them was with Paul, at Timothy's ordination; for there is no hint of its being performed at Jerusalem, where a few, though but a few, of them might perhaps reside at this time. See Orig. Draught, p. 184. As this text strongly implies, that Timothy was adorned with some supernatural gifts, so it also proves, that the degree in which such favours were continued, did very much depend on the diligence and fidelity, with which they were cultivated by the person who had received them.

[Save thyself and thy hearers.] I cannot forbear observing here, though it be not a critical remark, that the salvation of others may accidentally have some influence upon a man's own salvation; as the better those about him are, the more advantage he has for religious improvement, the fewer hindrances from duty and temptations to sin. And the argument for imitation is much strengthened, when it comes from a person placed in an inferior station, from whom therefore less might be expected in that view than from ourselves. But certainly the thought chiefly referred to here, is the necessity of acting faithfully in the ministry, in order to be entitled to the Divine promise of salvation, in which persons who betray so important a trust, can have no part.

eated in the words of faith and of good doctrine; and they who are honoured with the great trust of training them up should be particularly careful on this head, remembering that no other branches of learning are of comparable importance to any Christian, and much less to those whose business it must be to maintain the faith of Christ in the world, and to instruct others in his doctrine, both publicly and privately.

But to do this with success, and to command that reverence,¹² which it is desirable for the public good they should command, whether they be younger or elder, it is necessary that they endeavour to be examples to other believers in their whole conversation and deportment, in word and in spirit, patterns of charity, faith, and purity. To qualify them more abundantly for such a work, whatever their gyfts may be, whether of nature or of grace, it will be necessary to stir them up by frequent exercise, and to cultivate them by reading and meditation, as well as prayer; that¹³ their stock may be increasing, *that their profiting may appear to*¹⁵ all, and that they may lose no advantage they can secure, of rendering their exhortations and instructions worthy the regard of the wisest and best, as well as the least and weakest of those committed to their care.

But surely, whatever difficulties may lie in their way, and whatever fatigues, or censures, or sufferings, they may encounter¹⁰ while thus employed, the prospect of success may sweeten all.¹⁶ If they may save themselves and those that hear them, if they may give up an account with joy, if they may see souls recovered from the tyranny of sin and the kingdom of Satan now, and at length after having anticipated the pleasures of heaven upon earth, raised to the full enjoyment of those pleasures above, they will bless the remembrance of their labours. Yea, the very consciousness of spending life in such pursuits must, to a generous and pious mind, afford unspeakably more delight than the acquisition and enjoyment of any thing which the children of this world pursue, and perhaps some of them with equal fatigue.

Let Christians in other stations also be quickened to exert themselves in the same blessed cause, remembering, that while other things, for which men labour as in the fire, can profit but little, godliness is profitable to all. It hath so far the promise of this life, that the godly man shall not want any thing that his Father and his God knows to be truly good for him, and he will probably be abundantly happier in this world, amidst all the calamities to which he may be exposed, than in like circumstances he could possibly have been, without such a principle of piety in his heart; and it has absolutely the promise of the life which is to come, and that such a life, so glorious and so lasting, that the very mention

SECT. VI. of it may well swallow up the the thoughts of this life and its interests, any farther than as they are connected with that. Let us
 9 then receive the word with all readiness, and pursue these glorious objects, trusting in the living God, who, while he scatters
 10 the bounties of his common Providence on all, is, in a peculiar and most important sense, the Saviour, the Guardian, the Father of those who believe.

SECT. VII.

Directions for Timothy's conduct towards persons in different circumstances, and particularly elders and widows: which leads the Apostle to give some advices concerning those matrons who were intrusted by the church with some peculiar office, and supported out of the public stock in the discharge of it. 1 Tim. V. 1—6.

1 TIMOTHY V. 1.

SECT. VII. THY office, O Timothy, will often oblige thee to censure the conduct of others, and sometimes of those who are more advanced in age than myself. But remember to do it with a becoming modesty and tenderness. Rebuke not an aged man^a severely, but rather exhort [him] as a father, to perform whatever duty he neglects, or to avoid those temptations which may be dangerous to him: [and] as to the younger, though thou mayest use more freedom with them, yet remember still to treat them with kindness and affection, as brethren, and not with a lordly and supercilious contempt. Address thyself to the aged women, as mothers,
 2 [and] to the younger as sisters, with all chastity, and the strictest decorum in any converse with them; remembering how many eyes are upon thee, and how fatal any thing, which might in that respect bring the least blemish upon thy character, would be to the honour and success of thy ministry, and to the credit of the gospel
 3 and its professors. Honour, and endeavour honourably to support, those widows who are truly widows^b, and whose destitute circumstances

1 Tim. V. 1. REBUKE not an elder, but entreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren,

2 The elder women as mothers, the younger as sisters, with all purity.

3 Honour widows that are widows indeed.

a An aged man.] The opposition between elder and younger, plainly shews, that πρεσβυτερος here signifies an aged person, which may farther be argued from the opposition between elder and younger in the next verse.

b Truly such.] Here is, as Calvin justly observes, an allusion to the Greek word χρηστος, which signifies a person in distressed and indigent circumstances.

4 But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to shew piety at home, and to requite their parents: for that is good and acceptable before God.

stances recommend them as the certain objects of charity. But if any widow hath children, or grand children, who are capable of supporting her, let them learn first to exercise grateful piety at home, and to repay the benefits they have received from their parents, or remoter progenitors, in their necessities, before they talk of extending their generosity to others; for this is good and decent, fair and beautiful in the eyes of men, and it is likewise acceptable before God, who requires us, out of regard to his honour and favour, to attend carefully to the duties of those relations in which we stand to each other.

800.
VII.
1 Tim.
V. 4.

5 Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day.

Now that you may understand the character, to which I advise you to confine your charitable exhibitions, I must add, that she who is truly a widow, and thus left alone, and destitute of the assistance of human friends, is one that, in the good Providence of God, reposing herself with humble confidence on his faithful care, and continues constantly day and night in supplications and prayers, makes devotion her business, in the proper return of its daily seasons, and endeavours to be as much at leisure for it as her circumstances in life will permit. But she that liveth luxuriously, as some Christian widows, to the great shame and scandal of their profession do, is indeed dead while she liveth^d, as to the noblest ends and purposes of life. And as this is a very important article, and these things, in some degree, affect Christians of all circumstances and relations in life, who are too ready to lose themselves in the pursuit of sensual pleasure, I desire thou wouldst give them in charge to all thy hearers, that so they may in this respect be blameless; and that by maintaining

6 But she that liveth in pleasure, is dead while she liveth.

7 And these things give in charge, that they may be blameless.

c Day and night.] That is, continually, morning and evening, and on every proper occasion by night or by day, 1 Thess. ii. 9; iii. 10; 2 Thess. iii. 8; 2 Tim. i. 3.

d Dead while she liveth.] Some philosophers, even among the barbarous nations, are noted for having spoken of those as dead, who deserted what their sects esteemed the doctrines of truth, and abandoned themselves to sensual passions. The word σπαιρωσα, which we may render living in pleasure, properly signifies farjng deliciously; and Dr. Whitby observes, it especially refers to drinking strong and costly liquors.

e That they may be blameless.] Some would refer this to the widows; but the gender of the word οι τοις rather favours our referring it, either to the deacons, or to Timothy's hearers in general; since it is certain, that widows were not the only persons, who, in so luxurious a city as Ephesus, were in danger of falling into such sensualities as he had been warning them against.

SPEC.
vii.

taining a due government of themselves, and strenuously attending to the duties of life, they may answer the obligations under which they lie.

1 Tim.
V. 7.

8 But especially insist upon it, that a due care be taken of the poor, by those of their relations who are capable of supporting them; for if any do not provide for his own, and especially for those of his own house^f, he hath, whatever he may pretend, in effect and practically denied the faith, and, on the whole, is worse than an infidel^g; bringing a greater dishonour upon the gospel than one who openly professes to reject it, while he is thus deficient in those duties which common humanity teaches even many of the heathens to practise themselves, and to inculcate upon others. Let not a widow be taken upon the list^h of those to be maintained by the church, and to minister in the office of deaconess in it, who is under sixty years old, and then, only such a person who hath been the wife of one manⁱ, and avoided all scandalous commerce with others. And, as some pecu-

8 But if any provide not for his own, an especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.

9 Let not a widow be taken into the number, under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, liar

10 Well reported of for

^f Those of his own house.] Τῶν οἰκίῳν seems to signify domestics, or those who dwelt with the indolent person here spoken of; and it would certainly be an aggravation of his neglect, if these relations, whom he was unwilling according to his ability to maintain, were in his family, and consequently under his eye; so that there does not seem to be reason, with Mr. Hallet (Notes on Script. Vol. 1. p. 31), to conclude, it signifies those of the household of faith, as the apostle speaks elsewhere (Gal. vi. 10) that is believing relatives.

^g Worse than an infidel.] Dr. Whitby proves, by very apposite citations, that the heathens were sensible of the reasonableness and necessity of taking care of near relations, and especially of parents, when they fell into poverty.

^h Taken upon the list. &c.] Κληρονομοῦ has precisely his signification. Surely none can imagine, that the apostle meant to confine the charity of the church to widows of such an age, and who had all these characters; we must therefore conclude, that he speaks of those who bore the office of deaconess, who were probably intrusted with the care of entertaining Christian strangers, whether ministers or others, and perhaps of educating some poor children, who might be maintained by the ams of the church. And it might, on many accounts, and for very obvious reasons, be proper, that this office should be committed only to persons of an advanced age, and such as had laid aside all thoughts of marrying again. It is evident, that they who had practised hospitality themselves in their more prosperous days, would be peculiarly fit for one part of this office, and peculiarly worthy of the countenance which this office gave, and of the trust which it implied.

ⁱ The wife of one man.] It is very certain that second marriages in general are not condemned by Christianity, and it would be a great objection against it if they were. The apostle expressly advises the younger widows to marry again, ver. 14; and it would seem very hard to exclude them afterwards from this office, how fit soever they might be for it on other accounts, merely because they had done it. I therefore am inclinable to think the meaning of the expression may be, one who has chastly confined herself to one husband, while in the married relation; for it is certain, that it never was usual among the Jews or the Greeks, to admit women to have more than one husband at once. It may deserve consideration whether this may not reflect some light on the correspondent phrase, when applied to a bishop, chap. iii. 2.

for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work.

liar trust is reposed in such, let care be taken that she be [one] who hath a reputation for good works in general; and she will especially be worthy of such an encouragement and honour, if she have educated her own children with care, or any other children who have been committed to her; if in her more prosperous days she have expressed an hospitable temper, and lodged strangers, who have been at a loss for necessary accommodations on their journies; especially if she have washed the saints' feet, and in other respects relieved in a proper manner Christians in such circumstances; if she have, in other instances, according to her abilities, assisted the afflicted; and in short, if she have followed every good work, and endeavoured to adorn her profession by a benevolent and useful life. But 11

SECT.
VII.

1 Tim.
V. 10.

10 But the younger widows refuse: for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry:

12 Having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith.

15 And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also, and busybodies, speaking refuse to admit into such an office the younger widows; for when they grow wanton^k, as (though such a disposition be directed against the laws of Christ) many in such a circumstance of life do, they will marry, and perhaps to husbands who are strangers to Christianity. Thereby exposing themselves to just blame of 12 men and condemnation from God, because they have disannulled their first faith, and violated their engagement to the church, when it assigned them such an office, to which it would be very inconvenient to admit persons that have any views of entering again into the conjugal state: not to say that some men have been enticed, by very improper alliances, to throw off even the general profession of Christianity. And 13 indeed, with relation to several of such (as I have observed in societies less careful in this respect than were to be wished,) these women also, while they pretend to continue in their office, being idle and slothful in the province they have undertaken, instead of staying at home, and attending the proper duty of their charge, learn [a habit of] gadding abroad, and going from house to house; and [they are] not only

^k Grown wanton, &c.] Κυριόσυνωσις is a strong expression, which cannot be exactly rendered into English. When these widows grew negligent of their proper duty, sensual affections might prevail upon them; and their credit among Christians being hurt by such an unbecoming conduct, it is very probable they might often be forced to take up with heathen husbands, and so might at length be led to apostatize from Christianity.

SECT.

vii

1 Tim.

V. 13.

only idle, but triflers also¹ and busy-bodies: there is a levity and impertinence in their behaviour, which is the natural result of neglecting to keep themselves well employed; and they are often speaking things that are very unbecoming, which do loudly proclaim the irregularity of their disposition, and shew how much their minds are vitiated and disordered.

ing things which they ought not.

14 I would therefore have the younger [widows], instead of thinking of a trust and situation, for which they are generally so unfit, to marry again if they are so inclined, as it is generally best that they should; and employ themselves in such cares as suit the mistress of a family, that they may breed children, [and] govern their domestic affairs so as to give no occasion to the adversary, who is glad to find any excuse for it, to speak reproachfully of religion, on account of 14 I will therefore that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house, give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully.

15 the unsuitable behaviour of its professors. And I give the caution with the greater solicitude, because it is too evident, that as for some, from whom the churches expected better things, they have already turned aside after Satan, so as to follow his leading and impulse, in direct opposition to the law of Christ, and much to the detriment of his interest.

15 For some are already turned aside after Satan.

16 But if any believer of either sex have near relations, who are widows, let them, as I advised before, take care of them at home, that the church may not be burdened with more charitable cases than it can properly support, but may take care of [those who are], as I have said, truly widows, and must otherwise be left altogether desolate.

16 If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. MINISTERS are instructed by this apostolical advice, in that difficult duty, of managing reproof aright. Churches may learn how their poor are to be treated, and children may be reminded of that grateful tribute which they owe especially to their aged and necessitous parents. No recompense can be fully adequate, but surely to a generous temper nothing can be more delightful, than to sooth the declining years of those by whom our infant-days

[1 Triflers.] The word φρονησι seems to be derived from φρονειν, which I think properly signifies the noise which water makes when it is ready to boil over. See Raph. in loc. And therefore it very well expresses the inward fermentation (if I may so speak) in the minds of these trifling people, which they vented by unprofitable discourses.

days were sustained, our feeble childhood supported, and our giddy youth moderated and directed. SECT.
VII.

Let St. Paul's sentiments of a luxurious life be particularly attended to in this age of ours, in which so many are entirely devoted to these pleasures. They call it living, but the wiser apostle pronounces it a kind of moral death. And many of the heathens themselves have been instructed by nature to speak in a language like his. Nay some of them acted on this principle in a manner which might shame most that call themselves Christians. Let us learn to form our tastes to nobler pleasures than these on which though less multitudes are so intent. Let us cultivate those that are suited to our rational and immortal spirits, and that will not only follow us into the invisible world, but will there be exalted and improved. Ver. 6

But let us be particularly careful, that while religion raises us above a sensual life, we do not make use of it as a pretence to excuse ourselves from attending to social duty. To neglect a due care of those whom Providence has committed to us, would, in the apostle's language, be a denial of the faith, and would even argue us worse than infidels, who, deficient as they were in the knowledge of God, or in such regards to him as were even proportionable to what they knew, discoursed largely and excellently on the obligations of justice and benevolence to our fellow creatures and were themselves examples of what they taught in relation to them. 8

Among other virtues here spoken of with due honour, a proper care in the education of children is none of the least. Let Christians of both sexes be diligent in it, and let women, to whom the chief care of children is consigned in those tender years, when the deepest and surest impressions are often made, be sensible, how great advantage the public may receive by their wise and pious conduct towards them. While many are triflers and busy bodies, running from house to house, and speaking things which they ought not, let women professing godliness remember they are to adorn it by the exercise of domestic virtues, so as to cut off occasion of speaking reproachfully, even from the ingenious malice of adversaries: occasion too often given by those who, while they follow the gay desires of their hearts, and the fashions of this vain world, seem to have forgotten what the apostle intended by the awful and lively phrase of being turned aside after Satan; and make themselves his more secure and certain prey, by every step they take in these flattering paths through which he would lead them to final destruction. 10
13
19 15

SECT. VIII.

The Apostle adds directions concerning the regard to be shown by the people to their faithful ministers; concerning the method of proceeding against those who were accused of any fault, and the most prudent and regular manner of treating candidates for the ministry. The section concludes with some other necessary advices and particulars for the instruction of Christian slaves.
1 Tim. V. 17—to the end. Chap. VI. 1, 2.—

I TIMOTHY V. 17.

1 TIM. V. 17.

SECT.
viii.1 Tim.
V. 17.

I HAVE already been giving you some directions with relation to those who are elders in age, and now let me add a word or two concerning those who are distinguished by the office they bear in the Christian church, and have that title of respect and reverence given them on that account. And here, let the elders which preside well^a, be esteemed worthy of double honour^b, and, as circumstances may require and admit, let them be respectfully maintained by the society; especially those who, to all their other kind cares of a more private nature, add an exemplary attendance to that of public instruction, and labour with diligence and zeal in administering the word, and stating and vindicating the doctrine of the gospel in your religious assemblies^c. For you well remember, I doubt

LET the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine.

18 For the scripture saith,

^a The elders who preside well.] Mr. Reeves (Apol. Vol. I. p. 115, note p,) must surely be driven to very great extremities, when, to ward off some consequences which were to him disagreeable, he concludes that these elders were bishops, in the English sense of the word, or persons of an order superior to common ministers: which interpretation would suppose, that some such officers in the church might preside well, though they did not labour in the word, while able to do it, which the following words evidently suppose the elders here spoken of to be; for else their being disabled by age, or any other infirmities, would be a strong reason for their being honourably maintained, on account of the services of their better years. Compare note on 1 Thess. v. 12.

^b Double honour.] It is a scrupulous nicety of interpretation, to explain this as a decision, that they were to have twice as much as the deaconesses. Different circumstances might require different exhibitions to persons in the same office. It seems only to express a plentiful maintenance (according to what they needed, and the society could afford,) given in a liberal and respectful manner.

^c Especially they who labour.] This seems to intimate that there were some who, though they presided in the church, were not employed in preaching. Limborch indeed is of opinion, that κοινωνία signifies those who did even fatigue themselves with their extraordinary labours, which some might not do, who yet in the general presided well, supposing preaching to be a part of their work. Limb. Theol. lib. vii. cap. iv. § 10. But it seems to me much more natural to follow the former interpretation. Compare 1 Cor. xvi. 15;
d The

saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn; and the labourer is worthy of his reward.

19 Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses.

20 Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear.

21 I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe doubt not, that the scripture has said, again and again, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn, but shalt allow him, while labouring upon it, to eat of it as his hunger requires, (Deut. xxv. 24; 1 Cor. ix. 9; and note;) and the old Testament, as well as the words of our Lord and the reason of mankind, teaches us, that the workman [is] worthy of his hire^d; on which account the law requires that, instead of being entirely withheld from him, it should not be delayed for a day. (Deut. xxiv. 14; Lev. xix. 13.) Persons therefore, who labour in so honourable and important a work, are by no means to be neglected, nor suffered to want necessary support and encouragement. Great care should also be taken that their reputation, on which their usefulness will so much depend, may not be lightly impeached. Accordingly, do not receive an accusation against an elder, unless on the testimony of two or three credible witnesses; for the single report of any one person is not material enough to set against the word of an elder, maintaining his own innocence.

You will, I doubt not, use your utmost endeavours to preserve the purity of the church; yet, as offences will certainly come, let me advise you to keep up a due solemnity in church-censures; and as for those that sin^e in any scandalous and remarkable manner, rebuke them before all, that even the rest of the congregation may fear, and stand upon their guard against those temptations which have brought upon others such public admonition and reproof. I know how contrary these faithful proceedings may sometimes be to flesh and blood, and therefore solemnly charge [thee] before the blessed God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels (who

SECT.
VIII.
1 TIM.
V. 15.

^d The workman, &c.] As the very words of this passage only occur, Luke x. 7; it is the opinion of the ingenious Mr. Serw, that St. Paul here quotes these words of the evangelist as of equal authority with those of Moses. Deut. xxv. 4. Sced's Ser. Vol. II. p. 292.

^e Those that sin.] I see no reason for understanding this of offending elders: though, were it to be so taken, it would by a strong consequence be applicable to others. A humour of seeking a stricter connection than is any way necessary, has led many commentators into very limitted, and sometimes into whimsical, interpretations.

[The elect angels.] Mr. Jos. Mede interprets this of the seven archangels chosen by God to the greatest nearness to him, and highest honours in the court of heaven. But all his arguments, to prove that there is such a number of celestial spirits, in such posts of distinction, appeared to me so precarious, that I rather chose to explain the words in a more general manner, on principles which I think much more certain.

SECT.
viii.
1 Tim.
V. 21.

- (who having kept their stations, when so many of their fellows were seduced by Satan, are now confirmed in a state of immutable felicity, and shall attend our common Lord to the awful judgment of the great day), that thou keep these things without any prejudice against any part of them; doing nothing by partiality, in favour of one person more than another, according to the inducement of private friendship or affection,
- 22 And as it is a matter of so great importance to the Christian church, what persons are admitted to minister in it, I must also charge thee, that thou lay hands suddenly and rashly on no man, to set him apart for that sacred trust, before his character and qualifications have been fully examined and thoroughly approved. Neither make thyself partaker in the sins of others, as thou wilt certainly do, if thou art the means of bringing those that thou mightest have discovered to be unworthy men into the ministry; who may have much greater opportunities of doing mischief, in consequence of their bearing such an office, and may give great scandal, and lead many others astray. Therefore keep thyself pure from such pollutions, as well as all others, by
- 23 guarding against the first occasion of them. A recollection of the difficulty of thy work, and what I know of the tenderness of thy constitution, and thy great abstinence, engage me to caution thee, that thou do not confine thyself any observe these things, without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality.

22 Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins: keep thyself pure.

23 Drink no longer water, but use a little wine

[Lay hands suddenly and rashly.] That this is the signification of ταχως Raphaelus has sufficiently shewn. Though some have referred this to the laying on of hands in the absolution of notorious offenders, it seems safer and more natural to explain it of ordination to the ministry; in reference to which this rite is often alluded to in these epistles. It has been said by one of the most rational and candid patrons of Diocesan Episcopacy, "What need was there that, after the settlement of a Christian church at Ephesus, Timothy should be sent to ordain elders, if a right of ordination lay in presbyters, or in a church, nominating to the pastoral office? Especially, how should he, on this supposition, be directed to perform it himself, and not merely to advise and assist others in the performance?" Bishop of Winchester, (Dr. Hoody's) of Epis. p. 329. But I must beg leave to answer, that this does not appear to be the chief reason of Timothy's being sent to Ephesus, or rather being left there, when Paul went into Macedonia, (chap. i. 3.) Various circumstances of this church might require, that a person of Timothy's extraordinary gifts and character, should be left to superintend their affairs: and it might reasonably be taken for granted, that, as he was there by the apostle's special direction, so much regard would be paid to him, that he would be desired to preside in their sacred solemnities, in the same manner as Paul had done when among them. But that no elder could at any time be ordained, without the presence and concurrence of such an extraordinary person, and that such an extraordinary power and influence should afterwards be transferred to others, not in like manner qualified for the management of it, are things neither easy to be proved, nor rashly to be taken for granted on a question of so great a moment.

wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities.

any longer to drink water alone, but use a little wine mingled with it, for the sake of thy stomach, which needs to be strengthened by that more generous liquor in a moderate quantity; and out of regard to thy frequent infirmities, which otherwise may grow upon thee, so as to render thee incapable of that public service for which thou art so well qualified^b.

SECT. VIII.
1 Tim. 4 V. 23.

24 Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after.

In judging of characters, and passing sentence, according to the advice given above, you will find it necessary in different cases to use different precautions. The sins of some men are manifest, leading on to pass judgment on them without any difficulty; whereas some follow after, and are so artfully disguised, that it will require great diligence and strict examination to detect them. So also the good works of some are manifest to all, and spread a kind of glory around those that perform them, which renders them lovely and venerable in all eyes; and those which are otherwise, though for a while concealed under the thickest veils that humility can spread over them, cannot long be entirely hid. They will appear on accurate observation; and as they will at the last day be laid open to their public honour, they will in the mean time recommend such silent and reserved Christians to the esteem and respect of those who are intimately conversant with them; and may even prove the means of advancing them to some important trusts, which they are not the less fit for because they have so low an opinion of their own merit.

24 Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand; and they that are otherwise cannot be hid.

VI. 1. Let as many servants as are under the yoke, count their own masters worthy of

I shall only here add a word or two concerning servants, whom, inferior as their station in life is, I would not have you overlook; since their souls are equally valuable before God with those of their superiors, and much of the credit of Christianity is concerned in their conduct and behaviour. Let therefore as many servants as are

[Use a little wine, &c.] One cannot forbear reflecting here, how very temperate Timothy must have been, to need an advice of this kind; which amounts to no more than mingling a little wine with his water. And what is said of his many infirmities compared with the apostle's exhortation to him, to be instant in preaching the word, may certainly teach us, that every weakness of constitution is not to be acquiesced in as an excuse for not going on with the ministry: though, to be sure, great allowances are to be made for bodily infirmities, and life itself may often depend upon seasonable interruptions of public labour. Sir Norton Knatchbull, observing that the connection is so broken between the 22 and 24 verses, by the insertion of this advice in this place, conjectures, that Paul might write it in the margin by way of postscript, and that it was introduced into the text by the mistake of some early transcriber.

i Par-

SECT.
viii.1 Tim.
VI. 1.

are under the yoke of bondage, account their own masters worthy of all that civil honour and respect which suits the station in which they respectively are; not taking occasion from their own religious knowledge and privileges to despise and rebel against them; that the name and doctrine of God, which they profess, may not be ²blasphemed by their insolence and pride. And as for those servants who are so happy as to have believing masters, let them not presume upon that account to despise [them], because they are brethren, and with respect to sacred privileges, equal in Christ their common Lord; but let them rather serve [them] with so much the greater care, tenderness, and respect, because they are faithful and beloved, [and] partakers with them of the great and glorious benefit¹ which the gospel brings to all its faithful professors, of whatsoever rank or profession in life. And let the thought of the degree in which they share the favour of God, the tender bond in which as fellow-Christians they are joined, and the hope of partaking with them in all the final blessings of an happy immortality, while it engages their servants to behave towards them in a becoming manner, teach the masters duly to condescend to them, and treat them, not only with justice, but with kindness.

of all honour: that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed.

² And they that have believing masters let them not despise them, because they are brethren: but rather do them service, because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit.

IMPROVEMENT.

Ver. 17 THE regards here required to the elders who preside well, and who labour in the word and doctrine, are in themselves so reasonable, that where the other duties of Christianity are attended to, and

¹ Partakers with them of the benefit.] Some would render οἱ τῆς εὐεργεσίας ἀνελαμβάνοντες, &c. because they who partake of the benefit, that is, the benefit of their service, are faithful and beloved. But this seems to take it for granted, that what the apostle exhorted to was already actually done; that is, that such faithful services were rendered. Others, as Mr. Cradock has observed (Apost. Hist. p. 221). would translate it, who will be careful to recompense the well doing of their servants; but I think εὐεργεσία signifies a benefit freely conferred, and therefore is hardly fit to express even the cheerful and exact obedience of slaves. If this clause be referred to the servants, and the whole be rendered, but rather let them who partake of the benefit, that is, who have a share in the same blessed hope with their masters, do service to them, because they are faithful and beloved, the sense will be so far the same, that εὐεργεσία will signify that great and glorious benefit, which, by virtue of our Christian profession, superiors and inferiors equally share; and strongly suggests, what a band of union the participation of it should in all reason prove. But this supposes a transposition which seemed unnecessary; so that this is on the whole one of the many texts, where, having examined a variety of versions, we have been obliged to acquiesce in our own, which is in the main a very good one; and generally gives the true sense, though the elegance and spirit of it may often be improved.

and the inestimable blessings of it duly apprehended and esteemed, there will be no need of insisting largely upon them. To be cautious how we lightly believe any report to the injury of such, is 19 what we owe to ourselves as well as them, since our own improvement, by their ministration, will be greatly obstructed by any prejudices taken against their persons.

SECT.
VIII.

Let the ministers of the gospel remember how much it is their duty to appear strenuously in defence of their master's precepts, and to reprove bold and insolent offenders, in whatsoever rank they 20 may stand. And lest riches, and power, and greatness of station, should obstruct their faithful execution of this office, let them think of the solemn charge they have received before God, and the 21 Lord Jesus Christ and the elect angels, and of the appearance which they and their people must make before the awful tribunal of Christ, when he shall come in his own glory, and that of his Father, and attended by all his holy angels. The frequent consideration of that important day would have an uniform influence on the whole of their conduct; it would particularly make them careful, that they do not contract pollutions, and make themselves par- 22 takers in other men's sins, by laying hands suddenly on any; but use a proper care in examining, that in the great business of ordination they may act on the conviction of their consciences in the sight of God, and maintain an unbiassed regard to the honour of the great Redeemer and the salvation of souls. Yet let them still 23 be severer towards themselves than others, and maintain that strict temperance and self-government in every respect which may become the dignity of their characters, and command the reverence of all about them.

Let us all endeavour to be shining examples of good works, and while so many declare their sins openly, and send them as it were 24 before them to judgment, let us never be ashamed of religion. Yet where a modest reserve may be conveniently maintained, let us study it, and always avoid an unnecessary ostentation, as remembering the time will come, when those good works, which have been 25 most solicitously concealed from the eyes of men, will be publicly honoured and rewarded by God. In expectation of that day, let us all attend to our proper offices, whether in superior or inferior stations of life, studying so to behave, as that the name and doctrine 26 of God may never be blasphemed upon our account, and always feeling the force of that endearing engagement to all social duties, which arises from our sharing with all true Christians in the favour of God, and in the blessings and hopes of his gospel.

Chap.
VI. 1, 2.

SECT. IX.

The Apostle presses Timothy to urge on his hearers, the great things which relate to practical godliness, and what will be attended with the happiest consequences; and cautions against covetousness, as the root of all evil. 1 Tim. VI.—2—12.

I TIMOTHY VI. 2.

T.
IX.
1 Tim.
VI. 2.

THESE things, which I have been mentioning, take care, O Timothy, to teach and exhort thine hearers always to maintain a due regard to them. And if any one teach otherwise, if he attempt to broach principles contrary to these great maxims and attend not^a to such sound and wholesome words, [even] to those of our Lord Jesus Christ^b, as these may with strict propriety be called, and which express the doctrine [that is] agreeable and subservient to the great cause of practical godliness, which it is the declared design of the gospel to promote in the world; Whatever fair shews of simplicity and humility he may affect, he is certainly proud, and, whatever conceit he may have of his superior knowledge, he is one who knows nothing to any good purpose; but, like a man raving and delirious in a fever, he runs on, declaiming on idle questions^c, and useless debates about words; from whence no good can be expected to arise, but, on the contrary, a great variety of mischief, envying of those more regarded than themselves, contention with others who will not submissively yield to what such self-sufficient teachers dictate, abusive language, which their a Attend not.] I think it is with great reason, that the learned Dr. Beniley supposes, that the original reading was not προσεχθαι, which is seldom used in this sense, but προσεχθαι, or rather προσεχθαι, which has been thus used in this epistle. Chap. i. 4. See Phil. Lips. against Coll. p. 72, 73.

b Words of our Lord Jesus Christ.] I neither suppose, with Mr. Pyie, that this refers to Mat. xxi. 27, and the many parallel places, nor with others, to any sayings of our Lord's, which tradition had as yet continued, but which are now lost. It seems much more natural to conclude, it goes on this important principle, that, what the apostle wrote, as by Divine direction, was in effect the words and com-

1 TIM. VI. 2.

THESE things teach and exhort.

3 If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness;

4 He is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strifes of words, where-
of

mandments of Christ. Compare 1 Cor. xiv. 37.

c Raving on questions, &c.] It is so well known that γεσων signifies a person in a distempered state, that it hardly required the pains which Dr. Abraham Taylor has taken to prove it, by a large collection of authorities, Bishop Wilkins would render it, he is sick of questions, or of the wrangling disease, with which, it is much to be lamented that the Christian clergy, as well as laity, have so generally been infected, in almost all ages and nations. Wilk. Serm. p. 73. The word here seems to express the effect of a disease upon the mind, in which view raving appeared a more proper word than doting.

d With

of cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmising,

5 Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such withdraw thyself.

6 But godliness with contentment is great gain.

7 For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out.

8 And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content.

9 But they that will be rich, fall into temptation, and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown their intemperate zeal deals round to all who offend them, and evil suspicious and obnoxious representations of the worthiest and most amiable characters; Angry debates of men whose minds are corrupted and averse from the truth, for which they pretend so eagerly to plead; while they seem to suppose that which promises the largest quantity of gain to be most worthy of their pursuit; and would, if possible, varnish it over with the venerable name of godliness. Turn away therefore from such, and have no intimacy with them. Whereas, on the contrary, if any man will but have the integrity and resolution to follow true religion, wherever it leads him, he will certainly find that godliness, which is so naturally accompanied with inward contentment¹ and peace of mind, in every circumstance of life which providence may appoint, is indeed great gain; and does much more to promote real happiness than any accession of wealth could possibly do. And it is the truest wisdom to ac-

7 custom our minds to such reflections as these; for we brought nothing into the world along with us, but were thrown naked upon the indulgent provision which our gracious Creator has been pleased to make for us; [and it is] evident that, whatever treasures the most insatiable avarice could amass, we cannot carry any thing out of it, but must in a little time return to the dust, stripped of all. Having therefore, while we
8 continue in this transitory and uncertain life, food and raiment, and having the other necessities of it, let us be content with these, and not seek, with restless earnestness and solicitude, the great things of it, which are often of so short a continuance, and of so precarious, as well as so unsatisfying a nature. With these sentiments
9 we may enjoy what happiness is to be expected in a world like this; but they who are determined that at all adventures they will be rich, fall headlong into many a dangerous temptation, and many a fatal snare, and [into] many foolish and mischievous desires; which not only sink men beneath the dignity of their nature, but

d With contentment.] Diodati thinks αλεξάνη here signifies a competency; but it gives a much nobler sense, to suppose the apostle to intimate, that contentment, will attend godliness, as its inseparable companion; and consequently that the godly man will be happy, whatever his circumstances in life may be, and even much more so, than any accumulation of worldly wealth can make him.

e Pierced

SECT.
ix.1 Tim.
VI. 9.

but prove the occasion of much further mischief; insomuch that they frequently plunge men into an irrecoverable abyss of ruin and destruction, in which they lose their worldly possessions, and, what is infinitely more valuable, their souls too.

10 For the excessive love of money is the root of all moral evil. which some having greedily desired, have so debauched their minds with corrupt prejudices, that they have wandered from the faith, so as to abandon the very profession of the gospel; and while they were dreaming only of the pleasurable consequences that would attend their more exalted circumstances in human life, have pierced themselves through with many sorrows, and felt long and incurable pains, by the numerous wounds they have given to their own consciences, as it were on every side.

11 But thou, O man of God, whom he hath honoured as he did the prophets of old, making thee his messenger to thy fellow-creatures, shun these things; these insatiable desires of worldly possessions and enjoyments, which will render thee most unfit for so sacred an office; and pursue, as the richest prize and the noblest gain, the practice of universal righteousness towards men, and piety towards God, fidelity in every branch of trust committed to thee, love to all mankind, patience under every affliction, and meekness

12 under every provocation. Maintain, in the most strenuous manner, and with all the force thy soul can exert, the good, noble, and glorious, combat of faith; lay hold on the prize of eternal life; and let none, how violently soever they may assault thee, wrest it out of thine hands:

even

drown men in destruction and perdition.

10 For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.

11 But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness.

12 Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called,

e Pierced themselves through.] I have endeavoured in the paraphrase (though I could not do it in the version) to give something of the emphasis which Leigh and other critics have observed in the word περιεπηρασαν; which, we are told, properly signifies, they have stabbed themselves, as it were, from head to feet, so as to be all covered with wounds. And this indeed happily expresses the innumerable outrages done to conscience by those madmen who have taken up this fatal resolution, that they will at all adventures be rich.

f Maintain the good combat, &c.] These and the following words are plainly agonistical, and refer to the eagerness with which they who contended in the Grecian names struggled for, and laid hold upon, the crown; and the degree to which the presence of many spectators, or (as the apostle elsewhere speaks) the cloud of witnesses, animated them in their contests for it. It might perhaps more literally be rendered, Exercise the good exercise; but that is a Grecism, which the English language will not conveniently allow; nor does the word exercise by any means express the force of αγωνα, which always supposes an opponent to be resisted, as combat also does. The learned Dr. Lardner very justly observes, we are often liable to be diverted from the right meaning by a translation, which yet is not the fault of it, but owing to some defect in modern languages, which want words exactly correspondent to the ancient original. Lardn. Sermon. p. 270.

ed, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses.

even that life, to the hope of which thou hast been solemnly called, and in pursuance of it hast confessed a good, fair, and worthy confession before many witnesses, who were present on that solemn day when thou wert given up to the full exercise of the ministry.

SECT.
IX.
1 Tim.
VI. 12.

IMPROVEMENT.

IF we do indeed believe the love of money to be the root of all evil, let us set ourselves seriously to extirpate it out of our bosoms, and to imbibe this true philosophy of the apostle, to seek our gain in that godliness on which contentment waits, and which makes its disciples happy on the easiest terms, by moderating their desires. Food and raiment of one kind or another few want. But where there is real necessity, and has been a care to behave well, if a man's own stock be deficient, he is generally supplied from the charity of others; and true piety and greatness of mind can enjoy the gift of providence on these terms without repining, being truly sensible, how little, even the best, amidst so many imperfections and miscarriages, can deserve to receive any thing from God by the instrumentality of any creature.

To this day do we see such facts as taught the apostle these useful remarks, independent on those miraculous influences by which he was guided, in things spiritual and evangelical. As we see the new-born race of human creatures rising naked into life, we see death stripping the rich, the noble, and the powerful, and returning them naked to the dust. In the mean time, while we may observe many in lower circumstances, cheerful and thankful, we see those who are determined on being rich, falling into temptations and snares. We see them piercing themselves through with many sorrows, and plunging themselves into irrecoverable ruin and destruction, while they pursue, to the utmost verge of the fatal precipice, those shadowy phantoms, which owe all their semblance of reality to the magic of those passions which riches or the desire of them have excited.

Happy would it be for the church of Christ, if these important doctrines of practical religion were more inculcated, and less of the zeal of its teachers spent in discussing vain questions and intricate strifes about words which have been productive of so much envy and contention, obloquy and suspicion. Let the men of God, therefore, inculcate righteousness and faith, piety and charity, patience and meekness, and let them endeavour to render their lessons successful, by a care themselves to pursue these graces; to exercise

themselves

SECT. IX. themselves more strenuously in that noble and generous conflict to which they are called, so as to lay hold on the crown of eternal life, Ver. and to retain it against the most powerful antagonist. These are 12 the wholesome words of our Lord Jesus Christ, even these doctrines ³ according to godliness; and the minister, who will be wise enough to preach and act upon these principles, will raise the most lasting character, and secure the most valuable reward.

SECT. X.

The Apostle concludes with a solemn charge to fidelity in the ministry, and particularly urges Timothy to inculcate on those that were rich, such exhortations and cautions as their peculiar circumstances required. 1 Tim. VI. 13, to the end.

I TIMOTHY VI. 13.

SECT. X.
1 Tim. VI. 13.

AND now to conclude, I solemnly charge thee, as in the presence of God, who, by his continual energy, animates and quickens all things^a, in the whole compass of the creation, and at his sovereign pleasure revives the dead; and in the presence of Christ Jesus, who, when he was examined before Pontius Pilate, witnessed, at the apparent hazard of his life, a good confession^b, in declaring himself to be indeed a king, though he knew how liable that declaration was to a most unjust and pernicious interpretation; In this august presence do I charge 14 thee, O Timothy, to keep [this] commandment, which I have now given thee in all its branches, and to deliver it down to those who may succeed thee, unspotted and blameless, that it may shine with uncorrupted lustre through all future ages, even till the appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ, 15 Which in his own appointed times, he shall manifest, in the most awful and conspicuous manner,

I TIM. VI. 13.

I GIVE thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession;

14 That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ;

15 Which in his times

a Quickens all things.] This seems a very suitable, though oblique intimation, that, should Timothy, after the example of his great Lord, sacrifice his life to the honour of his profession, God, who raised up Christ from the dead, was equally able to raise him. And this is most fully expressed and urged, 2 Tim. ii. 8, 10, 11.

b Witnessed a good confession.] This refers to John xviii. 37. Christ's confession before the Jewish high priest, when interrogated upon oath (Mat. xxvi. 63, 64;

Mark xiv. 61, 62), was rather more express, but this before Pilate was more dangerous; as his owning himself a king, was the only pretention that was likely to expose him to the resentment of the Roman governor, who had the supreme power of life and death. John xix. 10. It is perhaps called a good confession, not only as in itself noble and generous, but as all our hopes of salvation and happiness are built upon the truth of it.

times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords;

no [who is] the blessed and indeed the only potentate, before whom no other name or power is worthy of being mentioned. He may with the strictest propriety be spoken of by that title, by which other princes have vainly and blasphemously affected to be called, the King of kings and Lord of lords, who hath the fates and lives of all the monarchs on earth entirely in his hands and can dispose of them all according to his sovereign pleasure: Even he, who alone hath 16 immortality in himself; so that all kinds and degrees of life in others are derived from him, and continually dependent upon him, according to the orders issued from that throne on which he sits supreme, inhabiting inaccessible light, whom no man hath ever seen in the full display of his glory, nor indeed can see, without being immediately overwhelmed with the first glance of it; to whom [be] honour and everlasting dominion ascribed by us, and by all his creatures through eternal ages. Amen.

HECT.
X.
1 Tim.
VI. 16.

16 Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen, nor can see; to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen.

17 Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in

One farther instruction I have to give thee, 17 which I shall here add by way of postscript. There are indeed few of those who are rich in this present world^c, that embrace the gospel, or will have any regard for the instructions of its ministers. But as it is probable that some such may be found, in so opulent a city as that of Ephesus, in which thou now residest, and as my own labours there have succeeded with some few in this rank of men, remember that their character and behaviour is of peculiar moment. Do not therefore flatter them, but faithfully charge them, to behave in a manner suitable to their distinguished station, and to guard against the snares to which it exposes them; particularly urge it upon them, that they be not high-minded, so as to despise their inferiors, who often are in the sight of God much wiser and better than themselves; and, that they do not trust in uncertain riches, of which a thousand accidents may immediately deprive them, but in the living God, whose favour will be a sure and eternal portion to all that are possessed of it; even in

^c Rich in this world.] This clause seems to be added to extenuate the value of riches, which extends only to this transitory and precarious world, and can neither attend us into the other, nor at all influence our happiness there.

d Rich

SECT.
X.
1 Tim.
VI. 18.

in that gracious Being, who imparts to us all things richly for our enjoyment, and who has so liberally distinguished them by the communications of his bounty. Charge it upon them, that, in proportion to the abundance God has given them, they do good, that they be rich in good works, that they be ready to distribute what Providence hath lodged in their hands. And willing to communicate^d, what they have so freely received; thereby treasuring up to themselves a good foundation against the future: that they may, through the riches of Divine grace, lay hold on eternal life, when they relinquish all their possessions here, and find every temporal enjoyment deserting them for ever.

20 To conclude all, O my beloved Timothy, as thou valuest thine own soul, and desirest to give up thine account with joy, keep that gospel which is lodged with thee, as a sacred trust, and never suffer it to be wrested out of thy hands. Let thy very soul dwell upon it, avoiding profane [and] empty babblings, and the opposition of that which is falsely called knowledge^e, but is indeed ignorance, pride, and folly: Which some having professed to pursue, have fatally wandered from the Christian faith, some entirely forsaking it, and others corrupting it with such adulterations, that it is hardly to be known for that religion which came immediately out of the hands of the Lord Jesus Christ. And that thou mayest ever oppose such false teachers with integrity, courage, and success, may the grace of Christ [be] ever with thee in all things, to guide thy judgment and thy conduct. Amen.

in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy;

18 That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate:

19 Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.

20 O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called.

21 Which some professing, have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

IMPROVE-

^d Rich in good works, ready to distribute willing to communicate.] If these phrases have any thing of a different signification, perhaps it may be, as Archbishop Sharpe explains it: Let them endeavour in the general to do good, not only now and then, in some scanty proportion, but frequently, constantly, and abundantly, not only with their time, labour, and interest, but by distributing of their substance too; and this as freely, as if it were a common stock to which all had a right. Archbishop Sharpe's Ser. Vol. I. p. 156. Yet these expressions clearly shew, that there was not a community of goods among Christians in general for in that case there could have been no room for the exhortation and the distinction on which it is founded.

^e Falsely called knowledge.] Though it is not certain that the name of gnostics, or the knowing men, was so early used to denominate a distinct sect, yet it is highly probable that they who opposed the apostle made extraordinary pretences to knowledge and this text seems sufficient to prove it.

IMPROVEMENT.

O THAT we might often be setting ourselves as in the presence ^{SECT.} of God, the great and blessed God, whose almighty power quick-^{x.} eneth all things, and is the life of universal nature, and of the ^{Ver.—} Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the living and the dead! Let 13 the thoughts of so august a presence awaken our souls to diligence in the discharge of our duty, and let it animate us with courage to witness a good confession, to whatever inconvenience and danger it may expose us. Never let us forget that appearance which he shall manifest, to whom all these sublime titles belong, 15 even that blessed and only Potentate, before whom all the lustre of all the princes upon earth vanishes in a moment, like that of the smallest stars before the rising sun: the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who alone hath immortality, and dwelleth in unapproachable light. How astonishing his goodness in veiling his glory, so that 16 we may approach him, in bowing down his ear to receive our requests, yea in coming to dwell with that man who is humble and of a contrite spirit, and who trembleth at his word! (Isa. lxvi. 2.) To him be honour and power everlasting. And let his infinite majesty be deeply and affectionately remembered, amidst all the condescensions of his love.

Let the rich in this world, since the riches which here distinguish them cannot attend them into another, be engaged to receive with all reverence the charge of our holy apostle. Too many of them walk in pride; but they see, by the sepulchres of many, once as opulent and as haughty as themselves, and by a thousand other marks of the Divine power and human weakness, how soon God is able to abase them (Dan. iv. 37.) Forsaking, therefore, what they think their strong tower, and the high wall, which, instead of sheltering, may soon crush them into ruins, let them transfer their confidence to the living God. Alarmed in a state which renders their salvation almost difficult as it is for a camel to go through a needle's eye, let them learn from hence how to improve what is another's, in such a manner, that they may in due time receive what shall be for ever their own; (Luke xvi. 12.) Let them learn to be rich in good works, and by a readiness to distribute and communicate, let them lay up a celestial treasure; and drop with joy every gilded trifle which would hinder their laying hold on eternal life. Let the ministers of that great Lord, who is so much higher than all the kings of the earth, at least shew their fidelity to him, in giving such plain and faithful charges, even to those, who, by their outward circumstances, are placed in the highest ranks of life ; being infinitely more solicitous about securing their Master's approbation than gaining the favour of mortal worms, who lift up their heads on high because they have a few grains of shining dust at their disposal, 20, 21 And may the men of God manifest the like wise and pious magnanimity, in avoiding a vain glitter of a falsely pretended science : when it would either lead them to err from the faith, or to neglect those important articles of it, which lie most plain and obvious in the word of God : and for that very reason are too often disregarded by those, whom an empty ostentation of subtilty and learning has taught, to treat the Divine wisdom of God as foolishness.

SECT.
X.

THE END OF THE FAMILY EXPOSITOR ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

END OF THE FOURTH VOLUME.

